THE PARIS "FIGARO" of APRIL 3, 1874, says the reason why the English ladies so far surpass their French rivals in the beauty of their hair is because they are not constantly changing their treatment of it, but keep to the use of its best and truest friend—viz., ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL—which for eighty years has been considered the best and safest preparation for the Hair ever used. EPPS'S NEW MILLS.
"Building News" says:—"These extensive premises have a total frontage to Holland-street, Blackfriars, of about 320 ft. The heights from the semi-basement floor to the parapets vary from 60 ft. to 73 ft., while the clock-tower stands about 110 ft. above road level, the whole forming an imposing building, whether viewed from the River Thames or the bustling thoroughfare. The total area of the various floors, &c., amounts to nearly two acres, while the area of glass in the windows is about 11,000 ft.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Civil Service Gazette" says:—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly-nourished frame."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"All the Year Round" says:—"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to Holland-street, Blackfriars, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Land and Water" says:—"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use; and being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during my visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage might be of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Court Journal" says:—"In a climate so varying and trying as our own to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost amongst these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a soluble and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over five millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Cassell's Household Guide" says:—"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in Holland-street, Blackfriars, London."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"John Bull" says:—"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over five millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Christian World" says:—"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in Holland-street, Blackfriars.'"

TRANSVAAL.
The following interesting letter, addressed to the firm of JAMES EPPS and CO., has just come to hand:—
"Gentlemen,—Five years and a half ago I bought in Cape Town a case of your Cocoa, and started with my family for this country. During five months' travelling we experienced scorching heat, biting cold, floods of rain, and frightful droughts; in fact, we passed through all possible atmospheric changes. Almost daily we used for breakfast your Cocoa, and since our settlement here we did the same from time to time, until a few days ago we finished the last of the 420 packets contained in the case. I have now much pleasure in stating to your satisfaction that we have not only found your Cocoa most grateful and comforting for old and young, but also that the last packet was just as good and sound as the first, after so many years' keeping, whilst the products of other makers showed extreme decay after a few months only. In making this statement I solely have in view to render full justice to those who deserve it, now that so many adulterations of food are sent out to the colonies by unprincipled firms. You are at full liberty to make use of the above statement, requesting only not to publish my name.—Estate Roschda near Rustenburg, Transvaal."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1879.

On Thursday the 25th ult. a commemoration, quite unique in its character, took place at Pompeii. It was the eighteen hundredth anniversary of the destruction of that City by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. From eight to twelve thousand people, from Naples, assembled in its silent streets to "assist," as our French neighbours phrase it, on the interesting occasion. There were present representatives of the Italian Government, of the Municipalities, of the Army and Navy, of the Liberal Professions, and of many of the first Literary and Artistic Institutes in Europe and America. An inaugural address, by Chevalier Ruggiero; the recital of two Latin odes, by Monsignor Mirabelli and by Count Guanciali, descriptive of the destruction of the City, and of the new life and functions which have descended upon it as an interpreter of the old world; a visit to the monuments; an ocular demonstration of the mode in which excavations are now being systematically made under professional guidance, and at the public expense; and the issue of a volume containing contributions from eminent archæologists and professors of science written for the occasion—constituted a sober and, at the same time, let us add, an ample programme of the proceedings adopted at the Commemoration. The Festival, if so it may be appropriately designated, is said to have been highly successful, and the crowd went back to Naples, profoundly impressed, as well as greatly pleased, with what they had been permitted to witness.

It is easy enough to discover grounds for turning this solemnity into ridicule. There are few commemorative ceremonies which might not be thus treated—few which do not present a humorous side, when looked at from certain points of view and regarded in certain lights. No one, however, can deny that the event upon which attention was principally concentrated at Pompeii was one which might well fascinate the imagination and stir the emotions of such as were present, and, through them, of civilised mankind. In A.D. 79 the curtain of destiny suddenly fell upon the devoted City of Pompeii: upon its Temples and its Tombs, upon its Amphitheatre and its private houses, upon such of its population as had not previously taken flight beyond its walls, and upon all that, at that time of day, entered into, engaged, and illustrated the life, individual and social, intellectual and moral, of the doomed inhabitants. A few hours sufficed to bury Pompeii beneath the cataract of volcanic ashes which overwhelmed it; and there it lay for ages just as it had been when overtaken by the destructive downfall. Attempts have been made, once and again, to lift the curtain, and a sufficient number of objects have, within the last fifty years, been recovered from the ruin to fill a large museum at Naples. A systematic excavation such as that which is now being made by the Italian Government, under the direction of Commendatore Fiorelli, whereby much of the city has been laid bare and many of its streets and edifices given back again to the light of day, brings us into palpable contact with social life as it existed 1800 years ago. An epitome of it, not in books of history, but in actual relics, is submitted to our contemplation and study. The ornaments, the implements, the very occupations of Pompeian life; the temples where they worshipped, the streets which they trod, the tombs to which they consigned the ashes of their dead; aye, and the bodies of those who periahed;—all, all are open to the inspection of modern visitors to the buried city. What contrasts, between life as it then was, and as it is now! What resemblances, also! How different, in many respects, from much that we are familiar with! Yet, in others, how like! The yesterday of 79 might almost be taken as the immediate predecessor of the to-day of 1879. Nevertheless, the changes which have occurred during the long night which separates the last from the first has resulted in many changes conspicuous enough. Some of them we may regret, many of them are matters for congratulation. Morally, in appearance at least, the world has advanced. It does not now shamelessly parade its vices as it once did. It knows, even if it do not sincerely observe, a higher scale of living, so far as morality is concerned, than that which prevailed at Pompeii in the palmy days of its existence. In Art, in recognition of and interest in the beautiful, in most things that adorn this earthly being, it vastly excelled us. In utility, in what gives character to men, in the accepted standard of right and wrong, in the decorous and the disgraceful, the moderns are far ahead of the ancients. We have learnt much, but we have still much more to learn, from truths and influences of which they were destitute. But they have taught us much, and they have still much more to teach us, of things which brighten and refine the manners and customs of the day.

No important intellectual discovery has yet been made in the ruined City. Stray fragments of MSS. have been found, but they add scarcely anything appreciable to the sum of literature which has been handed down to us. Nor do we think that any notable treasure of this kind is likely to be rescued from Pompeian ashes. It is just possible, indeed, that some Library, public or private, may be exhumed containing books that have not survived the neglect of Mediæval stolidity, and which the more active intelligence of our age would rejoice to see. But it is a bare possibility. Pompeii was but a fifth-rate town, and its literary possessions would necessarily be meagre compared with those of the Capital and its neighbourhood. What the latter has hitherto failed to bring to light it would surprise us if the former succeeded in revealing. All rational hope in that direction must be abandoned. The excavations now being carried on will not, we fear, greatly enrich the existing volume of Classic literature.

Nor, indeed, although books would be welcome, are books precisely the things that we want. We know the intellectual life of those who left their impressions of it before the period of the Pompeian catastrophe. We have the works of contemporaries and of many that preceded them, which may be characterised as the choicest fruits of genius in that age. What we want to know and what we are now learning is the average life and experience of human kind about the beginning of the Christian era. What Paganism did to elevate it; what it failed to do, what were its instruments, what its methods and forces of action. These are inferences which may be gathered from the lost City. Up to the present time, perhaps, little way has been made towards such results as we have named. But enough has been dene to show us that such results may be anticipated, and we do not doubt that the Commemoration Festival held last week at Pompeii will give an impulse to thought and investigation leading to that end.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, continues at Balmoral Castle, where various members of the Royal family are visiting. The Grand Duke of Hesse, accompanied by his son, the Hereditary Grand Duke, arrived at Balmoral on Thursday week from Germany. Their Royal Highnesses were met at the railway station, Ballater, by the Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold, and her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and the Duchess of Connaught, drove out and met the Princes on their route, and returned with them to the castle. The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and the Duchess of Connaught, drove to Loch Callater the next day. The Duke of Connaught went to a deer-drive in Birkhall Woods, accompanied by Viscount Cranbrook. The Grand Duke of Hesse went deerstalking, and Prince Leopold drove to the Linn of Quoich. Her Majesty, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and the Grand Duke of Hesse, attended Divine service on Sunday at Crathie church. The Rev. A. Campbell, of Crathie, officiated. On Monday the Duke of Connaught and the Grand Duke of Hesse went out deerstalking, and in the afternoon the Queen drove round by Gairn Ride with Princess Beatrice, the Duchess of Connaught, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Hesse. Viscount Cranbrook and Lieutenant Bartle Frere dined with the Queen in the evening. On Tuesday the Queen drove to Braemar in a carriage drawn by four horses with mounted postilions. Along with her Majesty were the Duchess of Connaught, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt, the latter wearing the Highland costume. Horses were changed at the Fife Arms Hotel, and the journey was continued by Mar Lodge to Glen Derry. The Royal travellers had tea in the open air on the banks of the Lin, and afterwards enjoyed a ramble in the glen. Braemar was reached at half-past five o'clock, and, after another change of horses the journey to Balmoral was resumed. The weather was bright and clear, but very cold. Viscount Cranbrook dines generally with her Majesty.

The Queen presented Miss Eleanor Van de Weyer, upon her marriage to Mr. Reginald Balliol Brett, with an Indian shawl. Princess Beatrice gave the bride an amethyst pendant set in diamonds, and the Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold a pendant in lapis lazuli, pearls, and diamonds.

Messrs. Hugh Patton and Sons have exhibited Sir Noel Paton's picture "The Man of Sorrows" to her Majesty.

The Hon. Harriet Phipps has left and the Hon. Amy Lambart has arrived as Maid of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, with Princesses Victoria, Ella, Irene, and Alix of Hesse, visited the exhibition of industrial products belonging to the Grand Duchy of Hesse at Offenbach on Wednesday week. The Prince arrived at Kiel from Frankfort-on-Main yesterday week and proceeded on board her Majesty's yacht Osborne, where he received Vice-Admiral Kinderling; and in the afternoon, accompanied by Vice-Admiral Kinderling, Captain von der Goltz (the superintendent of the dockyard), and Captain Count Monts, visited the dockyard, the naval barracks, and the Sleswig-Holstein Museum. His Royal Highness arrived at Copenhagen at half-past eleven on Saturday morning last, and was received by the Princess of Wales and their three daughters, by the King and Queen of Denmark, the Crown Prince and Princess, the Czarewitch and Czarevna, Prince William, Prince Hans, Prince Julius, and the staff of the British Embassy. The Prince will visit Sir R. Wallace, M.P., at Sudbourne Hall, Suffolk, in the third week in November.

Princes Albert Victor and George, on board the Bacchante, left Portland on Thursday week under sail for Port Mahon, Island of Majorca, and Madeira for the West Indies.

Prince Leopold, in a letter to Mr. Mark Firth, fixes the date of his visit to Sheffield. He will arrive from Balmoral on Saturday, Oct. 18, and remain till Wednesday, the 22nd. He expresses a wish to visit the museum established by Mr. Ruskin at Walkley, a suburb of Sheffield, for the purposes of art-education. Firth College will be opened on the 20th.

The Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden has left St. James's Hotel, Piccadilly, for Baden-Baden.

His Excellency the Netherlands Minister and the Countess de Bylandt have left town on a visit to Lady Molesworth at Pencarrow, Cornwall. The Duke of Abercorn and Lady Georgiana Hamilton left town on Friday week for Barron's Court, Ireland. The Duke of Manchester has returned to Kimbolton Castle. Earl and Countess Cowley have arrived on a visit to Earl and Countess Sydney at Frognal, Kent, on their return from the Continent.

The Duke of Roxburghe met with a serious accident on Monday while being driven from Floors Castle to Kelso station in a dog-cart. When crossing Kelso-square the horse stumbled, and the Duke and the driver were thrown to the ground. One of his Grace's knees was badly injured, and he was bruised about the face and head.

The services at the Temple church will be resumed on Sunday, Oct. 5.

The Church of St. Patrick, South Kensington, was burned down yesterday week.

Solihull parish church, which has been closed for restoration, was reopened on Tuesday. The Bishop of Worcester preached the sermon.

Sir Massey Lopes has built a magnificent church adjoining his mansion at Maristow, in Devon, in memory of his late wife. The church was opened on Sunday, and the First Lord and all the other colleagues of Sir Massey at the Admiralty, being now his guests, attended the service. Sir Massey read the Lessons.

Sir Lawrence Palk, M.P., assisted, on the 25th ult., at the reopening of the church of Doddescomeleigh, and spoke on the position of the Church of England, which, if ever disestablished and robbed of her endowments, would still, he believed, be the Church of the people, and remain firmly rooted in the hearts and affections of the great body of Englishmen.

The memorial-stone of the enlargement now being carried on at Aston parish church, near Birmingham, was laid on Wednesday by Lord Leigh. The enlargement will involve an expenditure of between £8000 and £10,000. The first section will cost about £4000, and of this sum upwards of £3000 has been subscribed.

Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, preached at the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage on Sunday, and the collections made after the sermon amounted to nearly £80. He stated in the course of his sermon that indiscriminate charity and almsgiving caused as much pauperism as the intemperate and reckless habits of life of people of this country.

Lord Selborne on Monday laid the foundation-stone of All Hallows Church, Bromley. He attended as the official head of the governing body of Winchester College, the masters and boys of which had liberally contributed towards the wants of the district. The new East London church takes its title from the old one of the same name in Bread-street, City.

A handsome window by Messrs. Brown and Boreham, of Hunter-street, has been placed in the west window of the south aisle of the parish church of Chipping Norton, Oxon, by Mr. Thomas Keck, the Mayor of that town, in memory of an only child, Thomas Harbert Keck, who died Nov. 24, 1858. In aid of the fund for restoring this fine old church a bazaar has been held during the past few days, the receipts from which will realise upwards of £250. A large sum has already been expended in the work of restoration, but a still larger sum is needed.

The parish church of West Hackney, one of the largest in the northern suburbs of London, was reopened last Saturday evening, after having undergone a thorough renovation, under the superintendence of Mr. G. F. Bodley, architect. It has been coloured throughout in two shades of green—the decoration (which is wholly in gold) being almost entirely confined to the east end, where is a sculptured reredos by Mr. Earp. The church was built in 1824 by Sir Robert Smirke, and its ponderous Doric portico is rather a striking object on the road from Shoreditch to Tottenham.

On Monday the new Church of St. Mildred, Burnt Ash-hill, Lee, was consecrated by the Bishop of Rochester. For more than five years services have been held in a temporary iron church. The Earl of Northbrook, the lord of the manor, presented the site, together with a donation of £2500, and the cost of erection, estimated at £6000, has almost entirely been raised. The Daily Chronicle states that the architecture is of the Early Geometric style of the period of Edward II., and consists of a nave, with north and south aisles, transepts and chancel, with apsidal end, and a porch or narthex at the western extremity. It is faced with Kentish rag, lined with gault bricks, and the interior of the walls is formed of cement concrete. The interior is very light and elegant, and the chancel windows are filled with magnificent subjects in stained glass. The architect is Mr. Henry Elliott, of London.

The Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Bristol, having been enlarged, was re-consecrated on Monday by Bishop Elliott, who, in his sermon, dwelt upon the restlessness in the Church of England, and expressed a hope that they were not going to have the old Prayer-book pulled about, or the rites and ceremonies of the Church altered. There might be a few obsolete matters, but the common sense of the country had hitherto very successfully explained them, and he hoped, for one, that though here and there some slight alterations might be made that would bring matters a little more closely into our nineteenth-century usages, yet what were they compared to the tremendous risk of offering that venerated book to the caprices and changefulness, perhaps, of those who might have for the time being the responsibility of touching it up? Let them resolve one thing, that it should not be meddled with. While they had it intact they might look hopefully forward.

The new parish church of St. Margaret's, Hollingwood, Manchester, erected at a cost of £8500, was consecrated by the Bishop of Manchester on Monday morning. The building is in the Gothic style.

The parish church of All Saints', Sudbourn, Suffolk, was reopened on the 25th ult., after undergoing an extensive restoration. The church is in the Early English style, with some beautiful remnants of Norman, notably the doorway on the south side. The restoration was effected through the liberality of Sir Richard Wallace, Bart., M.P., K.C.B., the chief resident in the village, and lord of the manor. It consists of the complete restoration of the massive tower, which is now heightened by the addition of an apex, the rebuilding of the walls, re-flooring, and re-glazing; the aisles have been fitted with open seats, and the chancel has been re-floored and re-tiled, and a new altar, with costly altar-cloth and furniture, have been given by Lady Wallace. An organ-chamber, built into the north side of the chancel, has been furnished with an organ by Gray and Davidson, at which Dr. Nunn, of Ipswich, presided. Luncheon was provided by Sir Richard and Lady Wallace at the hall; and later in the day the cottagers and their wives likewise shared in the same hospitality.

On Tuesday afternoon the foundation-stone of the new Church of St. Matthew, Panmure-road, Sydenham, was laid by the Earl of Dartmouth. Mr. J. Cutts, of London, is the architect. The estimated cost of the building is to be £5500, and accommodation will be provided for 600 persons. At luncheon at the Lecture Hall, Sydenham, the Earl of Dartmouth, who presided, said in these days all who wished well to the Church of England must feel that the duties which devolved upon the Bishops and clergy were by no means light. There was no duty a man could undertake which deserved the gratitude of his fellow-Churchmen more than that of being a Bishop. In former days it was supposed that when a clergyman became a Bishop his troubles, his work, and his anxities were at an end for life — that he had nothing to do but roll about in his carriage, spend an hour or two, more or less, in the House of Lords, enjoy the pleasures of society, and retire from all the hard work of the world. He would ask them if this was the true state of the case in the present day? He would sooner be a pointsman at Clapham Junction than be a Bishop of the Church of England. He was connected with more than one populous estate, and knew the way in which sometimes the clergy were misunderstood; but he believed, as a rule, they were anxious to do their Master's work conscientiously and in a straightforward manner. He might be considered guilty of the most flagrant nepotism in presenting his brother (the Hon. and Rev. A. Legge) to the important vicarage of Lewisham, and his brother-in-law to a nearly equally important post in Sydenham. He did not care what those who did not know all about those clergymen might say, for his shoulders had been broadened and his skin had been toughened by a series of misrepresentations and by severe judgments, which he hoped had not indicated a malignant spirit on the part of those who made them. Patronage was a duty for the due exercise of which man was responsible, not to the opinion of the parishioners—though they ought to be thoroughly considered—but to a higher tribunal, and he hoped in the exercise of that privilege, whenever it fell to his lot, he did that which was just and right.

THE UNIVERSITIES.

Mr. James Saumarez Mann, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford, was on Monday elected to the vacant fellowship at Trinity College. There were about twenty candidates. Mr. Mann gained a second class in classical moderations, Trinity Term, 1872, and a final class in the final classical school, Michaelmas Term, 1874.

At a Congregation held at Cambridge on the first day of Term the Rev. G. F. Browne, M.A., St. Catherine's College, and the Rev. J. P. Taylor, M.A., Clare College, were elected Proctors for the year ensuing.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

The Congress of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science was opened in Manchester on Wednesday. The weather was most unfavourable. It rained without intermission throughout the morning. This is the second occasion on which the Association has visited Manchester, the first having been in 1866. Last year the Congress assembled in Cheltenham. A special service was held in the cathedral on Wednesday morning, when a sermon was preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of Manchester.

The business of the Association (with the exception of the sectional addresses) has been conducted in the new Townhall, which has been placed at the disposal of the Congress by the Mayor and Corporation. The sectional addresses have been delivered in the Gentlemen's Concert-hall. The proceedings of the Congress are being conducted in five departments—viz., Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Law, president, Sir Travers Twiss; Education, president, the Hon. Lyulph Stanley; Health, president, Mr. F. S. Powell; Economy and Trade, president, Lord Reay; and Art, president, Sir Coutts Lindsay. The Department of Jurisprudence is divided into two sections—International and Municipal Law, and the Repression of Crime, in the latter of which Mr. G. W. Hastings, the president of the council, presides.

The Bishop of Manchester delivered the inaugural address on Wednesday night. He dealt principally with the subjects of education and health, both of which, he said, were being treated with a great amount of practical wisdom in Manchester. The school-board system, he argued, had not failed in its immediate object of getting a larger number of children to attend efficient schools, and the next step onwards would be the gradation of those institutions. He had no doubt the cost was a serious trouble to ratepayers, but probably within a quarter of a century the boards would be masters of the situation. He spoke at length on questions of sanitation, water supply, and drainage. The burial of the dead was, he thought, a problem which would have to be faced more practically and seriously than hitherto, and the Bishop expressed his opinion that the earth was made for the living and not for the dead. Cemeteries, he added, were becoming not only a difficulty, but actually a danger. He added some observations on the encouragement of thrift and providence.

Among the special questions are these:—"Is it a legal or a moral duty for a civilised nation to observe towards an uncivilised race laws or principles which that race either ignore or persistently neglect?" "What are the practical results and effect of the Prisons Act of 1877?" "What subjects ought to be taught in elementary schools, and in what way can the present system of inspection of these schools be advantageously altered?" "What are the best means of improving the sanitary condition of existing houses of the middle classes, and the best mode of building so as to combine sanitary and commercial value?" "What alteration in the land laws will be to the economic advantages of the country?" and "Is State aid beneficial to art?" On Friday evening the Mayor and Corporation were to entertain the Association at a conversazione at the Town Hall. The greater part of Saturday will be devoted to excursions; and on Monday there is to be a working-men's meeting in the Free Trade Hall.

The concluding meeting of the council will be held on Wednesday next. Excursions are being arranged for that and the following day. Another conversazione is announced for the Monday, and a third for the Tuesday during the Congress. The Secretary of the local committee is Mr. John Duffield, who held the same office when the Congress met in Manchester thirteen years ago.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The relief of Lucknow by General Havelock and General Outram was celebrated on Thursday week by a dinner at the Albion Tavern of the surviving officers who were present on that memorable occasion.

There has been opened at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, a "National Exhibition and Market" of machinery, appliances, manufactures, and produce, more especially such as belong to the brewing and licensed victuallers' trades.

The Parkes Museum of Hygiene was reopened last Wednesday, on the occasion of the inaugural conversazione of the medical school at University College. A new and enlarged edition of the descriptive catalogue of the museum has been prepared.

Early on Wednesday morning the new market which had been constructed close to the Stratford-bridge station of the Great Eastern Railway Company by the company, for the sale of potatoes, roots, vegetables, hay, straw, coals, and other articles, was opened for public use.

Canon Farrar on Wednesday evening gave an address preliminary to the opening the thirty-seventh session of the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institute. In drawing attention to its advantages he expressed his surprise that a society which had rendered long and good services like those of the Birkbeck should possess such very inadequate accommodation.

The Lord Mayor gave a ball on Thursday week at the Mansion House to a large number of Mayors, Aldermen, members of common councils, town clerks, and other officers of Corporations in the United Kingdom.—Alderman Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott has been unanimously elected Lord Mayor of London for the ensuing year; and the new Sheriffs are Mr. C. Wooloton and Mr. E. K. Bayley.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers in the third week of September was 79,669, of whom 42,689 were in workhouses and 36,980 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 3374, 3116, and 2059 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 774, of whom 570 were men, 177 women, and 27 children.

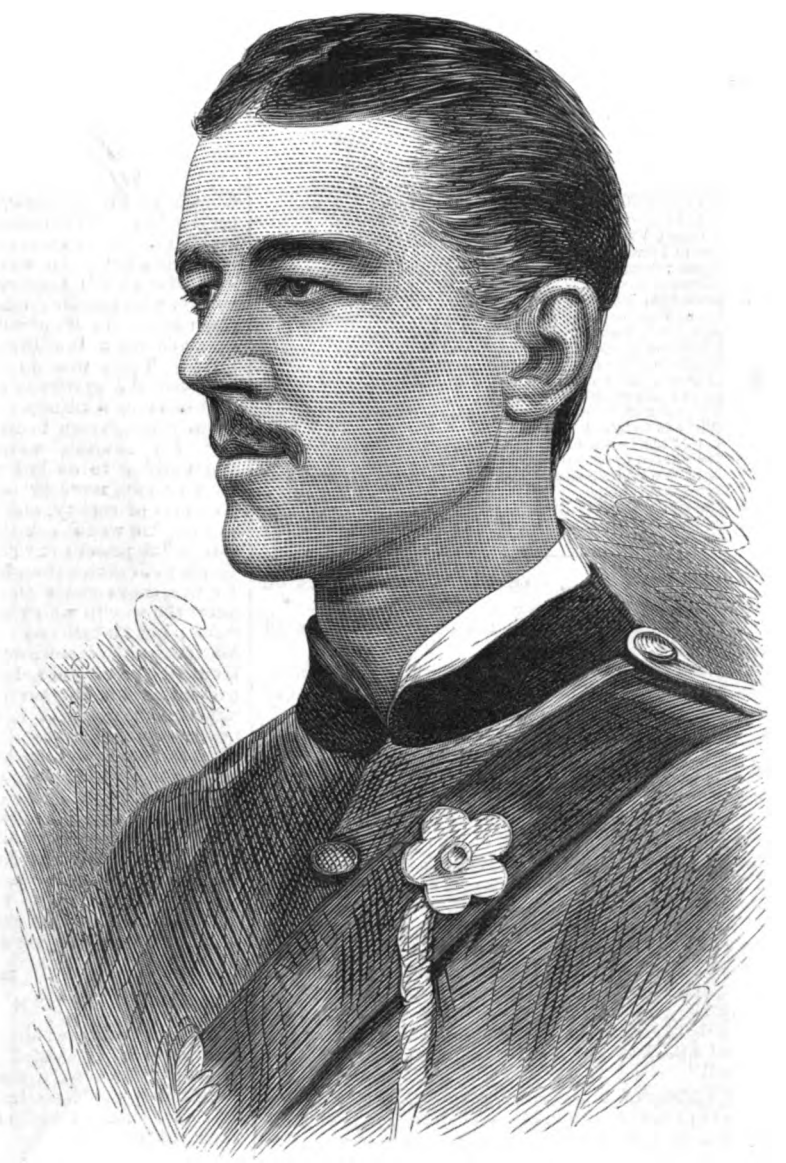
The Working Men's College, Great Ormond-street, which has just completed the twenty-fifth year of its existence—having been founded by the late F. D. Maurice in 1854—recommenced its work for the winter on Thursday with a public meeting, when Sir Charles Bowen gave the opening address. The classes reopen next Monday. The fees have been considerably reduced, and courses of lectures are now offered to the students at rates ranging from one shilling a term. The general lectures (entirely free), which were inaugurated with so much success last winter will recommence on Saturday, Oct. 11, with one on "The utility of scientific knowledge," by Mr. Thomas Dunman.

The autumn term of the Quebec Institute, in connection with the Science and Art Department, and the Society of Arts will begin at 28, Baker-street, Portman-square, on Monday next, Oct. 6. The curriculum has been considerably augmented, and now embraces more than forty classes in ancient and modern languages, science and art, and general subjects. The London Society for the extension of University teaching have arranged for the delivery of courses of lectures at the institute during the session. Professor Plumptre, of King's College, will give a course of lectures on elocution on Thursday evenings; and a special matriculation class for the January examination, University of London, will be held on Tuesdays and Fridays.

There were 2478 births and 1193 deaths registered in London last week. The births were 96 above, and the deaths 188 below, the average. There were 2 deaths from smallpox, 26 from measles, 60 from scarlet fever, 11 from diphtheria, 29 from whooping-cough, 36 from different forms of fever, and 72 from diarrhœa. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 143, 163, and 177 in the three preceding weeks, further rose to 189 last week, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 5. The 131 deaths from phthisis were 31 below the average. In Greater London 3050 births and 1420 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 53·1 deg., being 2·8 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 38·2 hours, the sun being above the horizon 84·1 hours.

The British Museum was closed on Wednesday morning, and will remain closed to the public until the 8th inst. During this interval the rooms will be thoroughly cleansed; and, on the reopening, new features of interest will be presented, amongst other matters, that of lighting the Museum with the electric light is one to which the authorities are paying their utmost attention; they have determined upon putting this light upon a permanent basis, and a number of hands commenced operations this morning in placing lights not only in the Reading-room, but in the various galleries, so that during the winter season the British Museum may remain open for several hours after sunset, so as to enable the working men to visit this national institution in the evening. The exact hours of closing have not yet been determined, but as an experiment the time allowed to visitors will be extended to six o'clock, and, if thought desirable, arrangements can be made to extend the time to eight o'clock.

The next session of lectures and classes by the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching will open with a large increase in the number of centres where the work is carried on. An important public meeting held last February at the Mansion House was followed by district meetings at various points throughout London and the suburbs, and the result is encouraging to those who have made efforts to support this endeavour of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London to extend to London the educational scheme which Cambridge has for the last six years successfully maintained in many provincial towns. The next term will open with twenty-six courses of instruction, held at thirteen centres. Political Economy, English History and Literature, Physical Geography, and Physiology are the subjects most in demand; at one centre there is to be a course of Latin literature. The east, south, and north of London, with suburbs such as Wimbledon and Putney, still supply the large majority of district centres, but this year Marylebone and Kensington are added to the list. In the richer districts the scheme is already generally self-supporting; but in the poorer, such as the Tower Hamlets, Lambeth, Hoxton, &c., the fees are fixed at extremely low rates, and the society is, therefore, still in need of funds to attain its full efficiency. Yet more important requisites are the interest and energy shown by the local committees in making the scheme known in their neighbourhoods and raising guarantee funds; and it is owing to the increase of such local support that the work has been able to make advance. All information desired can be obtained from the secretaries, 22, Albemarle-street, W.



The Dublin Civic Council on Tuesday unanimously sanctioned a report on Committee No. 1 recommending the grant of a place at the top of Sackville-street for the Gough memorial.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

The Ameer Yakoob Khan, escaping from the city of Cabul, which he leaves apparently in the hands of the insurgents, has come to meet General Sir Frederick Roberts. This General, with his force of three brigades, reached Khushi, on the west side of the Shutargardan Pass, and forty-three miles from Cabul, on Sunday evening last. He was attacked the day before, at Hazar Darakht, by a party of Mangals and hostile Ghilzais; five sepoys were killed, and Deputy-Surgeon General Townsend was wounded. The death of Lieutenant Kinloch, of the 12th Regiment of cavalry, is also reported. Wali Mohamed, and other Afghan Chiefs and officials, are with the Ameer at Khushi. Among them is Daoud Shah, the Commander-in-Chief, who was not killed at Cabul. It is expected that Ghuzni will be occupied by the force of General Hughes, advancing from Candahar through Khelat-i-Ghilzai, the commander of which last place has promised supplies and transport. The force advancing through the Khyber arrived at Dakka last Monday. A telegram of Wednesday last, from Simla, states that General Roberts was that day to advance on Cabul.

It is rumoured that Cabul is in a state of anarchy; the gates are shut, but not much resistance is anticipated. Our view of the entrance to that city, from Killa Kazee, is copied, by permission of Mr. H. Graves, the publisher, from Atkinson's "Sketches of Afghanistan." There is nothing in the first sight of Cabul to please or surprise the stranger. An irregular wall, with frequent towers and bastions, and loopholed profusely, but presenting a general appearance of neglect and decay, surrounds the greater part of the town, and runs up the salient ridges of the hills. The entrance by "the city gate" is mean and uninteresting. A narrow street, lined on either side with the stalls of fruit and sweetmeat sellers and the venders of cooked meat and fish, leads the visitor into one of the four main streets which together compose the chief feature of the Cabul city—the Charchatta—and converge upon an open market-place, where once stood the great domed bazaar, blown up by the avenging army in 1842. It was erected in the reign of Aurungzebe, and was long a centre of Central Asian trade, the common rendezvous of merchants from Northern Hindostan and Persia, and the Khanates. But it was there that the corpse of Sir William Macnaghten had been exposed in 1842, and the last act of Pollock before leaving the guilty city was to blow up the building which had been the scene of this insult to our murdered Envoy. Turning to the left from this central space, another of the four main roads leads to the Bala Hissar, a vast walled inclosure on the higher ground, overlooking the town, containing the barracks of the Ameer's troops and his palace, with the buildings lately occupied by the British Residency.

Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, lately with the British Army in Afghanistan, furnishes a few sketches of the Ameer Yakoob Khan at Gundamuck in the last days of May, when, after the Treaty of Peace had been signed, there were two mornings devoted to military displays, in order to let the Ameer see our troops. The first of these was a turn out of the Artillery, including the elephant battery, the mule mountain battery, and the Gatling guns. The second day was a review of the whole of the forces of General Sir S. Browne's Division. Among the spectators, of course, the Ameer was the principal figure. On both these occasions an attendant was present with a hookah, or "kalioon" as the Persians call it; and in the middle of the review this Oriental pipe was produced. While the troops were marching past the Ameer had his puff of smoke as if quietly in his own tent. The practice is quite in keeping with Oriental ideas, but it is strange to our western notions; and we may perhaps infer the condition of the Cabul troops from the etiquette observed by those in command of them. In the upper part of the Engraving our Artist has put a Sketch of the lamented Lieutenant Hamilton, with some of the Punjaub Guides Cavalry, as they appeared at the review at Gundamuck. The portrait of this young officer will be found also on another page.

THE LATE DR. AMBROSE KELLY.

The lamented death of this gentleman, who was medical officer to the British Residency at Cabul, and was killed on the 3rd ult., together with Sir Louis Cavagnari, Mr. W. Jenkyns, and Lieutenant W. R. P. Hamilton, by the Afghan insurgents, has been repeatedly noticed. His family, who reside at Dublin, where his father holds an official position, had received from him several interesting letters since his arrival at Cabul, from which we take the following extracts:—

"The city of Cabul is a miserable place indeed, and surpasses any I ever saw in dirt. The houses are all jumbled together; the best streets only allow two horsemen to ride abreast. The principal shops are the fruit-sellers' and the leather-workers'. The climate of Cabul is delightful. We arrived at the hottest time of the year, and even then it was not warmer in the house than you have it often during the dog days at home. Now it is getting much pleasanter, and the nights are fresh and nice. In the winter there is usually four feet or more of snow, and the cold is described as intense, but, of course, dry, and none of the wet and slop you have.

"Our quarters in the Bala Hissar or upper fortress are rather picturesque. They are built in true Oriental style, and, although the best in the whole of Cabul, are not quite up to our ideas of a house. To guard against earthquakes, which are of frequent occurrence here, the walls all contain wooden supports, upon which the roof and floors rest. Between these the walls are built up with the ordinary sun-dried bricks. The fronts of the rooms are altogether wooden, something like a shop-front. In lieu of glass the windows are closed with wooden shutters. The quarters all look into a central court-yard. The backs of the houses form the outside wall, which, for defence, has no openings or windows in it. Some names in Russian are written up in my dressing-room, probably the General's or one of his staff; I mean the fellows who were here this time last year.

"We are treated with every consideration by the Ameer, who insists upon our being his guests. We, our servants, horses, and the men of the escort are all fed at his expense. Mornings and evenings five coolie loads of food are brought in to us, besides four large trays of fruit, peaches, grapes, apples, pears, apricots, nectarines, and melons; these all come from the Ameer's gardens, besides which a pony load of splendid ice, in blocks a foot thick, is deposited in our mess daily, so our liquor is well cooled.

"Cavagnari is an awfully good fellow—a nicer could not be found. Three of us here are Irish—namely, Cavagnari, Hamilton, and myself. The fourth is a Scotchman. Hamilton got his V.C., I am glad to say, for the action at Futtehabad, where Battye was killed. Hamilton is an awfully nice fellow, and only twenty-three years of age.

"There will never be much to do in Cabul, I can easily see; at all events, not before we have a nice Residency built for ourselves well away from the city. If it was only on this account, I have determined upon taking furlough on the first opportunity. After an absence of eighteen or twenty-four months the place will likely be much changed for the better, and one will be able to go about with more liberty. At all events, Cabul is much better than sweating it out down country.

"I do not expect to get very much variety in the shooting line. Quail and snipe, with some wild fowl, will be the only things to be got; but, then, I am the only one among us who cares about this sort of sport, so I ought to have a little of it should we remain here during a part of the cold weather. Four miles from this there is a big lake about three miles long by three-quarters broad; along the edges of this the long bills are sure to abound when the time comes for their visits from colder regions. The natives say that by-and-by the water will be alive with all sorts of ducks and geese. This morning we had some native sports on horseback, tent-pegging and lime-cutting. Some of the Ameer's troops also joined in.

"The people are rather fanatical, and not yet quite accustomed to our presence, so we always go about with a troop of cavalry on our rides. The people have not shown any hostility or disrespect; but still there might be a fanatic among them who would, if he could, do us damage. We go out either in the morning or evening for a ride, accompanied by some of the Guide sowars and a troop of the Ameer's cavalry. One day we went to see the Emperor Baber's tomb, which is situated about three miles to the west of the city. There is a small mosque built of white marble at it, and once upon a time the grounds were very nicely laid out, but the whole place has fallen into decay. Another day we went to see the site of our old cantonments in 1839, but there is little remaining of them now. Our intended trip to Herat and the Oxus has been postponed indefinitely on account of press of work; the Ameer has many things to do and look after, having so recently taken up the reins. The only thing I believe settled is that there is to be a big durbar in the cold weather at either Agra or Delhi. It is probable I shall take furlough from there instead of returning to Cabul; it will be a very good opportunity of getting out of the country, and I feel that I want a change and brushing up a bit after being over nine years in India.

"I get as much practice as ever I like to have here, and have lots of eye cases; ophthalmia is very prevalent, owing to the glare and dust. In a short time I will have a dispensary and something to amuse me in it. Our postal arrangements are working well up to the present; our letters arrive daily. Yesterday I had a parcel containing a great coat from Murree by post.

"Aug. 25.—Cavagnari has just told me that the Viceroy has settled upon the end of next February to hold the Durbar. We shall probably take Yakoob Khan down a month beforehand and show him Bombay, very likely taking him by sea to Madras and Calcutta, and then up by train to Agra. I only hope we shall be able to carry it out, for Cabul at present is not in a very quiet state, and it is just possible that Yakoob may not like to be absent from it on such a long journey."

Our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, in his letter published last week, bore testimony to the kindness and usefulness and agreeable qualities of Dr. Kelly, and especially to his voluntary and gratuitous medical services among the Afghan population. In a letter from one of the ill-fated party at Cabul we find this mention of the same beneficent activity on his part:—"Dr. A. H. Kelly, the surgeon of the British Embassy, is establishing a public dispensary, which has already become wonderfully popular; and every morning and evening, when the surgeon pays his visits, crowds of patients waiting for relief surround and implore him for medicine, both for themselves and their friends who may be too ill to attend personally." We have been captiously taken to task, by an anonymous correspondent, for speaking of these gentlemen, Sir Louis Cavagnari and his companions, as "Englishmen," whereas some were of Irish, and one of Scottish, birth. The objection is scarcely deserving of a serious reply. All natives of the United Kingdom, in a correct social view, belong to a common nationality. We are not inclined to give up the claim to such worthy countrymen as these, when their virtues are here recorded, upon the occasion which we all equally deplore.

LIEUTENANT WALTER HAMILTON, V.C.

We give the portrait of this brave young officer, who commanded the detachment of twenty-five troopers and fifty infantry of the Queen's Own (Punjaub) Guides, forming the escort at the British Residency at Cabul, and who was killed in its defence with Sir Louis Cavagnari and the two other Englishmen on the 3rd ult. Lieutenant Walter Richard Pollock Hamilton was just twenty-three years of age. He was fourth son of Alexander Hamilton, Esq., J.P. for the county of Kilkenny, and was great-grandson of the late Right Rev. Hugh Hamilton, Bishop of Ossory; also grandson, on his mother's side, of Lord Chief Baron Pollock, and grand-nephew of Field Marshal Sir George Pollock, Bart., who led the avenging army to Cabul in 1842. He was born at Inistioge, in Kilkenny, Aug. 18, 1856, and was educated at Eagle House, Wimbledon, and Felsted, Essex. He was gazetted in the spring of 1874 to the 70th Regiment, then serving in India. Having passed the Indian Staff Examinations, he was appointed squadron officer of that distinguished frontier corps, the "Queen's Own Guides." He served in the Jowaki campaign as aide-de-camp to his commanding officer. In the recent Afghan war he served with his regiment, which formed part of General Sir Samuel Browne's column, and took part in the capture of Ali Musjid, and in the occupation of Jellalabad. In the battle at Futtehabad, on April 2, when his commanding officer, Major Wigram Battye, was shot as they went into action, the command of the Guide Cavalry, numbering about 150 sabres, devolved upon Lieutenant Hamilton. He charged through a body of 2000 of the enemy, and, cutting his way back, completely routed them. In this engagement he saved the life of one of his own sowars, for which and other acts of bravery he was at once recommended for the Victoria Cross by General Gough, who witnessed the engagement. Lieutenant Hamilton, notwithstanding his youth, was chosen by the Indian authorities to command the guard of honour of the British Envoy, and also to act as political assistant. He died in the performance of his duty in the last desperate conflict, when the inmates of the Residency attempted to cut their way out through an overwhelming host of infuriated besiegers.

The Queen's Own Guides is a corps which was at first raised for the service of the political officers on the frontier, and had no connection with the War Department. After a time they were changed into a Military Corps, which is now to be found in the Army List, among the other regiments. The name of Lumsden is well known in connection with the early days of the Guides, as Sir Harry B. Lumsden, and Sir Peter S. Lumsden, are both associated with the history of the corps. The regiment consists part of cavalry and part of infantry, which are capable of undertaking almost any kind of service which the varied character of the frontier may require. There is some talk of adding a Kutchur or mule mountain battery, so that they would thus form a small Army Corps by themselves, and be ready for any emergency. They have permanent quarters at Hoti Mardan, in the Yuzufzai country, to the north-east of Peshawur. Their present commandant is Colonel Jenkins, who served with them all through the late campaign with General Sir S. Browne's force.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

A council of Ministers was held on Tuesday, at which M. Waddington made some communications with regard to foreign politics. The Ministers, all of whom were present except MM. Freycinet and Ferry, afterwards discussed the question of replacing the Archbishop of Bourges.

Numerous Royalist banquets were held on Monday to celebrate the birthday of the Comte de Chambord. Mass was said at the Church of St. Germain-des-Pres. An address to the Comte, in which the Legitimists express their devotion to "the King," was read at all the Legitimist banquets. It ran thus:—"Royalty is still wanting to France, and, therefore, France to Europe. We are not politicians; we are simply workers making an act of reason and patriotism; and, being impressed by all the need of the salvation of society, we await the King in order that he may come and spread over France and over us the protecting shelter of a legitimate and powerful sovereignty. We are suffering, Monseigneur; confidence is departing, and work is decreasing in the same ratio that our burdens are increased. We see at the same time our most cherished liberties disappear, and one outrage there is which is revolting to the dignity of our consciences and our honour as fathers of families. But in this everyday struggle we are sustained by the promises of the Royal heir of Saint Louis." This (says the Paris correspondent of the Times) is, perhaps, the first time for fifty years that the Comte de Chambord's birthday has been publicly and freely celebrated in France. The Count de Chévigné presided at one held in the Palais Royal. He said the Republic was at its last gasp, and bade his hearers prepare by their united efforts to save France at the next elections of the Chamber of Deputies and the Municipal Councils.

In the racing at Longchamps on Sunday Nubienne won the Prix Villebon. For the Grand Criterium States there was a field of eighteen. It resulted in a dead-heat between Baron Rothschild's Louis d'Or and Mr. Jennings's Basilique, the final heat being won by the latter.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William drove from Metz to Frescaty on Wednesday week morning to witness the parade of the troops. The weather was very favourable, and an immense number of persons proceeded from Metz by special trains to the parade-ground to see the review. His Majesty returned to Metz at one o'clock, and at two o'clock, accompanied by Prince Charles Albert, the Grand Duke of Baden, and a large staff of Generals, paid a visit to the Evangelical garrison church, proceeding thence to the cathedral. A banquet was given at five o'clock, at which the Emperor presided, and at half-past eight there was a grand conversazione in the military casino in honour of the Emperor's visit. On Thursday his Majesty visited the battle-fields of Vionville and Gravelotte, where he made a lengthened stay. At all the villages through which he passed he was cordially received, and on his return to Metz he was loudly cheered by a very large crowd. Yesterday week his Majesty left. The Emperor of Germany is now at Baden-Baden, where he is reposing after the fatigue and excitement of his visit to Alsace-Lorraine. The Empress's birthday was kept at Baden-Baden on Tuesday. Referring to his recent visit to Alsace-Lorraine, the Emperor William says the impressions gained by him have, to his great satisfaction and joy, confirmed him in the belief that the inner process of reconnecting the province with the German Fatherland is making gratifying progress.

Prince Bismarck, accompanied by his wife and son, left Vienna for Dresden on the evening of Wednesday week, their departure being witnessed by a large crowd. Before leaving, the German Chancellor had another interview, which lasted an hour, with Count Andrassy; after which he dined at the German Embassy, when all the members of the Diplomatic body in Vienna were present. Rumours continue to be published as to the matters which have been under discussion during the visit. According to one account, Prince Bismarck has proposed a Customs union with Austria-Hungary, the treaty to include the independent principalities. A much bigger scheme is talked of by the Paris correspondent of the Daily News. This authority writes:—"At the counting-house of a great banker, who has had official relations with Austria, I have heard that Prince Bismarck submitted to the Emperor Francis Joseph and Count Andrassy a plan for a general disarmament." A report is published of the conversation which took place between Prince Bismarck and M. Teisserenc de Bort, the French Ambassador at Vienna. According to this the Prince assured his auditor that France need have no uneasiness at the ultimate relations between Germany and Austria. He thought the importance of his visit to Vienna had been much exaggerated. The German Government continues to affirm that Prince Bismarck's visit to Vienna had reference merely to the relations of Germany with Austria-Hungary, and that it was not inimically aimed against any other Power. The Prince returned to Berlin on Thursday week in apparently the best of spirits. He received the Prussian Ministers in the course of the afternoon. On Wednesday he received the Russian Ambassadors at Berlin and Paris, and gave them the assurance that no design calculated to injure Russia had been discussed during his recent visit to Vienna.

The Times' correspondent, writing on Monday, says Berlin is about to pass through the excitement of the most critical election held during the last thirty years:—

"The issue before the electors to the Landtag has by common consent been reduced to a simple and personal one—for or against Bismarck. This fact is sufficient to show the helpless and hopeless condition of the Liberals. Dr. Falk's letter has certainly done a little for them and may win a few seats for the Opposition; but the weakness of it lies in the vagueness of its foreboding and the difficulty of denouncing, until too late, any particular unmistakable reactionary movement on the part of the wary Chancellor. Of the fidelity of the Conservatives there is, of course, no doubt, while the Clericals, although their organs express gloomy views regarding the prospect, are undoubtedly cheered by the Gastein and Vienna negotiations with Cardinal Jacobini, and whisper to one another that the choice for them must, after all, be between Bismarck and Falk. The Progressists are powerless, and the Social Democrats unwittingly demonstrate the one peculiar merit of an arbitrary government, and by their speeches render ten times the value of their votes. The poorer classes are promised an abatement of direct taxes, the sole expense not under a man's own control, and the trading classes hear with satisfaction of the arrangements under which Austrian corn and timber may be obtained at low rates, while German markets may be opened throughout nearly the whole rich extent of the Balkan peninsula. The purchase of the railways may be effected with borrowed money, the interest upon which could easily be paid out of the returns now distributed as dividends. The result, therefore, of the election is not doubtful."

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

An autograph letter of the Emperor has been published acceding to Prince Carl Auersperg's repeated request to be relieved, on account of ill health, of the post of President of the Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath. The Emperor at the same time graciously expressed to the Prince his warm acknowledgment of his patriotic devotion and readiness to serve the Empire.

An Imperial decree has been published appointing four hereditary and fourteen life members of the Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath. The following are among those who have received nominations:—Chevalier Bezecny, one of the head officials in the Ministry of Finance, Baron Brenner, Baron Hübner, and the late Minister Herr Habietinek.

RUSSIA.

The news of a serious check sustained by the Russian expedition against the Tekke Turcomans, which was announced in our last issue, is now confirmed by a telegram from St. Petersburg. It runs thus:—Intelligence received here from Beurma, dated the 4th inst., announces that during a reconnaissance near Geok Tepe on Aug. 28, the Russians encountered large masses of Tekke Turcomans, who had strongly intrenched themselves at Dengile Tepe. They made a desperate resistance to the Russian attack. The Russians for six hours directed a cannonade from twelve guns upon a position occupied by 30,000 Tekke Turcomans. In the evening the Russian troops obtained possession of the outer entrenchments, and at night the enemy fled after suffering a loss of several thousand men. The loss sustained by the Russians was seven officers and 178 soldiers killed, and sixteen officers and 234 soldiers wounded.—A telegram from the special correspondent of the Daily News with the Russian expedition contains similar news, and adds that raids continue to be made by the Persian Turkomans upon the Russian provision and postal convoys. General Tergukassoff has arrived, and has replaced General Lomakin.

The Berlin correspondent of the Standard states that orders have been sent to General Lomakin to give up the idea of penetrating to Merv. The expedition is to proceed to Sarin Kuch, a ridge on the eastern extremity of the Kopet Dagh Hills, north-east of Sherawan, whence practicable roads, skirting the Persian frontier, lead through Deregez to Herat direct. Merv, if taken in hand at all, will be approached from the north, by way of Bokhara. This change of plan, it is stated, is principally owing to the representations of General Tergukasoff.

TURKEY.

At an extraordinary Cabinet Council held on Monday at Constantinople, under the presidency of the Sultan, for discussion of the Budget, he opposed the idea of raising any new loan either at home or abroad, and recommended, instead, that recourse should be had to other measures of an internal character.

A telegram from Constantinople, received at Vienna, mentions that the Porte has decided to assist the Khedive in the Abyssinian campaign.

In the Chamber of Deputies, M. Bratiano, the Premier, has given it to be understood that the number of Jews who would be naturalised according to the Government bill would not exceed 1074.

The Government has refused the claims of polygamous wives to public lands.

At a meeting held at New York last Saturday between the official representatives of that city and of the Canadian Government, the plan for making the grounds around the Niagara Falls into an international park was favourably considered.

CANADA.

The Dominion Exhibition was opened at Ottawa on Sept. 24 by the Governor-General of Canada and Princess Louise amid great enthusiasm. The Governors of Vermont and New Hampshire were present at the ceremony, which was witnessed by about 20,000 persons.

Yesterday week Princess Louise presented the medals to the successful exhibitors at the Exhibition.

Princess Louise will leave Quebec on the 18th inst. by the steamer Sarmatian for England. It is said that the physicians of the Princess have urged a change of air for the benefit of her health, which has not been so good lately. Her Royal Highness, it is understood, will return to Canada for the opening of the Dominion Parliament.

The Quebec Legislative Council has met in secret session and refused to pass the supply Bill. It is subsequently adjourned until Oct. 27.

Imperial Commissioners have been in British Columbia examining the harbours and defences there. A despatch, dated Victoria (British Columbia), Sept. 5, says:—"It is reported that they have condemned the present site of the dockyards at Esquimalt as being untenable in case of war."

MEXICO.

The Mexican Congress was opened on the 16th inst. The message of the President, Señor Porfirio Diaz, stated that the relations of Mexico with foreign Powers were most amicable. Referring to the United States, he declared that no fresh embarrassments had arisen to render a complete agreement with them difficult. The financial condition of the Government had improved, and peace prevailed throughout the Republic. The President expressed himself opposed to being re-elected President at the end of his term of office.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

A telegram has been received at the office of the Agent-General for Victoria stating that the second reading of the bill for the reform of the Colonial Constitution has been carried by a majority of twenty-two—the numbers being 53 for and 31 against, including three pairs.

The New Zealand Parliament has been opened by the Governor, Sir Hercules Robinson. It is expected that the first test vote will show, as a result of the recent elections, that the Opposition have a small majority. The Bank of New Zealand, being dissatisfied with the conditions on which it holds the banking account of the New Zealand Government, have given the necessary notice for the termination of the contract.

A Wellington letter in the Times dwells upon the political collapse of Sir George Grey. There has never in the history of the colony (the writer says) been so complete a revulsion of feeling towards any leader:—

"For a while, indeed, 'the people,' to whom he always appealed, were misled by the energy of his denunciation of the wealthier classes, by the extravagant assertions of injustice done to the 'working man,' and by the promise of relief foreshadowed in the enunciation of what he was pleased to term his 'great Liberal policy.' But now that the glamour of his eloquent declamation has passed away, and ample opportunity has been afforded him to carry into execution those 'great reforms,' the people, to whose worst passions he appealed, have calmed down to a realisation of their true position. Experience has shown that the suggested grievances were entirely the creation of Sir George Grey's imagination. The supposed hostility of their wealthier neighbours has proved a myth. The 'down-trodden serfs' have found that the heels of the oppressor rest very comfortably upon them. The promised reforms have not been made, for the Premier himself has more than once stood in the way of the fulfilment of his own promises; and the people have at last discovered that the cloak of the demagogue has concealed a despot whose every act has been in the direction of substituting a personal for a constitutional Government. There has been a rude awakening on both sides. The people are angry to find that they have been so duped, and they are thoroughly alarmed at the seriousness of the position to which two years of the so-called 'Liberal' Government has brought the colony. Sir George Grey, on the other hand, has not only to bear a more ignominious expulsion from office than has ever befallen a New Zealand Ministry, but, being so ill-advised as to appeal to the public in Wellington for a demonstration in his favour while the Parliament was sitting next door in judgment upon his administration, he has had to endure the mortification of being scarcely allowed a hearing on the same platform where a year ago not a word was allowed to be uttered in his dispraise." It was painful in the extreme, the correspondent goes on to say, to listen to his defence on his impeachment by the Leader of the Opposition:—

"He asserted in the most passionate terms that the attack was made with the sole object of crushing one man—himself; that the reason of this was because he had stood between the Opposition and their desire to enrich themselves by the acquisition of the public lands, and to make a slave of the working man instead of allowing him to acquire land and make a happy home for himself and his children; that the late Governor, being in collusion with these land monopolists and with the pseudo-aristocracy of the Upper House, had refused his application for a dissolution; that the Colonial Office was always his enemy; but that he was determined to fight for the rights of the people to the last, 'though a Duke were sent out as Governor;' and he would never desert the few faithful friends who would sacrifice their lives, if need be, in saving the people of New Zealand from the serfdom to which the English labourer was doomed. One could understand some Chartist leader on Kennington-common in 1844, or some Irish mob orator and Home-Ruler, making use of such language; but it is difficult to realise an old gentleman seventy years of age, himself a wealthy man, decorated by her Majesty, and having spent the greater part of his life in her Majesty's service in the high position of her representative, giving utterance to such sentiments, and in New Zealand of all places in the world, where the electorate is already next door to universal suffrage, where the acquisition of land by direct purchase or by deferred payment system is made easier to the working man than in any part of the globe, perhaps; and where the wages are, proportionately to the price of food, higher than anywhere else."

The Crown Princess of Denmark was robbed during her recent journey of ornaments worth 60,000 or 70,000 crowns. A sailor named Weiss, on board the Skoldmon, has been detected as the culprit. He stole the articles from the saloon in which the Princess, like other passengers, had left her property.

There were 19,695 persons killed by wild beasts and snakes in British India in the calendar year 1877. Tigers head the list. There were 819 persons killed by tigers, 564 by wolves, 200 by leopards, 85 by bears, 46 by elephants, 24 by hyenas, and 1180 by other wild beasts. The other 16,777 victims were killed by snakes. These enemies of mankind killed also 53,197 cattle in the year. The measures adopted in India for exterminating wild beasts and venomous snakes resulted in the destruction of 22,851 of the former and 127,295 of the latter in the course of the year, and for this deliverance from them rewards were paid to the amount of £10,301.

On Wednesday week a lamentable accident occurred at Boulogne. Notwithstanding the roughness of the weather, a party of five persons, three ladies and two gentlemen, all except one of the gentlemen being English, determined to bathe. No sooner had they quitted their machines than they were carried out of their depth by the waves, aided at the moment by a strong and flowing tide. No effective means of rescue were at hand. One person, officially charged with the duty of watching over the safety of the bathers, gave the alarm. Nothing else was done by the officials; but Colonel J. W. Fry, late of the 88th Regiment, dashed into the water and succeeded, at the risk of his own life, in bringing to shore one of the ladies, Miss Sarah Clarke, who was speedily restored to consciousness. Again Colonel Fry rushed into the water and brought another inanimate body to the shore, that of Miss Rose Brocksopp. This time, however, life was, unhappily, extinct. The remaining three bathers, Miss Gertrude Wiseman, Mr. Charles Clarke, and Mr. F. Jacobsen, a Dane, were swept away by the fierce current of the tide. Miss Brocksopp was eighteen years of age, Miss Wiseman seventeen, and Miss Clarke sixteen. The body of Mr. Jacobsen was washed ashore between Ambleteuse and Audresselles on Saturday afternoon. M. A. Klamborowski writes to the Times that, in spite of the roughness of the sea, he and his wife were allowed to bathe at Boulogne on Wednesday without a word of caution from the officials. He adds that two boats generally lie to seaward of the bathers, but on Wednesday the water was too rough for them to stand out. The Mayor of Boulogne telegraphs that an official investigation has been ordered into the catastrophe. It is too certain, however (he says), that there was grave imprudence on the part of the victims, "who, nothwithstanding the strong wind and the violence of the waves, were resolved to bathe." A letter from Boulogne characterises as cowardly the conduct of two sauveteurs who, the writer says, absolutely refused to go into the sea and wet their trousers above their knees, but allowed the gallant Colonel to carry Miss Clarke the whole distance himself.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

ANNUAL STATEMENT.

The members of the London School Board assembled on Wednesday afternoon at the Board-Room, Victoria Embankment, under the presidency of Sir Charles Reed, LL.D.

Sir Charles Reed said it would be well, in approaching the third triennial period of the operations of the Board, to compare the London of to-day, educationally considered, with what it was at the commencement of the work in 1870. It then appeared that elementary school provision was required for 574,693 children, but that existing efficient schools supplied only 262,259 places, while the daily average attendance was but 174,301. Although those exact figures were not known to Parliament, the deficiency in London was so notorious that the Elementary Education Act of 1870 directed the immediate formation of this Board, and committed to it the care of a population equal to that of all Scotland. Many months were spent in making an educational Census, and it was found that the responsibility of the Board extended, not simply to the so-called "wastrel" class, as some had supposed. It might have been so had all others been under proper instruction. But, as a fact, the evil spread far higher in society; and they were required to provide for all children needing accommodation in schools below what was known as "the ninepenny line." At the end of those nine years what result could they show? It was something, surely, that London had wiped out the reproach that more than a quarter of a million of her children were growing up in ignorance and neglect; it was more to point out that the School provision had increased by 80 per cent and the attendance by more than 100 per cent.

As regards the provision, the Voluntary Schools had increased their efficient accommodation from 262,259 to 274,451, notwithstanding the fact that efficient schools, with an average attendance of 22,770 children, had been transferred to the Board; and they had created, or were creating, new provision for 204,236, making joint provision for 478,687 scholars; while, as regards attendance, the Voluntary Schools showed a daily average at Christmas last of 184,607, and the Board Schools of 165,900, giving a total of 352,507. But while these figures exhibited great progress, they showed that the Board had not outrun the necessities of the case. The population of school age of the elementary class would be at present estimated by the Registrar-General at 733,695, so that the supply of schools, so far from being excessive, was deficient. As the population of London was continually increasing, it was quite clear that, unless the House of Commons was prepared to reverse the principle of the Act of 1870, the supply of schools must go on. It would be an everlasting monument of parsimony and impotence that the greatest capital in the world should fail to supply sufficient school accommodation for its children.

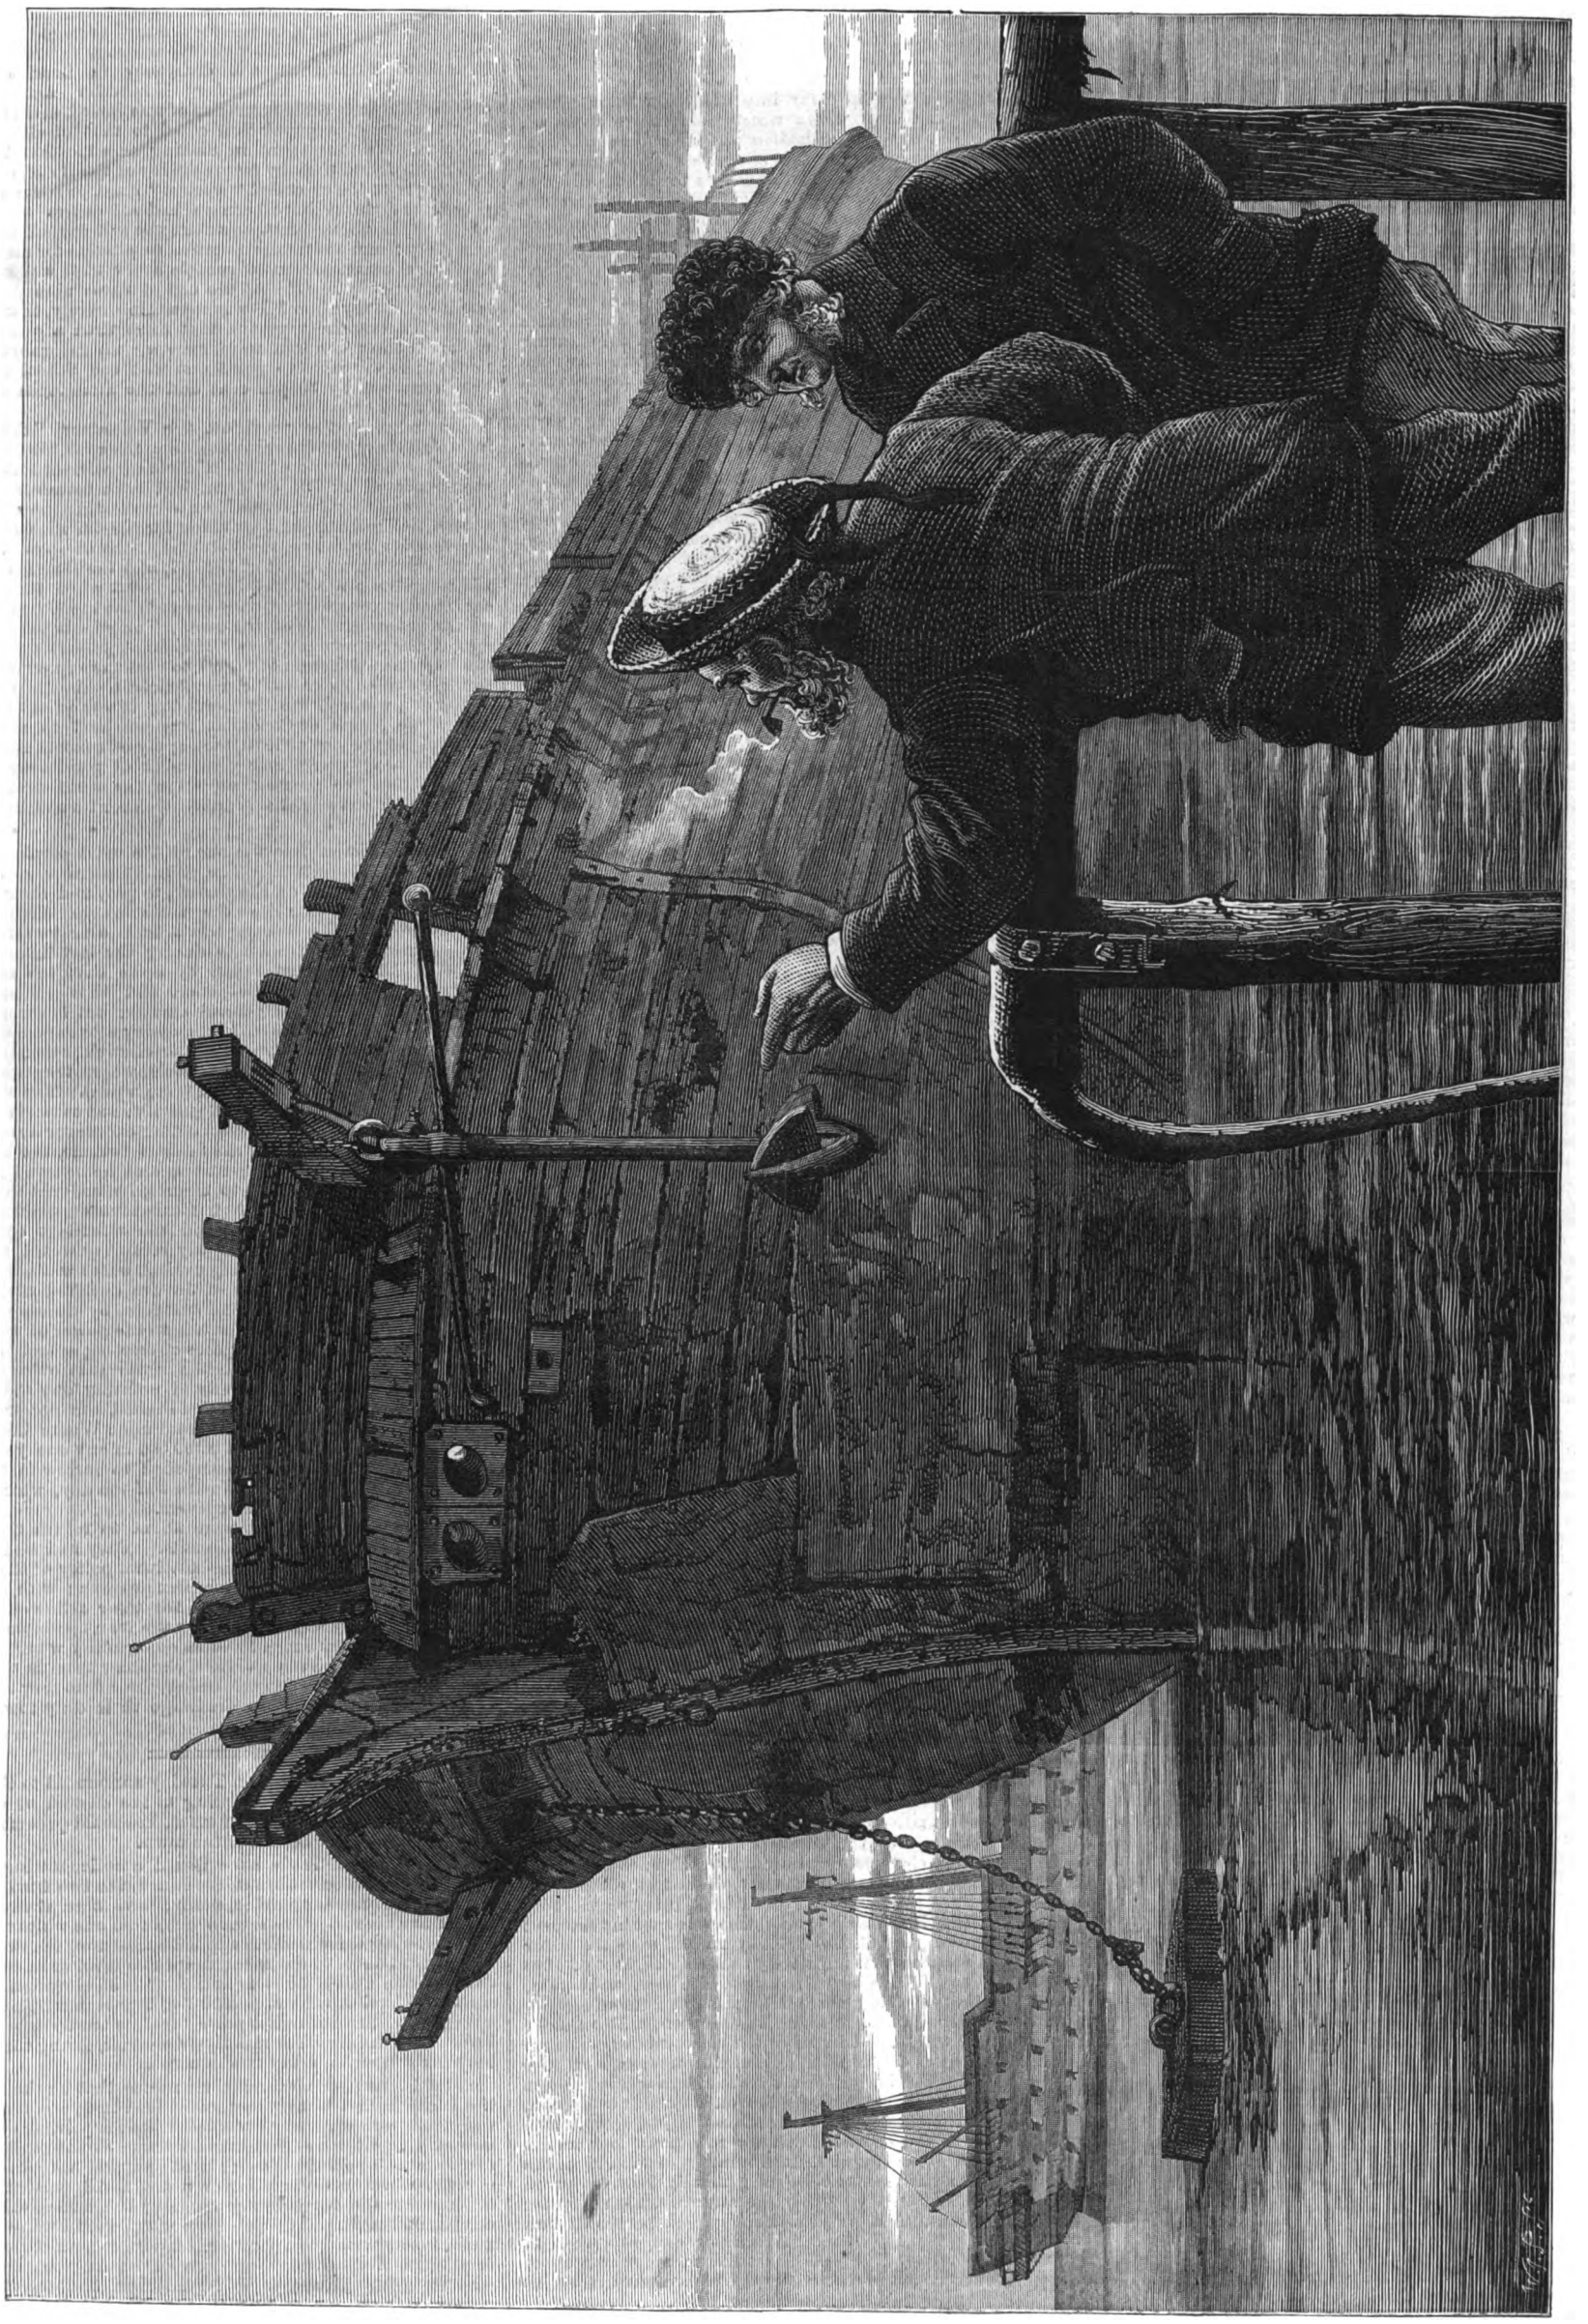
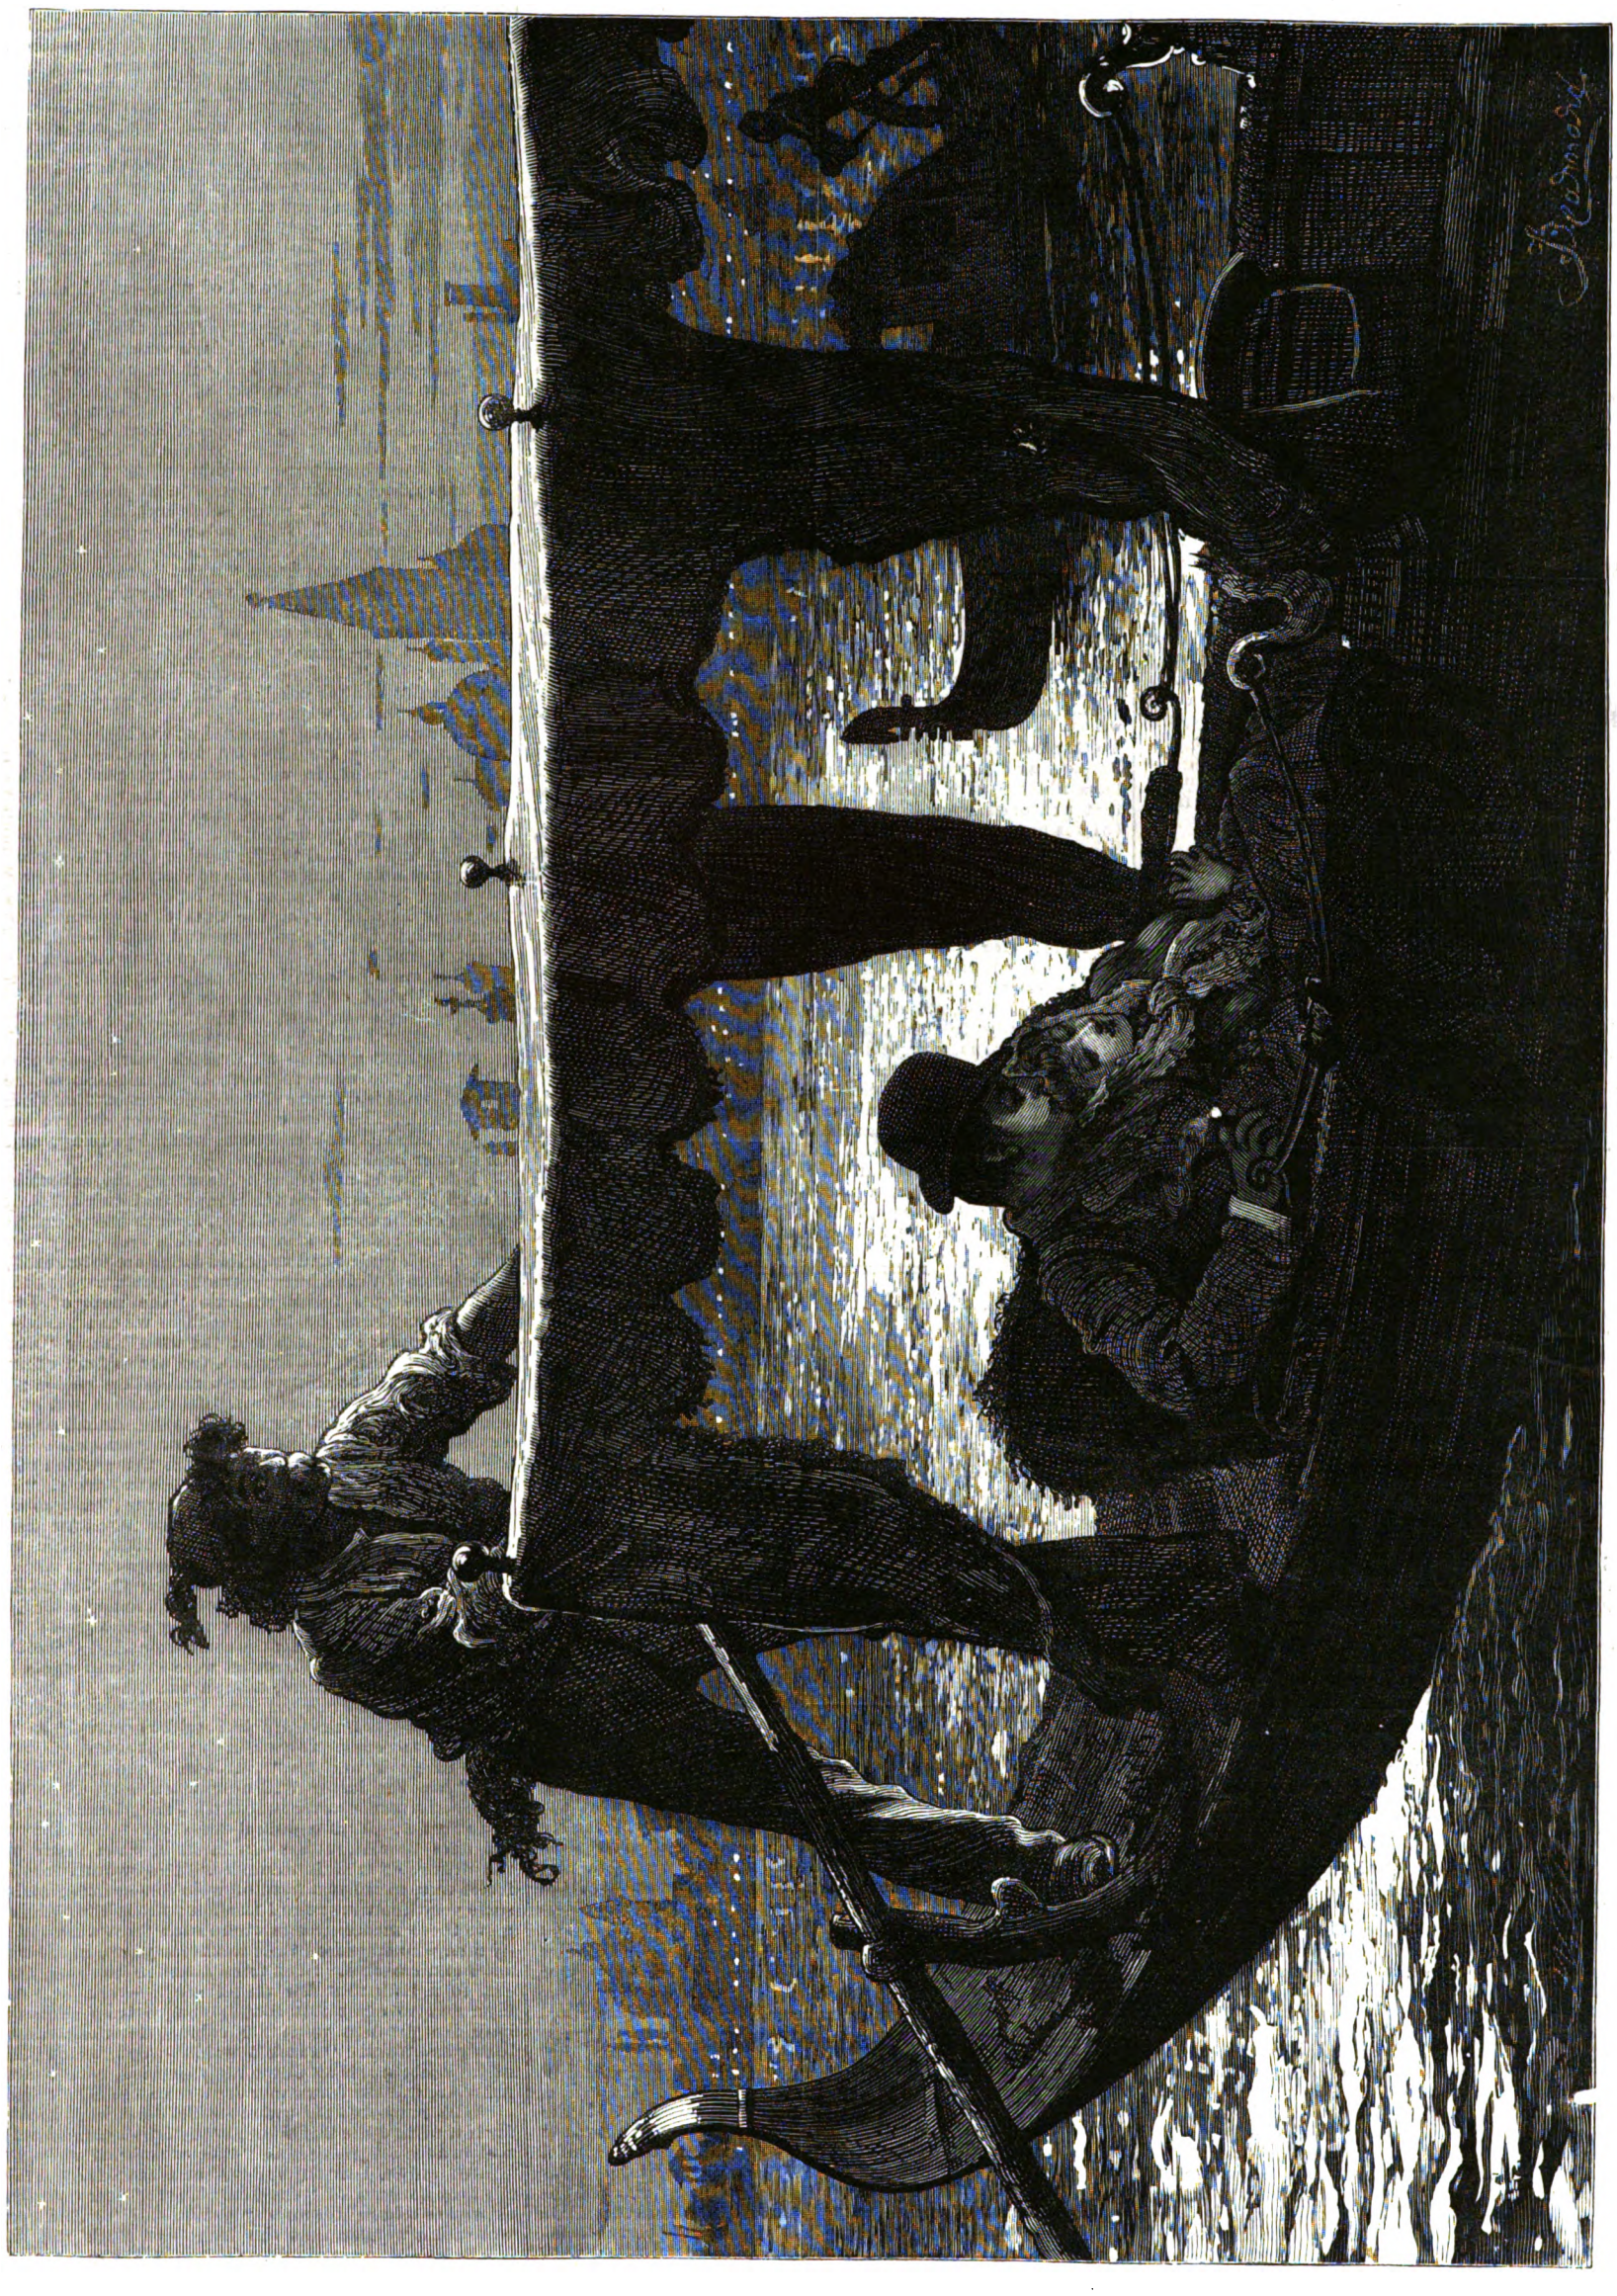
The question of fees was one of the most perplexing with which they had to deal. The greatest pains were taken to ascertain the ability of the parents to pay, and their aim had been gradually to raise the scale where circumstances warranted it. The average was a little over twopence, and the income arising from fees during the last financial year £72,000. It had been urged by some that the fee ought never to be less than twopence, and that threepence or sixpence should be the general charge; but it seemed to be forgotten that high fees and compulsory attendance could not be enforced together. They had, for example, taken over some 12,000 children from Ragged Schools, where they never paid any fee at all. They had charged them a penny from the beginning, and this they paid with regularity; but to raise the fee for such children would be to give a strong excuse for absenteeism. With regard to the Industrial Schools Scheme, the work had been carried on with earnestness, and he believed it would have a salutary effect. As to finance, he believed their work had involved a large, though not excessive expenditure, considering the results attained and the attendant conditions. Had their precepts been promptly met they would have had less interest to pay for working capital, which was never placed at their disposal. A Court of Justice declared their claims "too clear for argument," and sustained by decree their full borrowing power. With reference to the power of the Board to borrow money for the purposes of erecting school buildings and to charge the rates with the repayment of capital and interest, he took the opportunity of pointing out that an Act passed at the close of last Session limited the powers of any public body to borrow from the Public Works Loan Commissioners a larger sum than £100,000 in any one year. The Board would accordingly be compelled to borrow in the open market, and at the current interest of the day, which would increase the burden of the ratepayers.



For the third time they were about to return their trust into the hands of their constituents. They had had to lead the way in a revolution of the educational policy of the nation, and to work out a great and complex problem; with what sincerity and success it would be for their fellow-citizens to determine. They were elected by the freest possible suffrage of the whole constituency; and an opportunity would be given it, in the course of a few weeks, of checking them in their work or of expressing general approval of the effort they had made faithfully and fearlessly to discharge their duty towards the young of this great city.

The Mayor of Hanley on Tuesday announced to the Town Council that, instead of adhering to the custom of giving a dinner to celebrate his year of office, he should present £100 to the Science and Art School of the town.

The Board of Trade have issued a notice stating that, in accordance with previous notices issued, the two fixed lights at the Seven Stones Lightship, Scilly, have been discontinued, and in lieu thereof there is now exhibited one white revolving light showing three flashes in quick succession, followed by an interval of 36 sec. of darkness, the whole revolution occupying one minute. This light is exhibited at an elevation of 36 ft. above the level of the sea. The fog signal has been greatly strengthened, and is now a powerful siren trumpet, which will be sounded during thick and foggy weather, giving three blasts in quick succession every two minutes.



The Postmaster-General gives notice that by the terms of the Postal Union Convention, concluded last year, the following articles are expressly excluded from the privilege of transmission by post between union countries at the reduced rates of postage applicable to printed papers, viz.—1. Postage stamps, whether obliterated or not.—2. All printed articles constituting the representative sign of a monetary value, such as printed bonds with coupons attached, issued by any Government, incorporated company or individual, bank bills, promissory notes, &c. Hitherto packets of bonds, &c., have been sent from this country to Turkey, Egypt, and the Continent generally, paid for as printed papers; but the proceeding having been challenged as irregular, and the question having been referred to the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union, it has been decided that all such articles are liable to the full letter rates of postage, and must be paid for accordingly.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Until the eighth instant the great city of Manchester, at all times intelligent, practical, and hard-headed, will be to the "intense" degree socially scientific. To us poor journalists the annual congress of the Association of which Lord Brougham was the first President are so many "sweet boons," as Artemus Ward put it. The Social Scientists read papers and talk de omnibus rebus; and they consequently give us plenty of topics whereon to write leading articles. And if an inveterate crotchet-monger or an enthusiastic rider of hobbies make now and again his appearance among the grave sages of the Congress, why, so much the better for the journalist. He is not compelled, like Tom Thumb in Fielding's burlesque, to manufacture his giants before he can slay them. The giants are all ready made.

Among the papers to be read at Manchester is one on the condition of the gipsy children and roadside "Arabs" in our midst, by Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, Leicester. Here, indeed, is a gentleman who is certainly neither a dealer in crotchets nor a rider of hobbies. Mr. Smith has done admirable service on behalf of the poor children on board our barges and canal-boats, and the even more pitiable boys and girls in our brick-fields; and to his philanthropic exertions are mainly due the recent amendments in the Factory Acts regulating the labour of young children. He has now taken the case of the juvenile "Romanies" in hand; and I wish him well in his benevolent crusade. Mr. Smith has obligingly sent me a proof of his address, from which I gather that, owing to a superstitious dislike which the gipsies entertain towards the census, and the successfully cunning attempts on their part to baffle the enumerators, it is only by conjecture and guesswork that we can form any idea of the number of Bohemians in this country. The result of Mr. Smith's diligent inquiries has led him to the assumption that there are not less than 4000 gipsy men and women, and from 10,000 to 15,000 gipsy and "Arab"—that is to say, tramp—children roaming about the country "outside the educational laws and the pale of civilisation."

I have a very curious book called "A Historical Survey of the Customs, Habits, and present state of the Gipsies, designed to develope the Origin of this Singular People and to promote the Amelioration of their Condition," published in 1816, and written by a benevolent gentleman named Hoyland, whom I conjecture to have been a member of the Society of Friends. The book was published at York; and it was in the vicinity of that ancient city, it will be remembered, that, in the early years of the present century, a number of good Quakers established the first English lunatic asylum conducted on the principles laid down by Esquirol and Pinel—that is to say, the principles of common humanity. I wonder whether Mr. Charles G. Leland, that expert in Romany philology, has seen this gipsy book of mine. It contains a copious comparative vocabulary of English, Romany, and Hindustani, from which I will just quote, as a sample, half a dozen words.

English.	Romany.	Hindustani.
Water	Panj	Panj
Gold	Sonnikey	Suna
Silver	Rûp	Rappa
Wheat	Jiv	Giuv
The hair	Bâl	Bâl
The eye	Auk	Awk

Mr. Hoyland held that every third gipsy word was Hindustani.

Mem.: Philanthropic endeavour travels sometimes with lamentable slowness. In the Christian Observer for June, 1809, I find a pathetic letter pleading for the spread of education among "those most miserable and degraded beings, the gipsy children;" and "Fraternicus" in the same journal states that so early as 1801 he had been trying to persuade gipsy parents to send their offspring to school. Seventy-eight years are a long period for a great social sore to remain unhealed.

In the matter of "a Grumbletonian." My obliging correspondent, "R. W. M.," sends me the following extract from Macaulay's "History of England," vol. iv., pp. 298-9 (original edition of 1855):—

> To omit minor distinctions, there was the great line which separated the Whig party from the Tory party; and there was the great line which separated the official men and their friends and dependents, who were sometimes called the Court party, from those who were sometimes nicknamed the Grumbletonians, and sometimes honoured with the appellation of the Country party.

I have likewise to thank another correspondent, "Colonel A——," for reference to Tony Lumpkin's soliloquy in the ale-house in "She Stoops to Conquer:"—

> Father-in-law has been calling me whelp and hound this half year. Now, if I pleased, I could be so revenged on the old Grumbletonian.

"R.W.M." also refers to Tony Lumpkin; but he pertinently asks whether the allusion is to Mr. Hardcastle's politics (of course he belonged to the "country party") or whether Tony merely wishes to call his father-in-law a grumbler.

I should have remembered Tony's soliloquy; but, as a matter of fact, I may mention that I have not seen "She Stoops to Conquer" for thirty years. It was at the Princess's, I think; and the cast comprised either James or Frederick Vining as Young Marlow, Compton as Tony Lumpkin, and the charming Miss Fortescue as Miss Hardcastle. I remember that while the heroine wore the due hoop, patches, powder, and lace lappets of the eighteenth century, Young Marlow was attired in the blue frock-coat, fawn-coloured trousers, satin stock, and varnished boots of 1842-3. We manage differently now with respect to the costumes worn in "genteel comedy:" indeed, I fancy that we pay a little too much attention to the dresses and decoration of the stage, to the detrimental neglect of good plays and good actors.

I hope that the brilliant success at the Lyceum of Mr. Henry Irving's impersonation of Sir Edward Mortimer in the "Iron Chest" will obtain a revival of popularity for the wonderful novel on which George Colman the younger's wishy-washy drama is founded; or rather from which it was impudently stolen by the playwright, who had the assurance to boast that he had taken Godwin's common ground and fenced it in for his own use. I have a certain bookshelf, the whereabout of which I try to ignore when I have a long spell of work to do. It is to me as perilously tempting a shelf as an open cupboard containing pots of jam is to Master Tommy, aged six. For on the bookshelf of which I speak stand "Caleb Williams," "Jane Eyre," and "Paul Ferroll." If I am indiscreet enough to take down and open any one of those three weirdly fascinating books it is all over with me, so far as the long spell of work is concerned. It comes to sitting down on the carpet and reading the book through. All those three romances inspire, in the intensest degree, terror; and there is always fascination in the terrific. It is a pity that Mr. Irving did not go to the fountain head and commission Mr. Wills or Mr. Burnand to re-dramatise "Caleb Williams," instead of contenting himself with a réchauffé of Colman's feeble melodrama.

On Tuesday last in the picturesque old churchyard at Willesden I saw peacefully laid to rest all that was mortal of Mrs. Laura Seymour, once a most delightful and deservedly popular actress: always a most amiable, genial, simple-minded lady. A select band of those who had loved and esteemed her gathered round the quiet grave in the shadow of the ancient church, both the exterior and interior of which have been made famous by the pen of Harrison Ainsworth and the etching needle of George Cruikshank. Watching the wealth of rare flowers beneath which the coffin disappeared, my thoughts went back three and forty years to the St. James's Theatre, where Mrs. Seymour, as Miss Laura Alison, made her first appearance on the stage. A beautiful, graceful, laughing girl. Hic jacet. The "two narrow words," Sir Walter Raleigh tells us, in an incomparable passage, cover all that is human.

There is no "Poet's Corner" attached to the "Echoes;" else I would willingly give insertion to some very pathetic stanzas on the death of the Prince Imperial, sent to me all the way from Auckland, New Zealand, by a courteous correspondent signing himself "Aopuri."

I went on Monday to a very novel and interesting display at the Agricultural Hall at Islington. It was called the "National Exhibition and Market," and comprised specimens of the machinery, appliances, manufactures, and products used in the licensed victuallers' and wine trades. I am not going to moralise on the scope and purport of such an exhibition, especially in view of a remarkable sermon delivered last Sunday in Westminster Abbey, in which the preacher indignantly pointed out that 73,000,000 bushels of grain were annually withdrawn from the food supply of the people, in order to be wasted in the manufacture of "destructive drink." Licensed victualling versus total abstinence is a "burning" question, and I do not treat burning questions in the "Echoes." Technically (being extremely fond of investigating industrial processes) I found the National Exhibition and Market a highly interesting one; and the lady who accompanied me was so enraptured by the sight of some elegant little machines for mashing potatoes, purifying butter, powdering sugar, and crumbing bread, that I was constrained (from pecuniary motives) to hurry away.

I did not, however, leave the hall without noticing the working of Mr. Robert Etzensberger's "Cafetière," or "Patent double-action tea and coffee filter," touching which, to avoid any suspicion of a "puff," I am glad to quote these words from Tuesday's Times:—

> The filter was in work under the hands of the patentee, and presented a decoction of coffee which, if it could be generally obtained, would be more productive of temperance than all the lectures ever delivered and pamphlets written.

To this well-earned eulogy I have nothing to add save that I have drunk coffee in most countries in the world, and that I have never tasted coffee so well flavoured and so aromatic as that produced by this machine. Mr. Robert Etzensberger (who is at present the manager of the Grand Midland Hotel, St. Pancras) is a very old friend of mine. I first knew him, long years ago, as the manager of the Hotel Victoria, at Venice; and I always try to give him a "lift" when I can, because he is a very worthy, energetic, and ingenious man.

Mem: Our natural backwardness in coffee-making is significantly illustrated when we find so clever a gentleman as Mr. Ernest Hart, in a recent homily on dietetics, published in a medical journal, solemnly rebuking the British housewife for her incapacity to "boil a cup of coffee." Now, my dear Ernest Hart! In the first place, coffee-cups are not boiled; but it must have been owing to a slip of the pen that the homilist spoke of coffee being boiled at all by any housewife who is not a barbarian. I can remember when I was a boy that the coffee-pot used to be rammed into the middle of the fire, and that when the decoction had reached boiling point the liquid used to be "cleared" by the introduction of either a bit of dried sole-skin, a morsel of isinglass, or a red-hot coal. The outcome was a grouty mess. But for at least thirty years percolating machines of some sort or another have been in general use. G. A. S.

"THE HONEYMOON AT VENICE."

The newly-married pair of lovers go to sojourn in that venerable Italian city, the ancient mistress of the Adriatic, whose fading splendours of Art, of Poetry, and of History, throw a magic glamour over its strange scenery of a stately city rising out of the sea. Here they find the local atmosphere of solemn stillness more than ever favourable to the dreamy indulgence of mutual fond endearment, gliding in a noiseless gondola across the moonlit watery floor of the placid Lagune. And here, too, as in Ireland and every other land,

> The stars above are brightly shining
> Because they 've nothing else to do.

This is, of course, all quite as it should be upon such a romantic occasion. It is only from certain details of the young gentleman's costume—his hat and coat and the cigar in his hand—that he can be recognised as a nineteenth-century Englishman. He might be some Lorenzo or Romeo, the hero of an old Italian love-tale, such as fell into the hands of our Shakspeare when he wanted a subject for the well-known stage-plays "that did so take Eliza and King James." It is, in fact, the "old, old story" of that ever young affection which preserves, or renews and refreshes, the juvenility of the world in each succeeding generation. And there is a peculiar relish, no doubt, in the repetition of this enchanting tale, which is not merely a sentimental fancy, amidst the superb palaces and churches of that old-world city, formerly so proud and rich, from which the glory of past ages has departed. Humanity, with its natural instincts and simple emotions, and essential relations of life, survives the decay of historic grandeurs, "the boast of heraldry, the pomp of power." A honeymoon at Venice may prove not less enjoyable, though all the Doges have vanished, and left but a name to bear witness of their haughty reign upon the famous Adriatic shore and sea.

The council of the Royal Irish Agricultural Society has resolved to hold the next annual show at Clonmel, and to invite the Marquis of Waterford to be president.

The annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom was resumed in Manchester on Wednesday week, Mr. Alderman Baker presiding. A paper on Special Collections of Books in Lancashire and Cheshire formed the subject of a discussion. The Mayor of Salford entertained the members of the association at dinner in the evening. The conference concluded on Thursday. The report of the committee on title entries was remitted to the committee, with whom Mr. Bullen and Mr. Garnett, of the British Museum, were requested to confer. The further report of the committee on a general catalogue of English literature was read and adopted. The Rev. H. O. Coxe, Bodleian Library, Oxford, was appointed president for the ensuing year, and it was resolved that the next meeting should be held at Edinburgh.

NUTTING.

When leaves are colouring and the air is calm and all around you is but woodland beauty, by far the pleasantest of autumn pleasures is to go "a-nutting" with some country cousins. That rout amongst the hazels has a charm—and one most musical, of rippling laughter—for, as boughs where clusters hang are seized in haste by each one there, till nuts, thus grasped at, drop through briar and bracken, the very manner of the merry girls gives you, too, true enjoyment.

There is a time for nutting, and a special day, the day of Holy Rood, when, clad in the "nutting-dress" they have worn each year, the village lads and lasses troop away to woods and copses, and to shaws and hangers, to chase the bead-eyed squirrels through the trees, and pull down nuts together. This custom was, at one time, much pursued, and it lingers yet in some outlying places, where it will be much missed this year, as, though "the pendent catkins and the crimson threads" came duly in profusion, the nuts when formed soon withered, died, and dropped. Through that love for nutting which the rustics have the nuts are almost always got too soon; but where they can be kept from busy fingers till the leaves of the hazel are golden-hued and the rooks are patching their nests for winter—which is early in October—you will gather them when they are thoroughly ripe and have got the true nut flavour. They will then keep sound and good, and be fit for those mystical rites of the "Nutcrack Night" which are held on All Hallows Eve.

This divination by the aid of nuts—which still is common in some rural districts—was practised elsewhere, as we are told by Burns and Brand. Thus the latter says, in his "Popular Antiquities," "It is a custom in Ireland, when the young women would know if their lovers are faithful, to put their nuts upon the bars of the grate, naming the nuts after the lovers. If a nut cracks or jumps, the lover will prove unfaithful; if it begins to blaze or burn, he has a regard for the person making the trial. If the nuts, named after the girl and her lover, burn together, they will then be married." Like testimony, too, is borne by Burns, in his poem of "Halloween," where we read that "mony lads' and lasses' fates are there that nicht decided." If, however, the growth is as short in those countries as it is this year in England, there will be but few nuts to crack when that "night" comes round.

But, though it is such a very bad year with the woodland nuts, there are plenty of "garden-grown;" and in Kent, on the "nut-farms," the crop is good. Three sorts seem to be preferred there—namely, the "Atlas" filbert, as the largest clusterer; the "Cosford" nut, for an early ripener; and the far-famed "Kentish cob," as the best for keeping; and they grow them in this way.

Strong plants being procured at the highest price, they are set—unless they are intended for espaliers or pyramids—at fifteen feet apart, in well-trenched orchards, and gradually trained into a saucer shape, so that the rim, at bearing-time, shall be four feet high, when the currant and gooseberry trees which have been grown between them are removed to let in the light and air, and to give further space for spreading; and when once a nut farm is fairly formed there are few crops that pay much better, a ton per acre being the normal growth, and its value £50. Now, as the nuts thus grown have pot-fruit over them, in the shape of pears and apples—and, at thirty feet apart, there are forty-eight trees growing on each acre there—it will at once be seen how it helps out price; and that, with the usual yield of from twenty to thirty bushels per tree—good selling sorts, such as the "Ribston pippin," "golden nobs," and "Hessel" pears—every acre of ground thus fruit-grown in Kent must, in an average year, give a good return for outlay; the more so as, from its nearness to the London market, fruit is delivered from Maidstone and its vicinity at 6d. per bushel. The men of Kent, however, deserve success, for they blend skill with capital in careful pruning, and there is no cleaner land in England.

Now, a wild-nut copse holds money, too, as each hazel there is useful; for, as its growth is rapid and its habit strong, divers things can be soon made with it, such as hoops, crates, hurdles, sticks, and rods, as also rustic seats and fancy baskets, for which both peeled and unpeeled twigs are often used, to form, with barks of varied hues, geometric patterns.

The ancients called walnuts "the nuts of Jove;" and from their extreme fondness for them we can readily imagine that "across the walnuts and the wine" their "after-dinner talk" went well. We English, too, are so fond of nuts that it may with truth be said we are a nut-eating nation; for when filberts, walnuts, or the homely chestnut are not at hand, we can put up contentedly with other sorts, Brazil, or cocoa-nuts, or even commoner—plain Spanish or Barcelonas. Though, if respective sales are tests, walnuts are those which most prefer, and no better can be found than those in Surrey. "For nuts," they say, "try Kent; for walnuts, Surrey;" and so well do the latter grow on Surrey soil, that it was noted for them in the time of Fuller, who remarked, in 1660, when writing of Beddington and its pretty park, where walnuts abounded and a trout-stream ran, that it was "as if Nature had there observed the rule of physic, 'post pisces, nuces,' after fish, nuts." For Beddington Park walnuts there was a great demand, as they were very fine and thin-shelled; and at Croydon October three-days' fair vast quantities were sold, and under that name they are still sold there, though the trees in that park have been now cut down.

Walnut-trees now are but seldom reared, as they take so long to come to maturity; but two most excellent sorts to grow are the "St. Jean" and the "Dwarf Prolific," as the latter will bear when but three feet high, and the former is never in leaf till June; hence late frosts cannot affect it. Young walnut-trees are touched by frost, but old ones bear it, unless—as in 1860, when many perished—the degree of cold is excessive. The walnut forms a good forest tree, as it has a head of wide dimensions; and there are some very fine trees round London; though for girth we must go to those manor-houses where such trees were often planted by men who stayed on their farms for years, in the days of old ways and customs. Such trees attained to the grandest size, and to a bulk that few would credit—even to seventy feet high and to eight feet round. Large trees of long growth have the greatest value for cabinet furniture and for the best gun-stocks. "Black" walnut-wood, which takes such a high polish, and is so charmingly grained, comes chiefly from America, and the commoner sorts from the Black Sea coast.

With respect to the walnut of St. Jean, as it does not show for leaf until quite mid-June, it should obtain, we think, more notice, as much, indeed, as "that wonderful walnut-tree that blowed on St. Barnaby's day," and shared, at Glastonbury, the holy honours of "the Holy Thorn," for both grew there, as we are told in Hearne's "Antiquities." This tree, in fact, was such a wonder that the Bishop of Bath and Wells—Dr. James Montague—thought a branch of it worth the acceptance of King James's consort. Fuller—who was reproved by Dr. Heylin for his doubts—discredited the "miracle;" but could he come again to Kent in June he would see on "St. Barnabas' day" just the same thing there; and as slips of "the Wonderful Walnut-tree" were sold and stolen, those late "St. Jean's" perchance might be the stunted "scions" of that very tree.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The last days of the Newmarket First October Meeting were very fine and warm, and, as the sport was generally good, two very enjoyable days were spent on the Heath. The Snailwell Stakes confirmed the idea that Sabella has quite lost her early form, and Gil Blas won very cleverly from Maid of Orleans. Valentino (8 st. 9 lb.) performed in capital style in the Second Nursery Stakes, for which Orchestra (7 st. 13 lb.) was a great favourite, but could only get third. There was a strong numerical opposition to Bend Or for a Triennial Produce Stake, yet odds of 4 to 1 were freely laid upon the unbeaten crack, and The Song, who ran him to a length, was only allowed to get so near upon sufferance. The October Handicap is famous for its surprises, and this year Sir John Astley appears to have been about the only backer of Fortitude (6 st. 2 lb.); Lord Clive (8 st. 2 lb.) ran very fairly well, but Thurio (8 st. 9 lb.), who was the great public fancy, was only a moderate third. Fortitude is engaged in the Cambridgeshire, but the 10 lb. penalty he has incurred will probably extinguish his chance, as Lord Clive appears to hold him quite safe. The concluding race of the day was a match over the last two miles of the Cesarewitch Course, in which Sir John Astley rode his own horse, Drumhead, against Mr. Gretton's Solomon, with Mr. Bevill in the saddle. The weights were 16 st. 10 lb. each; and it is not surprising, therefore, that Drumhead broke down a long way from home. Such matches can hardly be called sport; indeed, they border so closely upon cruelty to animals that we hope we have seen the last of them.

The first race on the Friday was the most important of the week, for Bay Archer, in receipt of 7 lb., fairly wore down Rayon d'Or in the St. Leger Stakes, and beat him at last by three parts of a length. Certainly, the D.I. is about the worst course in England for a horse that is giving away weight, and the French crack has never been partial to a hill; still, we doubt if he is at all the same horse that won such a splendid victory at Doncaster. At the same time, the result of this race considerably discounts the Cesarewitch prospects of Discord, and has naturally turned general attention to the pretensions of Lansdown, who is believed to be much superior to his stable-companion Bay Archer at their respective weights. Hackthorpe (9 st. 12 lb.) was not stopped even by his welter weight over the Rous course; and soon afterwards Bend Or was pulled out again for the Rous Memorial Stakes, and won even more easily than on the previous day, as Mask, who was heavily backed, cut up badly. Robert the Devil beat the pair opposed to him in the First October Two-Year-Old Stakes with scarcely an effort; and it will be interesting to see how this good-looking youngster acquits himself when opposed to animals of better class than those that he has met up the present time.

On Monday afternoon John Higgins and Robert Watson Boyd sculled over the Thames championship course for £400. The pair have met four times previously, the former having been successful upon three occasions. Both men have adopted the American system of a long slide and swivel rowlocks; but Boyd seems to have accommodated himself to these innovations far more readily than his opponent, whose stroke was short and snatchy. The result was that, after the first two hundred yards, the northerner had the race in hand, and eventually won as he liked by four lengths. Higgins, who is now thirty-six years of age, has, doubtless, seen his best day. Henry Thomas and Joseph Cannon met over the same course for £100 a side on Tuesday. The race was a grand one up to Hammersmith Bridge, at which point Cannon's cutter, which was most inefficiently manned, had dropped helplessly astern, and he steered such a bad course that, in spite of the gamest efforts, he was defeated by four lengths.

The race for the long-distance championship of the world was concluded at Madison's Avenue Gardens, New York, on Saturday evening last. For the second time Rowell, of Cambridge, proved successful, covering a distance of 530 miles, which would have been much increased had he not been seriously ill on the fifth day, and lost a great deal of ground. The first prize, including the share of the gate money, will amount to upwards of £5000. We append the full score of the competitors:—

Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P. for Whitby, distributing the prizes at the Hawarden Grammar School, addressed the audience on the advantages of a varied education.

We learn from a Parliamentary paper issued on Tuesday that the Indian Council was equally divided on the question of approving the reduction of the Indian cotton duties by the Viceroy, and that the motion in approval of the action of the latter was carried by the casting vote of the Secretary of State. The dissenting members embodied their objections in minutes now published, and Sir H. Maine and General R. Strachey drew up similar papers in justification of the course pursued.

On Wednesday morning the five directors of the City of Glasgow Bank, who have completed their term of eight months' imprisonment, were liberated from Ayr gaol. At a meeting of the liquidators of the City of Glasgow Bank on Tuesday it was resolved that a further dividend of 3s. 4d. in the pound (making 13s. 4d. in all) be paid to the creditors of the bank on the 17th inst.—The late West of England Bank creditors will be paid a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound early in November. This will raise the total payments to 16s. 6d. in the pound, leaving a balance of 3s. 6d. still unpaid.

The third party of tenant farmers who have gone out this year at the invitation of the Canadian Government to ascertain the advantages which the Dominion presents as a field for settlement, left the Mersey last week by the Allan steamer Sarmatian. They represent portions of Scotland, and the northern, eastern, and western counties of England. A large number of others, who have been deterred from sailing in consequence of the lateness of the harvest, have signified their intention to go out next spring. A pioneer party of about seventy farmers from Sweden also sailed by the same steamer, their destination being the province of Manitoba; and if the movement should prove successful they will be joined by 600 others from the same country in the spring.

Dr. Siemens, who gave the prizes yesterday week to the students of the Liverpool School of Science, congratulated the school upon its numbers and success, the Whitworth Scholarship having been gained for the fifth time. Dr. Siemens spoke upon the importance of scientific education, and expressed his belief that soon England would not be behind France and other countries of the Continent in institutions for this purpose. Every school of science should possess a mechanical laboratory; and he promised to place a testing-machine for metals at the disposal of the Liverpool school, and to give an annual prize for the best essay upon the physical conditions of materials used in the constructive arts. The Mayor presided.

THE MEDICAL SCHOOLS.

The opening of the medical schools in connection with the various metropolitan hospitals took place on Wednesday afternoon.

Dr. Sidney Coupland performed the same office at Middlesex Hospital; and, in bidding a hearty welcome to those who that day entered upon the arduous but pleasant study of medicine, pointed out the principles by which they should be guided. They must not be discouraged, he said, by the multiplicity of studies to which they were required to give attention, but remember that others before them had overcome what appeared to be almost impossible. He insisted on the acquisition of studious habits immediately, otherwise medicine had better be abandoned for some more congenial pursuit. Lectures, he said, were useful for explanatory purposes, and, therefore, should be regularly attended; and of greater value still was that practical study, anatomy, for example, which entered so largely into their curriculum, and operated as a mental training, in addition to the intrinsic value of the subject. Physiology and chemistry he also referred to in similar terms, but warned the students against rushing into specialism prematurely. He recommended work in couples, and showed the importance of tutorial questioning, by which students would learn their weak points. With regard to hospital work, he remarked that if the world at large would realise the fact that in providing the means of medical education hospitals fulfilled as sacred a duty as in affording shelter and relief to the sick poor, motives of self-interest might urge those to support those institutions who were not stirred by feelings of charity. The work of the student in the hospital was manifold. He had, in the first place, to acquire dexterity; he had then to exercise his senses in the special diagnosis of disease, to train his judgment and to learn the action of remedies. But he must not only learn to observe, he must learn to record. The habit of note-taking was not merely useful as an aid to memory, but it might be turned to great advantage in the future in recording observations for the benefit of the profession at large. Diligent attendance in the special departments and in the post-mortem room was enforced, in addition to the work of the hospital ward, for all this afforded opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of disease such as would not occur again. The lecturer next adverted to the subject of examinations, which exercised so great an influence on teaching, and confined his remarks to the University of London and the three other metropolitan licensing bodies. He urged his hearers, after passing these tests, not to be too eager to throw off the student life, but to continue for some time perfecting their knowledge either at home or abroad. Residential medical appointments were now of the greatest value. A few words were said as to recreation, the legitimate pursuit of which was absolutely necessary, and the two errors into which all students were apt to fall—viz., ill-regulation of diet and late working at night—were deprecated. Steady persistence was the ideal of study, as opposed to spasmodic and vigorous efforts. After pointing out that the students had worthy examples to follow in the earnest pursuit of their profession, the lecturer concluded by assuring them that, although their labour might not lead to much material prosperity, and although the pursuit of medicine brought with it great responsibilities and all they entailed, yet it brought with it much that compensated for them to those who followed it with their whole heart.

On Tuesday the annual meeting of the Scottish Permissive Bill Association was opened in Glasgow, a large number of persons being present.

The citizens of Londonderry have rejected by 200 votes to 169 a proposal to tax themselves for the maintenance of a school of art.

The court of inquiry into the loss of the Brest has ordered the suspension of Captain Elder's certificate for six months, but granted him a chief mate's certificate during that time.

The Mayor of Newport, Monmouthshire, has presented to eight of the men who volunteered to explore the workings of the Abercarne Colliery, after the explosion in September last year, the Albert Medals of the first and second class.

The Miranda, a sister ship to the gun-boat Phœnix, which was launched a fortnight ago, was launched on Tuesday at Devonport, in the presence of the Lords of the Admiralty. The ceremony of naming was performed by Lady Lopes.

The first turf of a new reservoir at Eccup, near Leeds, which will practically complete the Leeds Waterworks scheme, was cut on Monday. The reservoir will embrace an area of 195 acres, and will contain fourteen hundred millions of gallons of water. The estimated cost is about £80,000.

The Scotsman says that Mr. David Hunter, who has been for twenty years assistant-superintendent of the North British Railway, has received from the Secretary of State for the Colonies the appointment of general manager of the Natal Government railways.

A correspondent courteously sets us right in the spelling of a name in our last issue. Mr. Charles J. Kickham (not Kirkham, as was stated) is the name of the gentleman who has received £1200, subscribed by several prominent Irishmen and by a national subscription, "in recognition of his personal character and literary genius."

The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by members of the Horse Guards Staff and others, witnessed on Tuesday morning a sham fight by the Aldershott troops on the Foxhills and their vicinity. The idea of the operations was that a fortified post at the North Camp was expecting a valuable water convoy from Woking. The convoying guard was commanded by General Pakenham, the opposing force by General Peyton. The fight lasted two hours.

Lord Frederick Cavendish, M.P., presided yesterday week at the annual soirée of the Bradford Mechanics' Institute, and presented the prizes won by students of the institute and art-schools. The noble Lord spoke on the rapid advances which education had made during the past few years, and alluded to the advantages which the Mechanics' Institutes of the country afforded the working classes in grasping a knowledge of art and acquaintance with various sciences. His Lordship also spoke on the subject of higher education, and referred to the education given at our technical schools. The experience of the past few years had shown the value of these schools, and in establishing them they had given the English artisan an opportunity of gaining that knowledge and information which was given in the technical schools of the Continent. He trusted that the establishment of schools would be appreciated, and that they would be made a still greater success. Sir Matthew Wilson, Bart., M.P., also addressed the meeting.

POLITICAL.

Social Science has eclipsed politics for the time being. Ministers are still resting on their oars, so to speak. The Earl of Beaconsfield has been gracefully occupied in extending the hospitalities of Hughenden to one of the heroes of the Zulu Campaign, General Sir Evelyn Wood, who, it may be remarked in passing, on Tuesday evening repaid the Fishmongers' Company for their sumptuous entertainment by delivering an address, which, if coloured with a soldier's appreciation of Sir Bartle Frere's policy, may be pronounced a most interesting record of the many acts of valour which retrieved the disasters of the late war. Reverting to the Prime Minister, an apparently authoritative answer has been made to the Marquis of Hartington's reasonable complaint that the noble Earl had at Aylesbury made no reference to foreign topics. It is now stated that his Lordship avoided entering into the state of affairs abroad, so as to afford the Marquis of Salisbury (who is expected to return from Dieppe on the 9th inst.) an opportunity of "making the speech of the season, on behalf of the Government," during his state visit with his colleagues to Manchester, on the 17th and 18th inst. On the occasion of this Conservative demonstration, the Foreign Secretary is to address the members of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and of the Conservative Club, as well as the festive meeting in the Free Trade Hall, and the popular gathering at the Pomona Gardens.

Lancashire Liberals, however, are not disposed to let their ardour cool till the middle of October. Mention has previously been made of the banquet to be given to Sir William Harcourt in Liverpool. Attention should also be called to a large out-door meeting of the Liberals of South-East Lancashire on Saturday at the Phœnix Grounds, Heywood. Close upon 12,000 people are estimated to have been present. Mr. R. N. Phillips, M.P., was in the chair, and the example he set of trenchant animadversion on the alleged faults of the Government (which received formal censure in the resolutions passed) was followed with much vigour of phrase and an uncompromising hostility of style bearing a filial resemblance to the terse English of John Bright by Mr. J. Albert Bright.

In Scotland, it is to be noted that Mr. Baxter last week made a sweeping attack on the Government at Arbroath; and we find Mr. Childers on Monday making an electioneering speech at Stow, Midlothian, on behalf of Mr. Gladstone's candidature, and delivering himself with none of the restraint and yea-nay diffidence which have characterised some of the right hon. gentleman's late utterances in the House of Commons. Mr. Childers may possibly have caught a spark of Mr. Grant Duff's fire. That inflammable orator on the same evening (the hon. member had set his face southwards, it will be observed) inveighed with undiminished energy against each phrase of the Government's foreign policy at a formidable gathering, two or three thousand strong, in the Market Hall, Newtown, Montgomery.

Lord Rosebery (with a slight pinch of patronage in his manner, presumably unavoidable on the part of a favourite of fortune so richly endowed as the noble Earl is) on Saturday assured the East-End of London that there was no reason whatever why it should be considered distinct from the West-End. On the contrary, his Lordship, addressing a meeting in St. Jude's schoolrooms, hoped that the movement for the University Education scheme would take root and flourish in the East. Good, not to say goody, words of a similar nature, but more modestly delivered, came the previous night from Lord Frederick Cavendish, M.P., at the Bradford Mechanics' Institute, his text, however, being technical education.

Mr. Parnell maintains his agricultural agitation in Ireland, having on Sunday addressed a large meeting at Tullow, whereat reduction of rent and the application of the Church surplus to the reclamation of waste lands were declared by resolutions to be necessary. On Monday Mr. Joseph Arch was the principal speaker at a meeting in Aylesbury, and it appears from what passed that the Royal Commission is to be proffered the results of a special inquiry to be instituted by the Agricultural Union concerning the farm labourers' condition.

A peaceful strain has not been wanting. Mr. H. Richard, M.P., and Mr. Peter Rylands, M.P., yesterday week addressed an assemblage in Warrington in favour of International Arbitration as the best means of settling differences between nation and nation; but yet neither hon. member could avoid saying bitter things of their political opponents savouring rather of pugilism than peace.

THE OLD ARCTIC SHIP RESOLUTE.

There are some interesting historical associations connected with H.M.S. Resolute, which was lately consigned to the breaking-up department in Chatham Dockyard. Among the numerous expeditions sent forth, during ten or twelve years, in search of Sir John Franklin's party, lost in the Arctic regions, was that for which H.M.S. Resolute, commanded by Captain Austin, R.N., and H.M.S. Assistance, Captain Ommaney, R.N., were jointly dispatched in 1850, to cruise in Lancaster Strait and around Cornwallis Island. The Resolute was again commissioned, a few years later, under Captain Kellett, R.N., to make further search in Lancaster Strait and on the coasts of Melville and Banks's Lands. Upon this occasion a portion of her crew, under Lieutenant (now Admiral) Pim, met Captain Sir Robert M'Clure and the crew of H.M.S. Investigator, which had entered Melville Sound from the Pacific Ocean, and had there been abandoned. By the relief thus afforded, M'Clure was enabled to travel on across the Arctic Region, and to return home by way of the Atlantic, thereby accomplishing the passage, though not wholly by navigation, from one ocean to the other. This was in the spring of 1853. Meantime, the fate of Sir John Franklin and his companions, in the Erebus and Terror, which had not been heard of since July, 1845, was left in suspense. It was reserved for Sir Leopold M'Clintock, or rather for Lieutenant Hobson, leader of a sledge-travelling party from the Fox, one of Lady Franklin's vessels employed in the sad quest of her lost husband, to discover the truth more than ten years after the mournful event had actually taken place. The Erebus and Terror had been deserted by their crews in April, 1848, on the north coast of King William's Land, where they had lain beset with ice from September, 1846. Sir John Franklin had died in June, 1847. The survivors, numbering a hundred men, under Captain Crozier, had started thence for Great Fish River, and there is no doubt that they perished on that journey. Such are the reminiscences of heroic, but unfortunate, adventure which recur to the mind in connection with the old hull of H.M.S. Resolute, as one of the Arctic exploring-ships in that service of looking for Sir John Franklin twenty or thirty years ago.

A Daily News telegram from Rome states that Sicily and Southern Italy were visited on Sunday night by a terrific storm. The training-ship Città di Napoli was driven into harbour at Taranto, and a railway bridge between Crucoli and Ciro was destroyed, and an express-train precipitated into the torrent beneath. The engine-driver was killed, and all the passengers more or less injured.

The Extra Supplement.

"AFTER THE TRIAL"—"MERCHANT OF VENICE."

The full title of this richly-coloured and otherwise remarkable drawing by Mr. Henry Wallis, which was noticed in one of the Exhibitions of the Old Society of Painters in Water-Colours, is "After the Trial: Antonio receives the Congratulations of his Friends." This addition to the title distinguishes the particular incident in the dénouement of the drama intended to be most prominently represented; but the story altogether is here told pictorially and with singular completeness. The artist has taken the architecture of a portion of the Ducal Palace at Venice, and by an ingenious adaptation has rendered it subservient to the purposes of his composition. This has admitted a disposition of all the various groups essential to the dramatic situation. Nor are the characteristic gestures and expressions of the individual figures less aptly discriminated. The only personage of importance absent is Shylock; but the knife and scales on the pavement are sufficient memorials of that cruel Jewish money-dealer; and it is evident that he is hardly yet out of sight and of ear-shot, for in the lower corner on the left hand three friends of Antonio are watching the baffled murderer slink away, and one of them is shouting after him some taunting gibe, perhaps relating to his promised christening. Antonio, descending the staircase, unlike his companions, is very properly habited in the plainest possible garb, as befits a man who had resigned himself to probable death. He holds forth both hands to receive the congratulations of the "troops of friends" who, as his noble character well deserved, are warmly attached to him. Behind follow, with other intimates, Gratiano, Salanio, and Salarino, his faithful debtor, the hardly less noble-minded Bassanio, for whom Antonio had risked his life, and who through his friend's aid had won the rich and beautiful heiress Portia. Above is Portia herself, in her robes, disguised as the young doctor-of-laws of Rome—"another Daniel come to judgment." At the happy termination of the trial the Duke of Venice entreats the clever supposed young doctor to come home with him to dinner. But she "humbly desires his Grace of pardon" to decline, and in doing so would probably kneel, as indicated in the picture—alleging the necessity of setting forth at once to Padua. About the Duke, or Doge, are some of the "magnificoes" of Venice; and to the left is the table of the "Court of Justice," where the trial has been held. The costumes in which the artist has chosen to attire his figures are not, as usual upon the stage, those of the English Elizabethan fashion, but are of the Venetian style, as shown in the pictures of Bellini and Carpaccio. This work of Mr. H. Wallis is an attempt to give a decorative treatment to the subject, in the manner of wall-pictures by those Italian masters.

THE ZULU WAR.

Two remaining Illustrations of the late war in South Africa, from Sketches by our Special Artist, find place in this week's publication. We have news from Capetown to the 9th ult., but it seems of little importance. Cetewayo had been brought there by sea, and was to be lodged in the Castle, with two or three wives and a few servants. Sir Garnet Wolseley had left Zululand, and was at Utrecht on the 7th, on his way to Pretoria, for the settlement of the Transvaal. The remaining hostile Zulu chiefs had surrendered, and those appointed to rule the twelve new districts had signed the requisite stipulations, promising obedience to the British Residents in North and South Zululand, and not to keep up an army or put their people to death, for witchcraft or upon other pretences, without due sentence of law. No white settlers, except missionaries, are to be allowed to hold lands in the Zulu country.

The arrangements for the disposal of the large infantry force under Sir Garnet Wolseley consequent upon the termination of hostilities in South Africa have now been made. The force consisted of fifteen battalions, of which one, the 1st Battalion 13th, has arrived, and another, the 1st Battalion 24th, may be daily expected in England. The five battalions that left home after the news of the Isandlwana disaster—viz., the 2nd Battalion 21st, 58th, 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles, 91st, and 94th, are to be retained in South Africa. Two more, the 88th and 90th, are embarking for India. The 80th, which has been abroad nearly eight years, will be ordered home soon. The 2nd Battalion of the 4th will go to Malta, the 2nd Battalion 24th and 57th to Gibraltar, the latter in place of the 71st, coming home; the 2nd Battalion of the Buffs to the Straits Settlements, allowing the 74th to come home; while the 99th will take the place at Bermuda of the 46th, which has been for three years at that station.

GENERAL SIR EVELYN WOOD, V.C., ON THE ZULU CAMPAIGN.

Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood was on Tuesday evening entertained at a banquet by the Fishmongers' Company, together with his uncle, Lord Hatherley, Colonel Pearson, C.B., Major Leet, V.C., Lieutenant Lysons, and other distinguished personages—Mr. Blewitt, Prime Warden, in the chair. We quote the eloquent speech made by Sir Evelyn Wood in answer to the toast of his health:—

"Mr. Prime Warden, my Lords, and Gentlemen,—I thank you heartily for the honour you do me to-night, and I thank you not only for myself but in the names of the comrades whom you honour in honouring me. As a soldier—and I prefer that title to any other—it would be as improper for me to praise my late gallant chief, Lord Chelmsford, as it would be to criticise his military operations. I may, however, speak of him as a friend, and, therefore, I say that the successes which you so generously appreciate were due in the first instance to the confidence Lord Chelmsford reposed in me, to the support he ever accorded me, and to his stanch friendship, which nothing has been able to shake. There is nothing selfish in Lord Chelmsford. Self in him is entirely subordinate to his zeal for the public service; and, as you approve of my services, you should credit him with the perspicuity which utilised them, and you should sympathise with my gratitude to him for having had the courage of his confidence at a period when a smaller mind might have hesitated to allow such large discretionary powers as I possessed to one who was, professionally speaking, a young General. Lord Chelmsford was frequently absent from Maritzburg when employed in visiting the lower frontier between Zululand and Natal; and at such times I was in constant communication with the greatest High Commissioner South Africa has yet possessed—the greatest not only in his experience of barbarian peoples, but in unflinching courage and rectitude of purpose.

"To Sir Bartle Frere I owe much. The trust he placed in me was the means not only of winning over some valuable allies, but of neutralising many colonists of Dutch extraction who would have otherwise swelled the number of the discontented Boers who assembled near Pretoria to protest against our rule. I remember well the sense of intense relief amongst the colonists after a period of some doubt, when it was understood Sir Bartle Frere was to remain in South Africa. It has been stated that the colonists are cruel, bloodthirsty men, more anxious to advance their own interests than to assist in civilising the natives, and that Sir Bartle Frere is supported by them because he originated a war policy which was financially profitable to the colonists. His strongest admirers are those who have had most opportunities of seeing him—the inhabitants of Cape Colony, who have reaped as much benefit by the war near Natal as the inhabitants of Paris could from a war in Aberdeenshire. The colonists in Natal are mostly emigrants of the first generation from our islands, our own flesh and blood, with feelings like those who honour our soldiers. These colonists are painfully sensitive to the misconception which has prevailed generally as to their conduct. The men who made money by the war can be counted on one's fingers, and, being always on the main roads, were more noticeable than the unobtrusive but more agreeable settlers in the remoter districts. Before I went out I did not know a single colonist. Now I know many—men who left lucrative professions and charming families to serve, as did Theophilus Shepstone, for eight months as a Captain of Basutos, and I am proud of being termed by him a friend. I have marched over 2000 miles; I have visited farms innumerable; and I assert that the colonists as a rule treat their black servants with as much consideration as we do our domestics here. To be respected by such colonists, then, is in itself a marked tribute of esteem; but it is impossible for anyone to be associated with Sir Bartle Frere without being deeply impressed by his intellect and his humanity, and our sons will find in the prosperity of South Africa a grand recompense for our losses, and a justification of the policy which inaugurated a civilised rule in place of a destructive and barbarous despotism.

"While gratefully acknowledging your welcome to-night, my thoughts naturally revert to the, alas! many gallant friends who have accompanied me back in memory only. Ronald Campbell, of the Coldstreams, who gave his unselfish life up for others when he dashed forward into a cavern until, touched by a Zulu's gun, he fell a voluntary sacrifice, instantly avenged by two brave boys—Lieutenant Lysons and Private Fowler, of the 90th Light Infantry—who, undaunted by Campbell's fate, ran in and slew Campbell's slayers. The united ages of these lads scarcely exceeds my own. So you will not wonder that I retain considerable confidence in 'our boys,' and do not believe the race has deteriorated in fighting power. I was, however, unusually fortunate in my comrades. The 13th Light Infantry and the 80th, which joined me in time for Ulundi, were composed of veteran soldiers, while the 90th Light Infantry, which corps I have yet the honour to command, is remarkable for its excellent non-commissioned officers. Such was the spirit in the corps that when, in 1877, the battalion was ordered to South Africa for the Gaika war many non-commissioned officers who were entitled to join the Reserve, and who had in several cases obtained promises of situations in private life, sought and obtained permission to remain with the colours. These men have been loyal and efficient assistants to those gallant officers under whom our 'short service' lads have done many long days of work. They bore privation and endured fatigue with a cheery readiness I can never forget, and when on that glorious 29th of March 24,000 Zulus measured their strength for some five hours against our 1800 men, the veteran 13th, the younger 9th, Tremlett's gunners, and Buller's horsemen, young and old, upheld equally the traditions of our arms.

"I will not dwell long on sad reflections to-night, but, while thanking you for the compliment you are paying the flying column through its leader, I must recal some who, having died in your service, deserve to live in your memory. Robert Barton, another Coldstream, who, 'brave as he was humane,' when last seen alive, was endeavouring to save a comrade from the remorseless foe; Llewellyn Lloyd, my interpreter, brave, wise, and kind, of whom I had previously reported that 'he possessed every attribute of an English gentleman,' and who was shot down at my side; Lieutenant C. Williams, of the 58th Regiment, a volunteer, who was slain when rallying Uharnu's men, in company with Charles Potter, the sole hope of his parents, a gallant and intelligent colonial officer, beloved by the natives, by whom he was known only as 'Charlie'; Nicholson, the enthusiastic yet imperturbable Lieutenant of artillery, who, scorning the shelter of the breastwork thrown up to cover his gun, was shot through the body and mortally wounded; Private Grosvenor, of the 13th Light Infantry, who, remaining behind to save a sergeant, did so at the cost of his own life; Private Uys, that grand Dutchman to whom I promised in England's name the protection of his children, of which their father's death in our service has deprived them; Sergeant McAllen, of the 90th Light Infantry, who, after having his first wound dressed, hurried out to rejoin his company in an exposed position, where he fell dead; the gallant Saltmarshe, who died at the head of his company in the Gaika war; the no less gallant Corporal Hillier, who met his death in snatching his captain's body from the Gaikas; Arthur Bright, whose lovable qualities are ever on my mind—these soldiers of my regiment, and many of other corps, in the manner of their death have emphatically contradicted the ignorant assertion that the war in South Africa was one in which no honour was to be gained.

"In remembering these spirits, and that gallant youth, the son of England's ally, whose widowed mother is now our honoured guest, and whose body gave a noble answer to the query, 'Had he his wounds in front?' I may say, as Rosse says to Siward in 'Macbeth,'

> Your son, my Lord, has paid a soldier's debt.
> He only liv'd but till he was a man.
> The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
> In the unshrinking station where he fought,
> But like a man he died.

'Why, then,' was the response, 'God's soldier be he!' And I will add with him who said that,

> Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
> I would not wish them to a fairer death.

"My thoughts brighten when I revert to the living, and I think with pleasure of my friend here, Pearson. May he pardon me when I call him by his South African name, 'The Bulldog of Ekowe." I think of D'Arcy, of the Frontier Light Horse, who so nearly lost his life in trying to rescue a wounded comrade; I think of Sergeant Jeff and Private Greyham standing over their wounded Captain; I think of Sergeant Smith, who, when both his officers were lying sorely stricken and senseless, bravely commanded the company of the 90th Infantry; I think of the rank and the file who marched with me many hundreds, nay, thousands, of miles, who were loyal and untiring, and, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, withal a Christian soldiery. I am aware it has been said we lifted many cattle, committed much arson. I plead guilty. As regards the cattle, they are in Africa the sinews of war. Some uninformed people have not only blamed us for destroying the enemy's military kraals, but have asserted that such a proceeding was useless, as the kraals were of no practical importance. The truth is that the military kraal to the Zulu is as much a rallying point, a badge of honour to be retained, or a symbol of disgrace if lost, as the colours are for which men in Europe give and take hecatombs of lives. From the days of the Battle of the Standard to that late sorrowful hour when Coghill, leaving his vantage-point, swam back to bear company in death with Melvill, going down under the bloody waters of the Buffalo honourably encumbered with the Queen's colours, there has always been an ideal value attached to certain objects in war. We have been accused of inhumanity. I have denied this charge officially for my troops and for myself. I can assure you that the only Zulu I personally chastised was one who declined to help us to carry a decrepit woman from a mountain where she must have starved; and when I tell you it was the man's mother, you will pardon this practical effort to induce the heathen to honour his parent. The Flying Column is broken up. Captain Woodgate, impassive as a rock under the hottest fire; the brave surgeons—Reilly, Connolly, and Browne—who, exposed to a storm of bullets, tenderly cared for our wounded; Major Hackett, one of the ablest and bravest officers, who, directing his men to take cover, himself walked erect amidst a hail of missiles, until one wounded him so cruelly; Beresford, Browne, Leet, and Buller, are now well-known names, and I am proud to claim them as comrades. You all know how they gained their crosses. In each case they carried off soldiers who must else have fallen under the Zulu assegais. You probably do not know, however, that when Major Leet took up on a tired pony the double burden, he incurred a double risk, for he went into the fight so crippled by a sprained knee that, once dismounted, he could not have made an effort to escape.

"You have all heard of the valour of my right-hand man; but I, perhaps, alone can realise the full value of his services. Careful of his men's lives, reckless of his own, untiring and unflinching in the performance of duty, we owed much of our success to his brilliant leadership of the mounted men. To his devoted friendship I owe more than I can express. Men learn to know each other well on active service, and I have not known a better friend nor better soldier than Redvers Buller. These, my comrades, are all dispersed. Some are still serving under that splendid soldier, Sir Garnet Wolseley, and they are fortunate, for no leader has ever before so succeeded in drawing under him men of promise. The story of a bloody and selfish despotism has ended with the clever capture of Cetewayo by my friend, Major Marter, and our courageous Ashantee scout, Lord Gifford. Our eighteen months' hard living, hard marching, and hard fighting is over. To you at home our thanks are due. You inspire our best actions, your blame is what we fear more than assegais. You have found men, money, and munitions; your sympathy in the Zulu war has been an electric current; your welcome repays us for the hardships and misfortunes of war.

"I am aware I owe much to your spontaneous kindness to-night, much to the fact that I am the grandson of Matthew Wood, a name synonymous with truth, justice, unswerving honour, and courage. It would be impertinent in me to praise his son and my uncle, Lord Hatherley, but I must avow I am very proud of being his nephew, and I am sure he prizes very highly with me the honour you have done me this evening. For this I thank you, not only for myself, but in the name of those gallant soldiers, Imperial and colonial, Dutchmen and natives, who during a time of exceptional anxiety worked so harmoniously together for the good of the service, and in the interests of our great country."

Lord Hatherley proposed "The Prime Warden," who returned thanks. There were afterwards loud calls for Colonel Pearson, but the gallant officer, having risen to respond, simply expressed his sense of the honour which he had received in being invited to come there that evening with General Wood.

THE CRUISE OF H.M.S. BACCHANTE.

This ship, on board of which are the two sons of the Prince of Wales, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, having been a week at Portland, for boat and drill exercise of her crew, departed from that harbour on Thursday week under sail for Gibraltar, and thence to Port Mahon, Isle of Majorca, there beginning her cruise in the Mediterranean. She will arrive at Port Mahon probably on the 12th, and leave on the 18th, arriving at Palermo on the 23rd and departing on the 30th. Her subsequent dates are:—Gibraltar, arrival Nov. 8, departure 15th; Madeira, arrival 22nd, departure 29th; Teneriffe, arrival Dec. 1, departure 6th; and Barbadoes, arrival Dec. 20, departure 27th.

The Bacchante was commissioned on July 5, and her commanding officer, Captain Lord Charles Scott, a son of the Duke of Buccleuch, is reported to be well satisfied with the performances of his fine-looking ship. The principal dimensions of the Bacchante are:—Length between perpendiculars, 280 ft.; extreme breadth, 45 ft.; depth in hold, 15 ft 7 in.; draught of water forward, 20 ft. 7 in.; and draught of water aft, 23 ft. 3 in. Her horse-power is 5250 indicated; and her weight, now that she is fully equipped, is 4100 tons. Her engines were manufactured by Messrs. Rennie. The following is a list of the Bacchante's officers:—Captain Lord Charles T. M. D. Scott; Commander George W. Hill; Lieutenants the Hon. Assheton G. Curzon Howe, John W. Osborne, Charles H. Tuesday's Gazette announces the appointment of Mr. Charles Cameron Lees, C.M.G., Lieutenant-Governor of the Gold Coast Colony, to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Island of Labuan and its Dependencies.

Lord Fitzhardinge has informed his tenants by circular that he has determined to reduce all the rents in his estate which have been raised since 1855 to the amounts at which they stood in that year; Sir Joseph Bailey, M.P., who possesses an extensive estate in Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, has, on the application of his tenants, postponed his rent-day indefinitely; and Mr. Joseph Biggar, of Belfast (father of Mr. G. Biggar, M.P.), has granted to his tenants on his Forthill estate, county Antrim, a concession of twenty per cent in their rents.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

There is no doubt, the Volunteer Service Gazette believes, that the unpopular regulation as to compulsory retirement of volunteers at fifty years of age will be modified by next month's circulars.

The annual prize-meeting of No. 2 (Captain Holloway's) Company of the St. George's was held at the Scrubbs range on Thursday week, in most unfavourable weather, rain falling heavily and wind blowing in heavy gusts. There was a handsome list of prizes, consisting principally of silver plate, presented, among others, by Mr. J. H. Foster, Messrs. Basil Woodd and Sons, Mr. H. Rawlings, and Mr. Reginald Cocks, the total value being upwards of £100. About forty competitors entered, under the command of Captain Holloway, who has been connected with the St. George's since its formation, twenty years since. In the first series Private Greaves won the first prize and the company badge—a bronze shield; Private C. Thornton the second; Private D. Smith and Captain Johnson the third and fourth. The other winners in the series were Messrs. W. Hearne, W. Hannes, Andrews, Young, Jamieson, Butt, F. Wallis, J. Brown, Holloway, Rose, Lindsay, Turner, Coram, R. Barber, Beeching, J. Hains, Chapman, Murrell, Thornton, Robinson, R. J. Durham, J. Chapman, Bentley, and Fairweather. Of the second series the first, of £4, was won by Sergeant Beeching; the second, of £4, by Quartermaster Andrews; the third and fourth by Privates W. Hanns and D. Smith; the fifth and sixth by Privates A. J. Brown and C. Thornton; and the remainder, ranging in value from £2 10s. to £1, by Messrs. Rose, Murrell, G. Chapman, Jamieson, Thornton, and Holloway.

Last Saturday the competition for the prizes of the London Rifle Brigade Regimental Association took place at the City Ranges, Rainham. The Gold Badge was won by Captain Earl Waldegrave. Corporal Rothon, Sergeant Hall, Private Sanderson, Private Lintott, and Private Hayton were also among the prize-winners.

The prize-meeting of No. 5 (Captain Sack's) battery of the 2nd Middlesex (H.M. Customs) Artillery took place at Purfleet, the chief prizes being carried off by Sergeant May, Gunner Boyle, and Corporal Rickard.

There was an interesting competition at Plumstead for the Regimental Repository Prizes of the 9th Kent Artillery, Captain Hughes's detachment taking first place, and that of Sergeant-Major Ely second. The contest for the War Office Cup, by members of the South Middlesex Rifles, was also one of the day's events, but the conclusion of the competition was postponed.

A rifle-match between representative teams of the 2nd battalion Scots Guards and the 2nd battalion Coldstream Guards took place on Thursday week at Wormwood-scrubbs. The Scots Guards scored 850, the Coldstreams 802.

THE NEW UNIVERSITY AT ADELAIDE.

A description has reached us of the building for the University of Adelaide, the foundation-stone of which was laid a few weeks ago by Sir W. F. D. Jervois, Governor of South Australia.

It occupies an area having a frontage to North-terrace of 84 ft., by a depth on the western side of 135 ft., and on the eastern side of 151 ft. On the ground floor there are a lady students' room, a male students' room, and the professors' rooms. Opening from the staircase hall and corridor on the west side is a suite of rooms for the professor of natural science, consisting of a lecture-room affording accommodation for 150 students. Behind the lecture-room are the preparing and weighing rooms and the chemical laboratory. East of the chemical laboratory is the museum. On the eastern side of the building is provided rooms for the professor of mathematics. An electrical room is placed under the optical room, and is connected by a special staircase with the physical laboratory. The first floor contains the library, extending entirely across the front of the building. The ceiling is elaborately panelled in wood. This room will, no doubt, serve as an examination hall until the requirements of the university necessitate something more ambitious. On this floor there are lecture-rooms for the professors of English literature and classics.

The building is designed in the modern Gothic style. The principal front has an altitude of 46 ft. The stonework of the front is finished with a cornice and pierced parapet above, the angles being marked by octagonal turrets. The front or ground floor has four two-light windows, with columns of brown-coloured stone; and the principal doorway in the centre is protected by an open stone porch, with clustered pillars of red stone at the entrance, and rich carved work on the cornice and elsewhere. The porch projects 12 ft., and forms a balcony above, opening from the library. The front, or principal portion of the building, is to be executed in Sydney white stone, having rubbed surfaces. Bands of dark tinted stone are introduced in the height and in the arches of the window openings. Encaustic tiles also assist in the decoration of the fronts.

The amount of the contract is £24,736, and the date for the final completion of the building is July 1, 1881. A portion of the building is to be completed and ready for occupation by Dec. 1, 1880.

The Lords of the Admiralty have sanctioned the proposals of the Engineers and torpedo officers of Portsmouth to have a sham naval battle off Spithead on the night of Oct. 16.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi. Mr. Richard Lewis, secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, rewards amounting to £137 were granted to the crews of life-boats for services rendered during the past month. The Cardigan life-boat saved the crew of three men from the schooner Ellen, of Beaumaris. The Blyth and Newbiggin life-boats have rendered most valuable assistance to the fishing-boats on that part of the coast, which had been overtaken by a sudden and severe gale from the south, accompanied by a high sea. They guided most of the boats safely in, and the Blyth life-boat also towed one disabled coble, with a crew of six men on board, into harbour, and saved the crew of four men from another boat which had been driven on the Seaton sea rock. The Newbiggin life-boat was also the means of saving seven men from the schooner Union T., of Amble. The Cadgewith life-boat was instrumental in saving forty persons, some of them little children, on the occasion of the stranding of the steamer Brest near the Lizard. The silver medal of the institution and its thanks inscribed on vellum were voted to five ladies—the Misses Prideaux Brune and Miss Laura O'Shaughnessy—in acknowledgment of their intrepid and prompt services in proceeding through a rough sea in their rowing-boat, and saving, at considerable risk of life, an exhausted sailor from a boat which had been capsized by a squall of wind off Bray Hill, Padstow Harbour, on Aug. 9. The thanks of the institution were also presented to the Hon. J. G. P. Vereker and Samuel Bate for picking up by means of their fishing smack a boy who had been thrown into the sea from the capsized boat. Other rewards were also granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coast, and payments amounting to £2460 were made on some of the 270 life-boat establishments of the institution. A new life-boat has just been forwarded to Fleetwood.

The committee expressed their deep regret at the death of Sir Rowland Hill and Mr. Negretti, who had both been warm friends and liberal supporters of the life-boat cause.

Reports were read from the inspectors of life-boats to the institution.

A train from Hastings for London was about to leave the Lewes station last Saturday afternoon when the boiler of the engine burst. The driver was killed and the fireman injured.

The City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education have issued their Technological Examination Programme for 1880. These examinations are carried out on much the same principle as those of the Science and Art Department in subjects of pure science. They are held through local committees in all parts of the kingdom, and facilities are afforded by which any qualified artisan may be examined in the technology of his trade, and may obtain a certificate. The subjects announced for the present year number twenty-six. The examination is in three grades:—Honours, Advanced, and Elementary, the first being intended principally for foremen, overlookers, &c.; the second for journeymen; and the third for apprentices; but candidates may enter themselves for any grade they choose. Certificates (first and second class) are awarded in each grade. Any person desiring to be examined may present himself, but before he can take a certificate in technology he will be required to have passed the Science and Art Department Examination in certain specified science subjects. In order to encourage the formation of classes for instruction in the different subjects, payments are offered to teachers on account of every student they pass in the Technological Examination. These payments consist of £2 for each candidate taking a first-class, and £1 for each candidate taking a second-class in any grade. Prizes, consisting of money and medals of silver and bronze, are offered in each grade of each subject.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—

Herr F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

IS AQUA ALCOHOL?
YES, AQUA FORTIS.
AQUA VITÆ ONCE,
NOW, AQUA MORTIS.

THE FESTIVE SEASON; or, HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or whisky largely diluted with soda-water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

FAGGED, WEARY, and WORN OUT! or anyone whose duties require them to undergo mental or unnatural excitement or strain, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT. It allays nervous excitement, depression, and restores the nervous system to its proper condition by natural means. It is pleasant, cooling, sparkling, refreshing, and invigorating. You cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease.

BILE, or YELLOW TINGE of the SKIN, FEVERS, BLOOD POISONS, &c. Low Spirits, Loss of Appetite, and other diseases are caused by the bile not being withdrawn from the blood by the healthy action of the liver. The great success of ENO'S FRUIT SALT has firmly established the fact that it promotes the separation of the bile from the blood (by natural means), which is then passed from the system, thus preventing and curing fevers, blood poisons, and other diseases.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—From the Rev. Dr. Hurst, Vicar of Collerley:—"I have used your FRUIT SALT for many years, and have verified your statements. The thanks of the public are due to you for your unceasing efforts to relieve suffering humanity. Long may you live to be a blessing to the world!"

SUCCESS IN LIFE.—"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.
Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it you have been imposed upon by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

THE STEAM-SHIP ORIENT.

This magnificent new vessel arrived at the South West India Dock, from the Clyde, on the 13th ult. She has been visited by thousands of people desiring to see the finest and best-fitted ship, indeed, the only full-powered steamer expressly built and equipped for the Australian trade, and the grandest vessel for the conveyance of passengers that has ever appeared in the Thames. The Orient Steam Navigation Company, of which Messrs. F. Green and Co. and Messrs. Anderson, Anderson, and Co. are joint managers, have arranged for a line of first-class steam-ships to go out from London to Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney, steaming all the way in less than forty days, and to return by way of the Suez Canal. This is an entirely novel idea, as the Great Britain and other vessels, using steam, at least for auxiliary power, on the voyage out, have made the home voyage hitherto by the lengthened and inconvenient route of Cape Horn. The Orient is the first steam-ship that has been constructed expressly for the new service. She is, after the Great Eastern, which is said to roll too much for passengers' use, all but the largest of existing merchant steam-ships; only the Inman steam-ship City of Berlin, the Britannic and Germanic, of the White Star line, and the Arizona, of the Guion line, can in size at all bear comparison with her. The displacement weight of the Orient is 9500 tons; her registered tonnage is 5400 tons; her length is 460 ft.; her beam, 46·35 ft., her depth to main deck 27·1 ft.; to upper deck 35·1 ft. When she takes her place on the service of the direct Orient line to Australia for which she has been built, the Orient will be prepared to carry, in addition to 3000 tons of Welsh coal (more than sufficient to take her to Australia), 3600 tons of measurement cargo, which might weigh 1000 tons or so. She would also carry 120 first-class passengers, 130 second-class, and 300 third-class or steerage passengers. By a sacrifice of cargo space she could carry 285 more third-class passengers. A different arrangement of space would enable 1500 troops and 400 horses to be carried in addition to the other passengers. If entirely devoted to troops, the ship could convey 3000 men and 400 horses at once with the proper stores.

The Orient has been built, for the new line of Australian steam navigation, which is named after her, by Messrs. John Elder and Co., of Glasgow. The other vessels of this line are the Lusitania, the Cuzco, the Chimborazo, the Garonne, the Aconcagua, and the John Elder. One of these leaves London every four weeks, and one leaves Australia at the same time, for the return passage. They take in the mails at Plymouth, carrying them without subsidy, and touch at St. Vincent and the Cape on their voyage out. The Orient is expected to make the passage in less time than her sister ships have done, but the Chimborazo lately came from Adelaide to Plymouth in thirty-seven days ten hours, including delay in the Suez Canal and stoppages for coaling. Her engines are of 5400-horse power, and the average speed with which she ran the distance from Greenock to Margate was fourteen and a half knots, or more than fifteen miles, an hour. The ship is barque rigged, with four masts, has three iron decks, and is divided into thirteen water-tight compartments, by bulkheads, while, as a security against fire, from the lower to the main deck, she is divided into six compartments by five fire-proof bulkheads, fitted with fire-proof doors. She has been equipped beyond the requirements of her class, 100 A1, the highest at Lloyds', and has satisfied Government inspection as regards her defence by means of water-tight compartments and coal bunkers, so that she would be available if requisitioned in time of war as a cruiser or troopship. Her coal bunkers are so placed as to protect her engines, while they carry coal enough to keep her at sea, steaming full speed, for forty days, and she could not be sunk by penetration of less three of her water-tight compartments.

The engines, also made by Messrs. John Elder and Co., merit particular attention, having three cylinders instead of the common number of two; one is high-pressure, with 60 in. diameter, the others low-pressure, 85 in. diameter. The crank-shaft is built in separate pieces, shrunk together and keyed, the diameter of the shaft being 20 in., and that of the crank-pins, which are of steel, 21 in. The propeller is four-bladed, the boss being of annealed cast-iron and the blade of cast-steel, specially made for the purpose by Messrs. Vickers, of Sheffield. The blades are bent backwards to diminish vibration. The diameter of the screw is 22 ft., and the pitch 30 ft. The condenser contains nearly 12,000 square feet of cooling surface, and the water for condensation is circulated by means of two independent combined steam centrifugal pumps, made by Messrs. Gwynne and Co., of London. The condensing surface and the capacity of the centrifugal pumps are made larger than they otherwise would be because the temperature of the water on part of the voyage home—namely, in the Red Sea—is so high that an unusually large quantity of it is required to cool and so condense the steam. The reversing engine is a special feature. Moving a lever not only stops the engines when at full speed, but immediately turns them full speed astern, and this motion has been so simplified that Lady Gertrude Boyle, on visiting the engine-room during the experimental cruise on the Clyde, easily stopped and reversed the engines when going at their maximum speed—that is to say, a young lady with one movement of her arm did what was tantamount to reining in 5600 horses. The boilers are four in number, 15 ft. 6 in. diameter, by 17 ft. 6 in. long. They contain twenty-four furnaces, each 4 ft. diameter by 6 ft. long, and the working pressure is 75 lb. on the square inch. The furnaces are constructed with special arrangements for the economical consumption of Australian coal on the passage home. From the results obtained it has been definitely proved that the consumption of coal will be economical at the speed at which it is intended she should run. The engines worked very smoothly without priming on the trip. The special arrangements of the machinery are due to the ingenuity of Mr. A. D. Bryce, the able superintendent of this department for John Elder and Co.

A great feature of the first-class accommodation is the splendid saloon forward, free from the engine-room, free from berths, running through from side to side, 44 feet square, and very lofty. It is fitted with electro-plated brass furniture, carpeted with a pattern by William Morris, and opening into the music saloon above, where, amid ferns and dracænas growing as plentifully as in the Sunbeam, a piano and an organ are to be placed. Here are elaborate wood carvings and ornamentation in patterns of the English Renaissance of the nineteenth century. The third-class accommodation supplies separate cabins with two berths for £18 per berth, and berths approached by separate passages for £15. The crew's forecastle is very spacious and comfortable. The chief saloon passengers have a promenade deck of 160 feet long, and the whole breadth of the vessel for their exclusive use, whilst the interior fittings of the dining-saloons, music-saloon, smoking-rooms, and passengers' cabins are of an elegant description.

The vessel is fitted with patent hand and steam steering gear, steam windlass, five powerful steam winches, two condensers for supplying fresh water, four large life-boats and five other boats; punkahs worked by steam in the chief dining-saloon, pneumatic bells to all saloon state-rooms, speaking-tubes and telegraphs. There are sixteen steam-engines, for different purposes, in the ship. The arrangements for a constant and ample supply of fresh water are such as might suffice for a town. The large tanks fitted below the orlop deck in the after-part of the ship hold about eighty tons. These are, of course, filled when the ship leaves the docks; but to keep up the supply required for daily use there are two large condensers, which will condense, if required, 200 gallons per minute. The water when leaving the condenser enters a cooling tank fitted with a large spreader or aerator. From this tank it runs direct to the main tank, from which it is again pumped by a small steam-pump in the engine-room to a very large tank fitted on the promenade-deck, whence it runs to every compartment into smaller tanks. Ice-rooms are fitted on the lower deck for carrying sixty tons of ice. As a protection against fire, the sea can be admitted bodily into any two of the thirteen water-tight compartments without sinking the ship. The protection against drowning is supplied by four life-boats, carrying eighty each; two cutters to convey ninety each, a gig and a mail-boat calculated to sustain forty-five each; a large steam-launch and twenty-six life-rafts, each capable of saving from forty to sixty people. In every berth in every class is a life-jacket which, rolled up, might be used as a bolster. Cattle enough to stock a farm are carried to provide fresh meat and milk on the voyage. A smaller ship of the line takes out six bullocks, one hundred sheep, 300 dozen of poultry, and embarks twelve bullocks more at the Cape. Mosses' and Mitchell's automatic ventilators, used in the British and American navies, are fitted to all the lower decks of the ship. When scuppers are closed in stormy weather, these ventilators increase in activity and expel the foul air through gigantic cowls. A special ventilator of Mr. Shepherd's (marine superintendent to the Orient Company) keeps the first and second class cabins sweet.

The steam-ship Orient was, by the liberality of the Orient Steam Navigation Company, thrown open to inspection, at moderate entrance charges, during three days of last week and on Monday last, for the benefit of five benevolent institutions—namely, the Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital, the East London Hospital for Children, the Poplar Hospital for Accidents, the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, and the Royal Alfred Merchant Seamen's Institution. The ship was thronged with visitors during the greater part of those days, and the sum of £872 was raised by this exhibition.

MUSIC.

This (Saturday) evening Messrs. Gatti's Covent Garden promenade concerts come to a close, with a special performance for the benefit of those gentlemen. On the following Monday a similar series of concerts will begin—in the same theatre—under the direction of M. Rivière, who will conduct the performances of a grand orchestra, consisting of about one hundred instrumentalists; and a chorus, derived from Mrs. Weldon's choir, numbering sixty voices on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, and augmented to 120 on Mondays and Fridays. Several military bands are also to co-operate on special nights. Eminent solo vocalists and instrumentalists are to appear, and many interesting works will be brought forward—the programmes including English ballad nights, operatic nights, classical nights—Irish, Scotch, and Welsh festival nights. The performances are to continue for five weeks.

We have already given an outline of the arrangements for the forthcoming Saturday Afternoon Concerts at the Crystal Palace, the twenty-fourth series of which begins this week. The opening concert will bring forward the "Cortége de Bacchus" and "Divertissement" from M. Delibes's ballet, "Sylvia"—and the young violinist, Maurice Dengremont, who is very highly spoken of, and will make his début here in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

The Musical Festival held at Oswestry last week, under the direction of Mr. Henry Leslie, included a fine performance of "The Messiah," the choristers having been mostly derived from local sources. Mr. Leslie has for some time past taken warm interest in the improvement of choral singing in the district, and the result on the occasion now referred to proved with what success, the choruses of the oratorio having been finely sung. The solos were rendered by Miss Robertson, Miss Fanny Robertson, Miss de Fonblanque, Mr. Maas, and Mr. Thurley Beale. A miscellaneous concert was given in the evening; and the success of the whole undertaking was such that the Festival will doubtless be established triennially.

Professor G. A. Macfarren gave his annual address to the students of the Royal Academy of Music on Saturday last His discourse drew special attention to the importance of a course of study which should not merely comprehend technical music, but should also include subjects outside thereof; great stress having been laid by the Professor on the necessity for a study of language.

The Royal Albert Hall Choral Society will begin its new season on Nov. 6, with a performance of "Elijah." During the new season the following works will be performed:—Goetz's Psalm, "By the waters of Babylon;" Hiller's "Song of Victory," Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" and "Elijah," Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" and "The Messiah." The list of principal artists includes the names of Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Mrs. Osgood, Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Carina Clelland, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Madame Patey, Madame Mary Cummings, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Bernard Lane, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Herr Henschel, Mr. Thurley Beale, Mr. Stanley Smith, and Signor Foli. Dr. Stainer will retain his position as organist, and Mr. Joseph Barnby will conduct.

The Brixton Choral Society will begin its weekly rehearsals next Monday evening, preparatory to the opening of its new season, which will consist of four concerts. The works to be given are Handel's "Jephthah," Mr. H. Gadsby's dramatic cantata "The Lord of the Isles," Mr. E. Prout's new cantata "Hereward," and Spohr's oratorio "Calvary." Mr. W. Lemare is, as heretofore, the conductor.

THEATRES.

The revival at the Lyceum of Colman's play of the "Iron Chest" has created among playgoers considerable interest and some speculation. Interest, inasmuch as it brings us face to face with a style of drama which modern innovations have banished from the boards, and speculation as to the chances for and against the success of the venture. The play, as some of our readers may be aware, is founded on Godwin's celebrated novel of "Caleb Williams," a complete psychological study; and the character of Sir Edward Mortimer, styled Falkland in the story, has, as far as possible, been faithfully drawn from the original. The result is, in the drama as in the novel, a psychological study — the portrait of a man pursued by the phantoms of a self-accusing conscience, investing with their hideous semblances everything otherwise fair and lovely in creation—mind evermore acting upon matter. Thus the most innocent words of his companions are by the terror-haunted culprit misconstrued into formal allusions to his guilt. A nature originally noble, by infliction of an injury wrought up to the commission of a great crime, then, in the untoward progress of events, drifting into a channel truly diabolical. The crime is murder, which in the heat of rage and just indignation, he has perpetrated on an unoffending fellow-creature. The prying curiosity of Wilford, a sometime recipient of Sir Edward's bounty, induces the latter to spy danger; and in an evil hour he reveals to him his secret, having previously exacted from the youth a solemn vow of silence. Then comes Sir Edward's crowning act of villainy—a false accusation preferred against Wilford with intent to damage his character, and thus render him impotent to effect his (Sir Edward's) ruin. The attempt frustrated brings about his own exposure and death. We do not profess to give a criticism of the novel, the salient points of which are of necessity but dimly shadowed forth in the drama. The drama as it stands is extravagant and bombastic, possessing in it but few elements of true poetry, but in a high degree exciting and dramatic, and affording in the character of Sir Edward Mortimer scope for the display of an actor's abilities, which, since the date of its first production at Drury Lane, 1796, has constituted its one specific attraction. Its original representative was John Kemble; afterwards the character was essayed by Edmund Kean and other notables, its latest exponent being Mr. Henry Irving. The last-named gentleman has studied the character in all its psychological attributes. The result is an artistic performance which approaches as near as possible the acme of perfection. The finer shades of feeling are by him singled out and subtly delineated, whilst the passionate outbursts are given with a power and volubility of utterance overwhelming in their intensity. In characters requiring minute analysis of emotion and sudden vehement outpourings Mr. Irving is in the present day almost without a rival. With the exception of Wilford, the other characters are but puppets revolving around the central figure. Of these, the Winterton of Mr. J. Carter, the Captain Fitzharding of Mr. G. H. Barnes, the Rawbold of Mr. Mead, the Judith of Miss Pauncefort, the Blanche of Miss Myra Holme, and last, not least, the Helen of Miss Florence Terry are deserving of commendation. The Wilford of Mr. Norman Forbes was also a painstaking performance. The piece is well mounted, the scene of the "Ruined Abbey" at the end of the third act having a singularly picturesque effect. Mr. Irving was enthusiastically received, being summoned three times to the footlights at the termination of the tragedy.

The Adelphi has produced a new and original sensational domestic drama, by Dion Boucicault, entitled "Rescued, or a Girl's Romance." Like other pieces by the same author, it is replete with incident, the dramatist occasionally treading on dangerous ground, which is overcome by the force of the situation, and ultimately stage-mechanism carries all before it. This is more especially apparent at the end of the third act, where, through the instrumentality of the heroine, a railway accident is averted by the sudden closing of a bridge which has been previously opened with sinister intent, and the train, predestined to destruction, is seen to pass safely across the stage to its destination. This situation ensured the success of the drama. The story is simple. An Earl and his daughter, dispossessed of their estate by the sudden appearance of a relative supposed to be dead, and the suspected forgery of a will hitherto held as valid. There are throughout lively touches of nature which claim the immediate sympathy of the audience. Mr. Henry Neville, who was enthusiastically cheered on his entrance, gave an exceedingly natural rendering of the hero, Jack Weatherby, and Mr. Hermann Vezin was artistic as the villain, Count Ruskov. Miss Bella Pateman, Miss Louise Moodie, and Miss Lydia Foote were all good in their respective rôles. Mr. James Fernandez is also deserving of praise as the ex-detective, Phœnix O'Reilly. The piece is well mounted.

Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft have inaugurated the commencement of their last season at the Prince of Wales's with an adaptation from the French of Victorien Sardou, by James Albery, entitled "Duty." The original piece, "Les Bourgeois de Pont-Arcy," has been reduced an act, and the incidents have been modified to render them more in consonance with our English notions of propriety. It is not necessary to give a synopsis of the plot, which illustrates the well-known Shakspearean maxim, "The evil that men do lives after them." The play is admirably constructed, and reflects great credit both on the original author and his English adapter. The acting throughout is excellent. Mrs. John Wood as Mrs. Trelawny Smith, Mrs. Hermann Vezin as the widowed Lady Deene, and Mr. Conway as Sir Geoffrey Deene receiving an enthusiastic reception. The performance was perfectly successful, Mr. James Albery being summoned to the footlights at the fall of the curtain.

A new comic musical drama, entitled "The Great Casimir," produced in January last at the Variétés, Paris, has been transplanted to the boards of the Gaiety. The music is by C. Lecocq, and the story, which has been adapted to the English stage by Mr. H. S. Leigh, is clever and whimsical; nevertheless, the performance did not pass the ordeal of the first night uncontested. Miss Farren is a charming actress, and in her own legitimate rôle is truly inimitable; but her powers of vocalisation could not be expected to meet the requirements of Lecocq's music. It is reserved for succeeding representations to test the success of the venture.

Mr. W. Holland, the popular caterer for the people, announces to his patrons that he has entered upon a new lesseeship of the Surrey Theatre, to be extended over a term of years. He inaugurates the commencement of his present season with the production of a new drama, written expressly for the theatre by Mr. R. Dodson, entitled "The Thames, or Adrift on the Tide." The piece has been placed upon the stage with great completeness; the scenery by Mr. Charles Brooke, which includes a view of the Thames near Shadwell Basin, being exceedingly picturesque. The play itself can advance little claim to originality, the incidents being of a hackneyed kind; but it comprehends some effective situations overlarded with irrelevant comic matter, which requires to be considerably pruned for the effective rendering of the whole. The actors laboured conscientiously in their respective rôles, the female interest of the piece being admirably supported. Unfortunately the last act is weak and deficient in construction. The audience at the fall of the certain were undemonstrative.

Returned to London after a prosperous tour in the provinces, the artists connected with Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's dramatic and musical company have again taken up their quarters at St. George's Hall, Langham-place.

The distribution of prizes to the students who have attended the classes during the past session at the Wolverhampton Free Library took place last week; Alderman J. Walker, the chairman of the Free Library committee, presided. Among those present were the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, who had kindly consented to distribute the prizes.

NEW BOOKS.

Confirmed jokers run a risk of never being considered serious, and confirmed authors of works conceived in the spirit of Baron Munchausen's "Adventures" run a risk of being disbelieved, though they may, for once in their lives, put upon record nothing but established facts; so that it will not be astonishing if The Exploration of the World: by Jules Verne (Sampson Low and Co.), "translated from the French" by Dora Leigh, should be regarded by a considerable number of readers as an exceedingly clever and interesting hoax, "just like Verne." There is reason to believe, however, that on this particular occasion the celebrated French inventor of marvellous stories, in which it is sometimes difficult to separate the grain of truth from the chaff of fiction, has not drawn at all upon his imagination for his facts, whatever may be the extent to which he has been indebted to his memory for anything contained in his pages. The large, solid volume, indeed, is but the first of three volumes, which are intended to set before the public with more than ordinary accuracy a comprehensive narrative, embracing "not only all the explorations made in past ages, but also all the new discoveries which have of late years so greatly interested the scientific world." And that the desired accuracy may be as far as possible attained, the author has summoned to his aid M. Gabriel Marcel, who is said to be justly regarded "as one of the most competent geographers of the day," and whose wide acquaintance with foreign languages has enabled the colleagues "to go to the fountain-head, and to derive all information from absolutely original documents." So much for the trustworthiness of whatever is related in the volume. And now a word or two may be said about the maps and illustrations, which are very numerous, and add materially to the value as well as to the attractiveness of the work. They are specimens both of the oldest and of the newest styles; for there are "fifty facsimiles of ancient drawings" and "fifty-nine illustrations by L. Benett and P. Philippoteaux." The palm will, of course, be given to the facsimiles, if, as is most likely to be the case, intrinsic interest be preferred above artistic execution. But, however that may be, the combination and the contrast have a very happy and a very striking effect. The explorers whose names are mentioned, and of whose travels some necessarily more or less meagre account is given in the present volume, date from Hanno the Carthaginian, who is believed to have set sail from Carthage about B.C. 505 for the purpose of exploring the African coast, to La Sale, of Rouen, in France, who was basely murdered, in 1687, by one or more of his companions on an exploring expedition in America. It were superfluous to say that the letterpress throughout abounds with the most exciting and most remarkable, as well as interesting and instructive, details; but it is probable that, on the whole, the chief attraction of the book will be found to lie in the engravings taken from old prints. These are extremely curious and worthy of attentive examination. The author includes among his "illustrious travellers, living before the Christian era," Julius Cæsar, who "led his victorious legions to the shores of Great Britain, where," says the author, "the inhabitants were of German extraction." This is a statement to which some readers may be inclined to take exception, and they may light upon other statements to which a similar remark may apply; but such matters will interfere but little, if at all, with the gratification to be derived from a work so full of delightful and varied information, and so liberally furnished with unique specimens of draughtsmanship and pictorial embellishment.

Appetite will certainly be whetted by the sight and probably satisfied by the perusal of Travel, War, and Shipwreck, by Parker Gillmore (Griffith and Farran); for the author, whether under his own name or under the assumed designation of "Ubique," has won for himself a considerable reputation as a writer of thrilling narratives, founded partly upon personal adventures and partly upon the experience of others in many lands, wherever there is danger to be courted and sport to be followed. On the present occasion the author adopts the autobiographical form of narrative, after the first chapter; but there is some reason to believe that he does this rather for the sake of convenience than from a strict regard for veracity, else he would probably not consider it necessary to call himself John Swan and to represent himself as the son of a certain Lieutenant Swan, R.N., when there is his titlepage to convict him of deception. However, young Swan, whether he be intended for the author in person or whether he belong to the family of the celebrated Mrs. Harris, is soon off on his travels, to New York first, and thence to less civilised American regions, where he begins his course of adventure by gallantly administering to a bully, who had certainly set the example of such otherwise scarcely justifiable violence, not to say brutality, "a kick on the head close to the ear" with a "heavily-nailed shooting boot." By this deed of "derring do," performed in the defence of an ill-used stranger, he conciliates to himself the friendship of one Soldatenkoff, who, being a native of "Russia, the country in which one dare not speak, dare not act, dare not even think," has a tale to tell, and tells it. Swan and Soldatenkoff then swear eternal amity, and are soon travelling together, far away to the prairies, where "bowie-knives, six-shooters, and tomahawks" are in great request, and where the fascination of "devil-may-care life" exercises an irresistible influence. Hence, of course, a series of perils and venturesome proceedings, in which Indians figure conspicuously, and there is a good deal of talk about scalps. Whilst the two friends are among the Mexicans they take to themselves another comrade, as devoted as they to all kinds of sport and wild wandering; and the three are knit together like the "Trois Mousquetaires." In the sequel, the "dauntless three" are all engaged in the Crimean War, but not on the same side; for one, it will be remembered, was a Russian by birth. So that friend kills friend, and there is a fearful fit of remorse. But, on the other hand, friend saves friend from shipwreck, and there is a joyous scene of recognition and of common residence under one roof. These incidents smack strongly of fiction; and yet we know that fact is stranger. But, whether the narrative be fact or fiction, or a judicious mixture of both, the author appears to have been led, one does not quite see how, to think that it would not be complete without "a parting word" to the following effect: "if war should arise, if the honour of England should be doubted, the entirety of our realms imperilled, or our sacred shores threatened with pollution from the tread of a foreign invader, the youngsters of the day will have a hard struggle in the race who shall be first to offer their services in the cause of our Country and Queen." There is a satisfactory ring about this assurance; but it cannot be connected in any very intelligible way with the narrative, or with anything else, unless it implies that the "oldsters," whose adventures are supposed to be recorded therein, will run the "youngsters" hard in the valry for active service. Perhaps that is what is really meant.

We have a word of advice for any reader on the English or the Irish side of St. George's Channel who has a relish for historical and biographical anecdotes of a rich and racy flavour. He may gratify this literary taste by the help of Mr. Oliver Burke, a learned Dublin barrister and antiquarian scholar, who has compiled an interesting volume. It is called The History of the Lord Chancellors of Ireland, and is to be had of the publishers, Mr. Ponsonby, in Grafton-street, Dublin, or of Messrs. Longmans here in London. The personal and official transactions of all those great servants of English rule in the neighbouring island from the year 1186, soon after its conquest by Henry II., to the retirement of Lord O'Hagan, the first Roman Catholic Lord Chancellor, in 1874, are briefly chronicled, but not in the skeleton form of mere dates and titles. There is flesh and blood; and much of the characteristic social life of the age and country, in many a curious old story that Mr. Burke has preserved. Such, for instance, is that of Mabel Bagnal's runaway marriage with O'Neil, Earl of Tyrone, in 1591; or the more tragical incident of the Desmond, in Edward IV.'s time, who was beheaded, it is said, by a forged warrant, the contrivance of Queen Elizabeth (Woodville) to revenge herself for his counsel that the King should divorce her for a foreign princess; also the murder of Archbishop Allen, in 1534, by Lord Thomas Fitzgerald, whose father had been sent to the Tower; then, the shameless tergiversations of Archbishop Curwen, under Queens Mary and Elizabeth, between the Catholic and Protestant religions; again, the still more infamous conduct of Archbishop Adam Loftus, also Chancellor of Ireland, who was the author of cruel Protestant oppressions and persecutions of the old popular faith, while he grossly abused the Cathedral revenues to enrich his own kindred; the personal careers of Sir Charles Porter and Sir Alexander Fitton, at the Revolution period, and those of Sir Richard Cox, John Methuen, and Sir Constantine Phipps, which were equally singular. The descriptive report, by Sir Thomas Cusack, in the reign of Edward VI., upon the condition of different provinces and regions of Ireland, the disposition of their native chieftains and people, and the execution of English law amongst them, has much historical value. But, coming down to the eighteenth century, we find the patriotic spirit of the Irish Opposition, most frequently under Protestant leaders, taking the form of Parliamentary and forensic eloquence, and of legitimate political agitation. Mr. Burke's account of proceedings in the Chancellorship of Lord Lifford, and in the yet more stirring rule of the Earl of Clare (John Fitzgibbon) embrace the short history of the separate Irish Parliament, constituted in 1782, the alarming attitude of the Volunteers and sympathisers with the Republic of America, the fierce combats of invective in which Grattan, Curran, and their rivals made use of a sharpened tongue, the rebellion of 1798, and the Act of Union, procured by wholesale bribery, which was needed, however, to save a corrupt realm from utter dissolution. All this history, of course, has been repeatedly narrated by many able writers; but it is serviceable again to take a fresh glance at it, from the peculiar point of view here afforded by the position of the Irish Lord Chancellorship in those troubled times. With the accession of Lord Redesdale, as we enter the nineteenth century, and advance, through Lord Plunket, to the grand controversy upon Catholic Emancipation, we reach the modern period of Irish politics, where Daniel O'Connell presently confronts us, with the phantom of a proposed Repeal looming amid the heads of the mob he gathers about him. Mr. Burke is an enthusiastic Irishman, but his loyalty to the United Kingdom, as well as the moderation and soundness of his political views, is evinced throughout this narrative; and he does justice to eminent public men of each party, to Sugden (Lord St. Leonards) and to Sir Joseph Napier, equally with Mazière Brady and other Whig or Liberal Chancellors. His more profuse eulogy of Lord O'Hagan is, we believe, not undeserved by its subject; but neither political nor religious partialities have led this truthful chronicler to belie the facts on record. There is, perhaps, no great amount of original research, except in matters of purely antiquarian detail, shown in this entertaining and instructive volume. But it is a really good piece of work, and is worthy of attentive perusal.

Success having attended the publication of "Tally ho," it was but natural that a further venture should be made with Hark Away: by Fred. Feild Whitehurst (Tinsley Brothers), a volume, similar to the former, containing sketches of hunting, coaching, fishing, &c. The sketches are, in fact, little or nothing more than accounts, reprinted from newspapers, of the runs with hounds, the gatherings, in Hyde Park and elsewhere, of the "four-in-hands," in which the author took part, or of which he was an enthusiastic spectator during the seasons or season of 1878-9. The whole resolves itself, for the most part, into a catalogue of more or less aristocratic and popular names, together with a statement as to how the owners of those names were dressed and looked, "went" and "handled the ribbons," or "tooled the drag," on various occasions. "When the whitebait," writes the author, "attain the proportions of sprats, and cucumbers are bawled through the streets two for three-half-pence, it may be fairly concluded that the London season has drawn to a close. When one's bosom friend has thrown up his well-chosen teams of bays and greys, and has ceased those pleasant little journeys which terminated at the Orleans Club or the Star and Garter, as the case might be; when she who adores thee has left for Homburg, in order to recruit her health after the campaign of the year—in order to prepare for a state that may be better or worse, according to circumstances—it behoves a man to seek for fresh fields of recreation, and to add to his experience by entering into any novel pursuits that present themselves." This is the way in which he introduces a short description of "a pleasant time at Penzance;" and it is a specimen of his best style, writing as he is in his capacity of a man of fashion rather than in that of a mere reporter stringing together the names and titles and recording the presence, at a "meet" or elsewhere, of the nobility and gentry. There are evidently, as appears from the favour accorded to his former volume, many readers to whom such chronicles are a source of delight, or at any rate of amusement; and the author displays such a sense of personal enjoyment, so genial a spirit, that it is impossible not to look with a kindly eye on what he thinks worthy of recording, though it may sometimes differ no more than imperceptibly from a rank advertisement. He intersperses anecdotes, however (whether old or new is of small consequence), and he gossips of things which are so suggestive of pure air, healthy pursuits, generous fare, and active, manly exercise, that his very topics are an almost sufficient recommendation of his book. In one of his sketches there is a remark which gives an approximate idea of his age; and that one so full of years should apparently be so full of spirits and vigour excites the sort of admiration aroused by recollections of such men as the Rev. John Russell, "the venerable patriarch of the chase," as he is called by our author, who naturally regards him as a superior being, in the proportion of an archangel to an archbishop.

The student of contemporary military history will get some help from Colonel Fyfe-Cookson's narrative of his personal observations in August and September, 1877, and during the winter and spring of last year. This gallant officer accompanied Suleiman Pasha's army in the campaign of the Balkans, and witnessed the desperate efforts to drive the Russians from the Shipka Pass. He afterwards proceeded, still serving as a military attaché of the British Embassy in Turkey, to follow Mahomet Ali Pasha, beyond Sophia and Orkhanieh, in his attempt to hold the western Balkan passes, at Kamarli and thereabout, against the victorious invader when Plevna had fallen. The last portion of Colonel Fyfe-Cookson's duty in the war lay with the Turkish garrison of the fortified positions about Gallipoli, when the enemy had occupied Adrianople, and it was important to British policy that the Dardanelles and entrance to the Sea of Marmora should be made quite secure. This is a part of the strategic study afforded by his book, which seems to possess an abiding and substantial interest; and there is some plausibility in the notion that herein will be found, after all, the whole and sole concern of England with the defence of European Turkey. But such political questions are not directly raised by the gallant author of this serviceable account of Turkish military operations, which bears title With the Armies of the Balkans, and is published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin. He describes the battle of Eski Zara, on July 31, which effectually checked the Russian advance into Roumelia, and he exposes the want of concert between the Turkish Generals, Suleiman Pasha and Reouf Pasha, in their movements at that period. The topography of the Shipka Pass and the fortified positions there, with all the tactics of attack and defence which cost many thousand lives in two or three weeks of obstinate struggle on that mountain road, are minutely explained in this volume. It is furnished with special maps and plans, and with other illustrations of a more graphic sort, from original sketches by the author. His testimony concerning the Turks and the Sultan's Government agrees with that of most impartial English travellers. The Turkish peasant, and, of course, the Turkish regular soldier, will bear comparison, in moral virtue, with the same class of any other nation; but the Circassians and other Asiatics in Turkey have perpetrated many outrages. "I scarcely ever knew a Circassian punished," says this witness. "No doubt their harem influence at Constantinople is much considered, the most beautiful of their children being married by the most influential of the Pashas there." In fact, it is the experience of all countries and ages, where despotism has been accompanied by polygamy and domestic slavery, that the worst effects of social and political corruption are felt, and there is no end to cruelty and rapacity of every kind. This is the fatal vice of the Turkish Empire, and it cannot be remedied by mere administrative reforms even if the Sultan and his Pashas were amenable to British counsels.

The third and concluding volume of The History of England: by M. Guizot, edited by Madame De Witt and translated from the French by an undeclared but apparently competent hand (Sampson Low and Co.), closes at the death of William IV., as the most convenient period of cessation. The prominent features of the work are, no doubt, known by this time to everybody who has eyes to see: the noble size, handsome covers, decent paper, easy type, numerous and excellent illustrations, the same as those of the original French work. To this third volume is added a tolerably copious index. It will be remembered that this history, like that of France which preceded it from the initiative of the same illustrious author and under the care of the same editress, was and is intended for "the rising generation;" and to their notice it is hereby commended, though their seniors would also find it not only ornamental as the occupant of space upon table or shelf, but interesting both textually and pictorially, in the absence of more elaborate and argumentative works, such as the erudite historical student might more particularly affect. This third volume begins with the assertion that "England felt no love for James II.," though "he was proclaimed King without disturbance, and accepted without a murmur." This is, no doubt, true; but it is pretty certain that there was nobody else who could have been proclaimed King with a chance of having on his side at the same time the love of more than a fraction of England; and so much might be claimed even for James II. Nobody is likely to complain that full justice, or at any rate more justice than might have been expected under the circumstances, is not done to the characters of our William and Mary, our Anne, our Georges, and our William IV.; but a doubt may reasonably arise as to the portrait to which the name of the last-mentioned monarch is attached: it is strangely unlike the popular portraits of the sailor-king. Our naval and military heroes, moreover, as well as our statesmen and orators—our Pitts, Foxes, and the rest of the brilliant leaders of men—are all treated in a respectful and appreciative manner, to which little or no exception can be taken by the most enthusiastic hero-worshipper. Indeed, it would seem as if the illustrious author had been inclined rather to stretch a point in our favour than to detract in any respect from our traditional honours, for he has repeated the old, but not now generally accepted story connected with the battle of Fontenoy, and the English officer's polite request that the French would fire first. It is true that the French most courteously refused, and that the English accordingly poured in a most destructive volley; but the credit of having first saluted and provoked an interchange of courtesies is attributed to the English, and it is not hinted that it was a clever device upon their part for getting the first shot.

A very competent hand, M. Gustave Masson, B.A. Univ. Gall., of Harrow School, has executed, in one volume, for the use of schoolboys and others, an abridgment, from Mr. Robert Black's English translation, of Guizot's History of France (Sampson Low and Co.), which will probably meet with considerable acceptance. It is of very handy form, it contains more than a score of illustrations, and it is provided with a chronological table, marginal memoranda, index, &c. Some people may think that, when the abridgment was taken in hand, there was a good opportunity for curtailing, even more than the abridger has curtailed them, the early portions of M. Guizot's work, having little or nothing to do with the history of France, properly so called. As it is, however, the abridger has made a neat and wieldy book out of one which, in its unabridged form, is handsome enough and readable enough, but decidedly unwieldy, at least for educational purposes; and, though he must have had a very laborious and thankless task, he modestly disclaims for himself that credit which others will not consent to withhold from him, seeing that the merit, if any, of such abridgments depends chiefly upon the judgment and taste with which they are carried out.

Under the title Luxurious Bathing: a Sketch by Andrew W. Tuer; with twelve folio Etchings, Initials, &c., by Sutton Sharpe (Field and Tuer), a singular book has been published, in which the text is quite independent of the etchings accompanying it, the etchings have no relation to either text or title, and neither text nor etchings demand by intrinsic preciousness the costly paper, typography, and vellum binding in which they are enshrined. Mr. Tuer's remarks on the various kinds of bathing are simple and sensible, and might do good distributed as a penny tract—since cleanliness is next to godliness. The landscape etchings which fill half the volume have much promise, though evidently by an amateur, who has yet to learn the value of "accident" and variety in etching.

The Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army has received an addition to the funds by the sum of £100 subscribed by three regiments now serving in Bermuda.

THE QUAIL.

The partridge lives with us throughout the whole year,
Though September oft fills him with trembling and fear;
No fondness has he for exploring the earth,
Contented to live in the land of his birth,
If the falcon-eyed fowlers only would let him;
Ah, were he but free from the risks that beset him,
The plump little creature might live out his span
In the same spot of earth where his pecking began.

But his cousin, the quail, quite a different being,
A thorough Bohemian, is all for sight-seeing.
One week he 's in Europe, in Africa next,
By no change of latitude ever perplexed;
A true cosmopolitan, he has no ties
Of country or climate—the world is his prize.
As the sunflower aye to the sun turns its face,
So follows he southward the sun in his race.
No bird of his kind has such wide range as he:
Europe, Africa, Asia, the Heathen Chinee,
All give him warm welcome; he finds a fit home
Where'er for the nonce he may happen to roam.
The Romans and Greeks knew and prized him of old—
To the Israelites once more welcome than gold.
Pugnacious as game-cock, the Chinese delighting,
As erst did the ancients, we 're told, in quail-fighting.

So differing, in this quail and partridge agree—
Each hen to her brood is a stanch devotee;
As patient of purpose, as watchfully tender,
Her life for her young each would gladly surrender.
See here, in this picture, so undisturbed now,
Apt emblem of quiet the half-buried plough;
Let a strange sight be seen or a strange noise be heard,
And straight springs aloft the brave mother-bird,
In face of the danger, herself quite forgot,
By cunning devices to lure from the spot
Where her bevy lie hidden; now tremblingly fluttering,
As a pinion were broken, and saddest cries uttering,
She wiles the intruder some distance away,

"SEE HERE, IN THIS PICTURE, SO UNDISTURBED NOW,

FINE ARTS.

THE POMPEIAN COMMEMORATION.

The celebration on Thursday of last week at Pompeii of the eighteenth centenary of the city's destruction, was made on a larger scale even than we anticipated in our article a fortnight back. The day was regarded as a general festa by the Neapolitans, and about 7000 persons of various nationalities, including representatives of the Government, the municipalities, the professions, and several of the archæological and artistic societies of Europe and America, were admitted by ticket through the gate of the deserted city. The festival was without parallel in the history of the world. It jars somewhat on the sympathies to think of the terrible fate of the Pompeians, and of the temples and streets of that silent city of the dead as re-tenanted by the gay and motley Neapolitan crowd. But we must remember that probably no great calamity that has befallen humanity has yielded so much instruction and delight to posterity. Destruction has proved but preservation, and death but a long sleep before new life. It is only at Pompeii and in the local and Naples museums which it has so richly stocked, that the most ardent student of antiquity can fully realise the life, that is to say the vie intime in all its thousand minutiæ of the Romans in the first century of our era. And here let the writer (who has read the book on the spot) commend the artistic and archæological accuracy of Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii" as a means of popular information. Except as regards the site and some of the details of the house of Arbaces, which of course are drawn from the imagination (though still in accordance with probability based on analogy), an authority may be found for every description and detail of the novel.

Among the ceremonies which marked the centenary was the reading—in the Basilica, before the assembled savans and visitors—of two occasional poems in Latin hexameters, and the delivery by Signor Ruggiero, chief director of the excavations, of an address, giving a brief history of what has been done since the first remains of Pompeii were discovered, in 1748. The visitors then inspected the chief monuments, and afterwards assembled to witness the final search in the lower portions of ten chambers in the ninth regione of the city—these chambers having previously been excavated to within about four feet of their floor. Similar final excavations have been arranged to take place on the visits of various Sovereigns and other important personages, and the houses so unearthed have sometimes been named after the visitors on such occasions.

We may remind the reader that Pompeii having been only a city of the third class the private dwelling are, with some notable exceptions, small and low. Not many had a second, and hardly any a third floor. The atrium and peristylium were more or less open to the sky; and the roofs generally, excepting the substantial coving of the great baths, were of wood—the holes for the rafters being still visible. Consequently, when the great showers of ashes and cinders descended from Vesuvius the accumulating weight broke through the roofs, and, owing to the powdery condition of much of the eruptive matter, filled every nook and cranny till the city became as it were one homogeneous mass; the last of the successive strata of scoriæ presenting an undulating surface, which (together with the general elevation that caused the sea to retire two or three miles) effaced all trace of the buried buildings—the lofty upper wall of the Great Theatre alone projecting above ground. The heat, though great enough to carbonise wood, textiles, grain, &c., was not sufficiently intense to destroy bronzes, terra cotta, and other hard objects, or the marble and vitreous tesseræ of the mosaics. Nor were the delicately-executed wall-paintings affected, for the reason that the colours were derived from natural earths. Even at Herculaneum, where the volcanic matter partook of the character of boiling mud and lava, and the heat was, therefore, doubtless greater, although it reduced papyri to the nature of charcoal, it did not, as we remarked in our former article, render them illegible. It follows that, in excavating at Pompeii, vast masses (in layers many feet deep) of friable pumaceous scoriæ have always to be dug out before the movables, furniture, &c., of the Old Pompeians are struck upon. These are always found on or near the floor in the lowest excavations, such as those made on the present celebration. The refuse, conveyed in trucks on a tramway, is tilted on to waste ground without the city walls. It is thus evident that the exhumation of Pompeii is a work of great labour and expense, and to unearth the two fifths of the city still buried will require, at the present rate of progress, seventy years, and cost about five million francs, as calculated by the eminent archæologist Commendatore Fiorelli, who has for many years superintended the excavations.

The excavations just made in the ninth regione yielded nothing of great value, artistic or otherwise; but one of the chambers presented a wonderful picture of an old Pompeian interior. It had been the shop of a dealer in singing-birds and bird-seed. The shops at Pompeii, by-the-way, were frequently situated in the anterior wall on the ground floor of the houses or palazzi of the wealthiest proprietors—just as they are at this day in Naples. In this shop at first were found a small figure of a horse and a number of vases (one containing coins), fibulæ, bracelets and rings, in bronze, a beautiful candelabrum, a bottle, several small bells, and a casserole in the same metal, iron knives and forks, a spit and various kitchen utensils, a dagger and knife with ivory handles, some glass beads, and a blue glass cup; and a money-box and other articles in terra-cotta. Many of these objects, as appeared from the direction of the fallen beams, had been precipitated in a heap from a chamber above. But, on continuing the clearing, the occupation of the worthy bird-seller became evident. The remains of quantities of millet, hemp, and other seeds, and beans were found, together with those of the sacks which had contained them; as also bins, a barrel with iron hoops, and a double row of terra-cotta ollæ, all of them, clearly, receptacles for grain; and likewise a considerable number of small earthen pots, which, doubtless, served as drinking-cups for the birds. There were besides a number of bronze rings, and pieces of fine chain-work used for hanging bird-cages. At the same time were discovered many small bones, and at length the complete skeleton of a little singing-bird. To read the descriptions of the objects found on this occasion, and far more so on inspecting the countless Pompeian relics preserved in the Naples Museum—the complete batterie de cuisine of the epicure; the tools and implements of all kinds of trades; the instruments of surgery (proving the art to have arrived at a very advanced stage); the colours and pencils of the artist; the matchless bronzes and sculpture; the many ingenious mechanical inventions; the multifarious kinds of produce, and processes for preparing the same; the thousands of domestic objects and appliances; all, down to our "patent safety nursery-pin," the prototypes it might seem of things now in every-day use—one is irresistibly impelled to exclaim, "There is nothing new under the sun." At all events, if we except the railway, the telegraph, and the telephone, man seems to have made little progress, and in some respects has gone back during the eighteen centuries that Pompeii has lain as it were entranced.

As a permanent memento of the day of the centenary, a large octavo volume has been published, entitled "Pompeii and the Region Buried by the Eruption of Vesuvius in the Year Seventy-Nine." It consists of dissertations by the most eminent men of science and archæologists of Italy on the phenomena preceding and attending the destruction of the city; and on the life, social, religious, artistic, and domestic, of its inhabitants. It is hoped that the interest excited by this commemoration may supply some stimulus to the cultivation of classical archæology, in which department of study we have, as remarked in our former article, been left far behind during the last fifty years by the Germans and even other Continental nations.

Several complaints have recently been made touching the frequent destruction during processes of so-called "restoration" of monuments and tablets to the memory of the dead, which are often of historical interest, and of great value to the genealogist. When the monuments are not actually destroyed they are frequently huddled out of sight and consigned to neglect in the belfry or elsewhere, and the tablets are converted into paving-stones. A "Former Vicar of Doveridge," writing to the Times in defence of the practice, somewhat naïvely admits that in the restoration of Doveridge church (while he was Vicar) the decaying Lucy Monument (which he believes to have been erected to the family immortalised by Shakspeare) was neglected because no notice was taken of the representations made to those most interested in its preservation. And he plausibly argues that it is too much to expect that "Rectors and Vicars will bear the burden of the preservation of private monuments when they have the burden of what belongs to the public service in hand." It surely may, however, be answered that such monuments are often not only among the best ornaments of a church and add to its dignity, but that they form an essential part of its history and of that of the neighbourhood, if indeed they are not also of wider public and historic interest. We think, therefore, it is one of the first duties of "Rectors and Vicars" to protect and preserve, instead of to destroy or remove, all such monuments and memorials.

The new Arts' Club at Manchester, which is situate at the corner of Portland-street and Oxford-street, is now opened.

The death is announced of William Morris Hunt, the American painter, at the age of fifty-four. He studied at Düsseldorf, and afterwards under Couture at Paris. In 1855 he returned to the United States, and finally settled at Boston, where he became well known in various branches of painting, and drew around him many pupils. During the Civil War he painted several pictures illustrative of its incidents; and he decorated the walls of the Assembly rooms in the New Capitol at Albany, choosing for his subjects "Ormuzd and Ahriman" and "Ulysses and the Sirens." In 1875 he published "Talks on Art."

A statuette of peculiar value and interest, as having been produced at the château of Oiron, in Poitou, where the extremely rare "Henri Deux" was manufactured, has been added to the Ceramic Museum at Sèvres.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co. have recently issued three effective pianoforte pieces by Mr. W. S. Rockstro, each of which is based on well-known national airs—the first on "'Twas within a mile" and "Come o'er the stream, Charlie," the second on "Annie Laurie," and the third on "Flow gently, sweet Afton," and "The Hundred Pipers." These subjects are varied and ornamented in an agreeable style, so as to form attractive pieces for young students—the fingering of leading passages being carefully indicated.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. publish "The Last Prayer; Mélodie Réligieuse, composée par Louis Eugène Napoleon." The text of the prayer was found among the Prince Imperial's papers at Chiselhurst, and its sentences have been paraphrased, and set to music composed by himself. The melody is simple and expressive, and lies within a small compass of voice. Messrs Cramer and Co. likewise issue "Love and the Cuckoo," a pretty song by W. Bordens, the voice part of which will not tax the most limited range.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart's latest publications include some pleasing vocal pieces. "My love far away," ballad, by W. M. Balfe, will be welcome to the many admirers of that popular composer. The melody is essentially vocal, and pleasing in character, and it requires a compass of scarcely more than an octave. Professor G. A. Macfarren's two vocal trios, "The Glove" and "The Harpers," are both for a soprano, a contralto, and a bass. The first is characterised by boldness and vigour, the other being in a somewhat more flowing and tranquil style. Neither voice part requires more than the most ordinary compass. They are also published by Messrs. Duff and Stewart; as are a very pleasing song, "My bark and I," by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie; "The Old Cathedral Bell," and "Golden hours are fleeting," two songs by Oliver Cramer, the first of which (for baritone or bass) has much serious expression; the other (for tenor) being rather of a graceful character, neither of them making more than the most limited demands on vocal compass. Some pleasing pianoforte pieces—brilliant, but not difficult—are also among Messrs. Duff and Stewart's recent publications. These include "Forest Warblings," by J. T. Trekell; "The Forest Streamlet," by G. F. Kendall; and "Daisy Mazurka," by W. C. Levey; a cheap and useful "New and Improved Catechism of the Rudiments of Music," compiled by William Buels, being issued by the same firm.

Messrs. Weekes and Co. have published a comprehensive selection of single and double chants, under the title of the "Parochial Chant Book." These are well selected and edited by Mr. A. S. Cooper, who has supplied a preface with serviceable directions as to the use of the chants, which number more than 300, about half of them having been either composed for the work or borrowed from manuscript collections. The book is a worthy companion to Mr. Cooper's previous work, "The Parochial Psalter."

The double-screw iron armour-plated ship Northampton has been commissioned at Chatham by Captain Fisher as the flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir F. L. M'Clintock, F.R.S., the new Commander-in-Chief of the squadron on the North American and West Indian station.

At a recent meeting of the Workmen's National Executive Committee for the Abolition of the Foreign Sugar Bounties a letter from the Foreign Office was read, written in reply to an application for information as to the financial result of the first year's working of the new Austrian law of June, 1878. The letter stated that her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna had been requested to send a report on the subject, but that it was not expected that the information necessary to make such report could yet be obtained. It was stated at a meeting that the Austrian bounty was the great difficulty in the way of a general settlement of the European sugar question.

She was the elder daughter of Colonel Richard William Howard-Vyse, J.P. and D.L., of Stoke and of Boughton, by Frances, his wife, second daughter of Henry Hesketh, Esq., of Newtown, Cheshire, and was sister of Colonel Howard-Vyse, of the Manor Cottage, Old Windsor, and of the Rev. Granville Sykes Howard-Vyse, of Boughton Hall.

Mr. Peter Vargas, who was for sixty-two years confidential clerk to the Parliamentary Secretaries of the Treasury in various Administrations, on the 25th ult., at the age of seventy-five. In every Session of Parliament he sat in the lobby outside the door of the Ministerial room, and was always accountable for the whereabouts of all the members of the Ministerial party. The issue of the Whip's papers was confided to him throughout the whole period of his service. From the moment when the Speaker took the chair until the House rose, for sixty years of his life, Mr. Vargas never left his post. The Whips from the House of Lords used also constantly to come down to the Commons' lobby to consult Mr. Vargas.

Admiral the Hon. Keith Stewart, C.B., on the 15th ult., at Stoke, Devonport, aged sixty-five. He was younger son of George, eighth Earl of Galloway, K.T., by Jane, his wife, second daughter of Henry, first Earl of Uxbridge, and was brother of the late Earl of Galloway and of the late Duchess of Marlborough, mother of the present Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Admiral married, 1841, Mary Caroline, only daughter of Sir Charles Fitzroy, K.C.B., and had one son and nine daughters.

Thomas Jervis-White-Jervis, Esq., on the 15th ult., at her Majesty's Vice-Consulate, Bastia, Corsica, aged eighty-two. He was younger and only surviving son of the late Sir John Jervis-White-Jervis, Bart., of Ballyellis, in the county of Wexford, and of Bellcamp, in the county of Dublin, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Henry Nisbett, Esq., of Ashmore, in the county of Longford. He married, June, 1818, Eliza Anne, eldest daughter of the late William Strettell, Esq., Judge-Advocate-General in Bengal, and leaves issue.

Mr. Henry Negretti, of the firm of Negretti and Zambra, opticians and scientific instrument makers, aged sixty-two. Mr. Negretti was born at Como, and came to this country in 1830, when he was twelve years old. He was a strong friend of Italian independence. It was to his zealous exertions that the Italian Pelizzoni owed his escape after being condemned to death for a murder in Saffron-hill on the testimony of the police, but of which it was afterwards proved he was perfectly innocent. After this public service, King Victor Emmanuel bestowed upon Mr. Negretti the honour of knighthood.

THE IRON AND STEEL INSTITUTE.

The annual meeting of this institute was opened at Liverpool on Wednesday week, as recorded in our last issue. The Mayor, in welcoming the institute, said that Liverpool and the mercantile marine of England were deeply interested in the introduction of steel ships; but it was desirable that they should be assured that steel possessed the strength desired. The president, Mr. E. Williams, said, in reply, that before long steel would take the place of iron in ship-building. Its progress was at present slow, as the authorities had decided that steel hulls should be equal in quality to the best boiler-plate. Papers were read on the dephosphorisation of iron and steel.

On the following day Mr. James A. Picton read a paper on the Progress of Iron and Steel as a Structural Material. He lamented that some of our greatest engineers showed an utter want of taste in the gigantic structures in iron and steel which were erected under their direction, and he made practical comparisons for the purpose of illustrating his subject. Mr. T. Wrightson, of Stockton, read an important paper on physical changes in iron and steel at a high temperatue. There was an interesting discussion on the application of steel to ship-building. Several speakers expressed their opinion that the tests used by Lloyd's, the Admiralty, and other bodies ought to be considerably modified, while Dr. Siemens pronounced himself strongly against any relaxation of those tests, on the ground that steel used for important purposes should always be of the very best quality. In the afternoon excursions were made to various works, and in the evening the annual dinner of the institute took place in St. George's Hall.

The sittings were concluded yesterday week, when papers were read by Mr. G. Ratcliffe, of the Mersey Steel and Iron Works, "On the manufacture of large forgings, and the materials suitable for the same;" by Mr. A. Davis, of Westminster, "On the Consolidation of Fluid Steel;" by Mr. A. Allen, of Sheffield, "On experiments to determine the presence of Nitrogen in Steel;" and by Mr. C. Wood, of Middlesborough, "On wrought iron and toughened glass for railway sleepers." On the motion of the president, Mr. E. Williams, the thanks of the institute were voted to the Mayor, the local committee, and various public bodies and firms. In the afternoon a number of the members visited the works of the London and North-Western Railway Company at Crewe.

Next year's congress is to be held at Dusseldorf.

The Earl of Derby has given £10 to the funds of the National Thrift Society, Oxford, and has expressed his warm interest in the work now being carried on by that society throughout the country.

All classes of live stock and fresh meat landed at Liverpool last week showed a decrease, when compared with the figures of the preceding week, the decline being particularly marked in both live and dead sheep. The totals were 3736 quarters of beef, 625 carcases of mutton, fifty dead pigs, and fifty-nine carcases of lambs.

At a conversazione in connection with the Tower-Hamlets branch of the University Education scheme last Saturday, the Earl of Rosebery said he heartily sympathised with the object of the movement, which he understood to be to bring high class education within the reach of people by whom it had hitherto been unattainable.

Mr. J. Chamberlain, M.P., was enrolled on Thursday week in a Birmingham lodge as an honorary member of the Grand United Order of Oddfellows. After the initiation he gave an address on the advantages of sick and friendly societies in relieving their members from the taint of pauperism, and, alluding to the national expenditure, he compared the results attained by the Imperial outlay of six millions with the improvements which had followed the expenditure of a similar sum in local municipal work.

A new coffee tavern was opened for business in Castle-street, Berkhamsted, on Saturday last. It has been erected by Earl Brownlow, Messrs. Lascelles being the builders. Externally it is remarkably picturesque, and internally it is fitted with every convenience. It is rented by Mr. F. W. Longman, Mr. W. F. Cooper, and the Rev. J. W. Cobb, the Rector, who intend to work it on strictly commercial principles, in the belief that all such institutions ought not only to be useful to the public but profitable to the promoters.

The first of a series of six science lectures in connection with the Gilchrist Fund was given, under the auspices of the Exeter Literary Society, at the Victoria Hall, Exeter, on Monday evening, to an audience numbering 1500 people. The lecturer was Mr. R. A. Proctor, F.R.A.S., and the subject selected "The Sun." On the conclusion of the lecture, the Bishop of Exeter proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Proctor, and in doing so said that he did not know that he had ever had a chance of listening to anything so instructive and so full of all that could elevate and instruct the human mind. The lecture was so wonderfully interesting that to a thoughtful and religious mind it contained a lesson that could never be forgotten, of admiration for the Creator of all these things. It was impossible to have heard what they had that night without remembering the words of the Psalms, "The heavens declare the glory of God."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C E T (Clifton).—Thanks; the correction is noted.

M R R (Dublin).—The game shall be examined; and, if found good, it shall appear in due course.

W J E (Dewsbury).—Solutions received three weeks after the publication of the problem are duly acknowledged.

H T Y (Staplehurst).—Thanks; we are glad to see you in the ranks of problematists again. The pair received shall be well examined.

J J W (Jamaica-road).—Both problems are very acceptable.

R S (Newcastle).—There is no objection to the use of post-cards, but you should be careful to comply with the postal regulation to write no more than the address upon the side intended for that purpose. Some correspondents continue their solutions upon the address side; and, as such an infringement of the rule involves an extra charge for postage, the cards are returned to the postal authorities.

Tyro (Eastbourne).—Both problems are too simple, but they show great promise. We shall be glad to hear from you again.

Shadforth (Oxford).—We noticed the absence of East Marden and W S B from the list under No. 1855, but were ourselves unable to discover any good defence to the author's attack. The solution was published last week. Have you omitted to notice the effect of P takes P en passant?

Hereward (Oxford).—The problems shall receive our best attention; but we require your name and precise address.

A de R (Paris).—Letter received, and your request complied with.

C F N (St. Paul's).—Thanks for the problem.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to K 8th	Q takes Q*
2. R takes P (on Q 5th, ch)	K to K 3rd
3. Kt to Kt 5th. Mate.

* If Black play 1. R to K 3rd, White continues with 2. R to K B 6th (ch); if 1. Q to K 4th, then 2. Kt to Kt 6th (ch); if 1. K takes Kt, then 2. Kt to Q 2nd (ch); if 1. P to Q 6th, then 2. R takes P (ch). &c. The foregoing is the author's solution, but the problem can be solved by 1. R to K 7th, &c.

PROBLEM No. 1859.

By James Pierce.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

The following interesting Game was played recently at the Moscow Club between Messrs. Lindenberg and Maude.

(Allgaier Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Herr L.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd
6. Kt takes P	K takes P
7. B to B 4th (ch)	P to Q 4th
8. B takes P (ch)	K to K sq
9. P to Q 4th	P to B 6th
10. P takes P	B to K 2nd
11. Castles	P to Kt 6th
12. P to K B 4th	P to K R 4th
13. P to B 5th

The book move is 13. Kt to B 3rd; but as it leads to a lost game White tries to find one that affords him some chance of winning.

13.	B takes R P
14. B takes Kt	B to Kt 4th

A very ingenious stroke.

15. Kt to B 3rd

He cannot exchange Bishops because of the threatened check at Kt 6th, and if

15. B to Q 5th	B takes B
16. Q takes B	P to B 3rd, &c.

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Herr L.)
15.	B takes B
16. R takes B	Q to R 5th
17. Q to K 2nd	R takes B
18. Kt to Q 5th	Kt to Q 2nd

Ingenious again, but scarcely sound.

19. Kt takes B P (ch)	K to K 2nd
20. Kt to Q 5th (ch)

If White had accepted the proffered sacrifice of the Rook, Black would have continued with 20. P to Kt 7th, 21. Kt to K B 3rd, threatening 22. Kt to Kt 5th, or 22. Kt takes K P, &c.

20.	K to Q sq
21. Q to Kt 2nd	Kt to B 3rd
22. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt
23. P to K 5th	Q to Kt 4th

To prevent the check at K 6th.

26. Q to B 4th (ch)	B to B 3rd
27. Q to K 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd
28. Q to Q 6th (ch).

Drawn by perpetual check.

Played also at the Moscow Club between Messrs. Maude and Sabanin.

6. P to K R 4th	P to K R 3rd
7. P takes P	P takes P
8. R takes R	B takes R
9. K to B 2nd

An interesting but decidedly unsound variation of this opening.

9.	P to Kt 5th
10. Q to R sq	B takes Kt
11. Q to R 7th	Q to B 3rd

Correctly played. If 11. P to Q 4th, then follows:—

12. B takes P	B to K 3rd
13. Q takes Kt (ch)	K to K 2nd
14. Q takes Q	R takes Q
15. Q P takes B	P takes Kt

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Herr S.)
16. B takes Kt	P takes B
17. P takes P, &c.
12. Q takes Kt (ch)	K to K 2nd
13. Q P takes B

He has nothing better to do. If—

13. Kt P takes B	P takes Kt
14. B to B 3rd (ch)	P to Q 3rd
15. P to Q 4th	Kt takes P
16. Q takes P (ch)	Q takes Q
17. B takes Q	Kt takes P, and wins.

Black mates in three moves.

The London edition will be translated into English by the author, and will be issued to subscribers only. M. Delannoy was a popular writer in the palmy days of La Palamède, and his reminiscences of chess and chessplayers extend over the past fifty years. Intending subscribers should communicate with the author, addressed to 42, Leicester-square, London.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 26, 1879) of His Imperial Highness Napoleon Eugene Louis Jean Joseph, Prince Imperial, formerly of the Palace of the Tuileries, Paris, but late of Camden-place, Chiselhurst, who died on June 1 at Hyotoyozi River, South Africa, was proved in London on the 20th ult. by Eugene Rouher and Jean Baptiste Francheschini Pietri, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. A full copy of the will has already been published. The original is deposited in the Principal Registry of the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice at Somerset House; in the case of his father, the Emperor Napoleon III., only an official copy was proved, and deposited in this country, the original being retained at the Notary's Office in Paris. The Prince's will is all in his own handwriting, and is contained on two whole sheets and one half sheet of letter paper, the bottom of each page being either signed "Napoleon" or "N." The will not having been executed in the presence of witnesses, as required by the provisions of the English law, an affidavit of M. Pietri is filed with it that it is throughout in the handwriting of the deceased Prince, and an affidavit also from the counsel of the French Embassy in London that the deceased's domicile was French, and on the assumption that the will was throughout in the handwriting of the testator it was made in conformity with, and was valid according to the French law.

The will (dated Dec. 3, 1874), with five codicils (dated Feb. 8 and Sept. 10, 1875; March 3, 1876; Feb. 8, 1878; and July 9, 1879) of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B., late of Bertram House, Hampstead, who died on Aug. 27 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by Frederick Hill, the brother, and Alfred Hill and Edward Bernard Lewin Hill, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Lady Hill, £1000, and she is to have the use for life of all his presentation articles (including the Order of the Bath and the medal of the Society of Arts), household furniture, goods, pictures, and effects; on her death the presentation articles are to go to his son Pearson, and his executors are requested to then give some books out of his library to his relatives and certain of his friends. The rest of his furniture and effects at his wife's death are to be divided between his three children; to his executors he gives £150 each; to his sister, Mrs. Caroline Clarke, an annuity of £100 for life, and legacies to servants. The executors are authorised to expend a sum not exceeding £250 in completing and publishing a history or statement, not as yet complete, in connection with the penny postage system, and also in writing and publishing a biography of him. After this has been done, his books, papers, and memoranda in connection with the subject of postage are to be offered to the British Museum; and the marble bust of him by Brodie, or any portrait of him, or a copy to be made at the expense of his estate, is to be offered to the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery. The testator devises his land and hereditaments at Hampstead and Tottenham to his son Pearson, subject to the right of his widow to occupy Bertram House under certain conditions. There are some special provisions and bequests to each of his children, for the purpose of equalising their positions; and having regard, as the testator declares, to their respective families, he leaves the residue of his property upon trust as to two fifths for his son Pearson, two fifths for his daughter Mrs. Eleanor Caroline Fellows, and the remaining one fifth for his daughter Mrs. Clara Pearson Barnett, subject, however, in each case to the payment thereout of a fixed sum to Lady Hill for life, who is also entitled to the income of a considerable property under her father's will. The executors have full authority given them to carry on or deal in any way they may think fit with the action against the Metropolitan Asylums' Board, of which the deceased was the principal plaintiff, or to make any arrangement with respect to the costs. The testator directs that his funeral shall be conducted with strict regard to economy, and without unnecessary show or parade.

The will (dated Oct. 25, 1878) with a codicil (dated July 10, 1879) of Mr. Eustache de St. Pierre Chaplin, late of Lasborough Park, Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire, and of No. 24, Motcombe-street, Belgrave-square, who died on Aug. 11 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by Mrs. Katherine Elizabeth Chaplin, the widow, and Percy Chaplin, the brother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife his furniture, plate, pictures, jewellery, wines, household effects, horses, carriages, live and dead stock, and legacies to his brothers, a nephew, and two of his servants. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his issue as she shall appoint. The testator confirms the settlement made on his marriage, and declares that the provision made by will for his wife and children is in addition to, and not in substitution of, the benefits given to them by the settlement.

The will (dated April 10, 1875) with a codicil (dated March 8, 1878) of Mr. William Lyde Wiggett Chute, late of The Vyne, near Basingstoke, Hants, who died on July 6 last, was proved at the Winchester District Registry on Aug. 27 last by Chaloner William Chute, the son, James Allan Wiggett, the nephew, and Mathias Buckworth Wilks, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Martha Chute, certain furniture and effects, all his carriages and carriage-horses, wine to the extent of forty dozen, and plate to the extent of 1000 ounces; the rest of his wine, plate, furniture, pictures, and effects are to go to his son, who shall succeed to the settled estates; and he devises all his freehold and copyhold property upon the same uses as those to which the settled estates are held. After making some other provisions, the testator leaves the residue of his personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and then for all his children, except his eldest son, Chaloner William, who succeeds to the settled estates. Mr. Chute was a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for Norfolk and also a magistrate for Hampshire, and was for ten years one of the members of Parliament for the Western Division of Norfolk—viz., from 1837 until 1847.

The will (dated Oct. 5, 1878) with a codicil (dated May 10, 1879) of Mr. James Fuller, late of Addlestone, Chertsey, Surrey, who died on Aug. 22 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by George Fletcher and Francis William Willmott, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000.

The Board of Management of the Wolverhampton Orphan Asylum has received a legacy of £3000, bequeathed to the charity by the late Mrs. Bennett, of Dudley.

Mr. Torrens, M.P., in delivering the prizes and certificates to the pupils in the St. Clement's Youths' Institute last Saturday, pointed out the necessity of technical knowledge on the part of the English workman as a condition of successful competition with the foreigner.

The Postmaster-General, in reply to a communication from the Society for the Prevention of Street Accidents, calling attention to the fact that mail-vans, which are usually driven at a very rapid rate, do not carry any light at night time, has stated that he does not think it necessary that mail-vans should carry lights, and adds that he is not aware of a single accident occurring through their not doing so.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article.

It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair, never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. Second—Its easy application without any previous preparation of the hair; without that sticky and disagreeable sulphur odour found and complained of in other preparations. It never stains the skin or linen. It retains the hair in any desired position, and is cooling and cleansing to the scalp.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.

A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for "The Mexican Hair Renewer," price 3s. 6d. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.
Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 2s. 6d. per Bottle. The Fragrant Florline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London. Retailed everywhere.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post-free.—E. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—ROBARE'S AUREOLINE produces the beautiful Golden Colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., of all Perfumers. DOES YOUR HAIR TURN GREY? Then use HERRING'S PATENT MAGNETIC BRUSHES and COMBS. Brushes, 10s. and 15s. each. Combs, 2s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 15s., and 20s. each. Pamphlets upon application.—5, Great Marlborough-st., W.; 93 and 95, City-road; and of all Perfumers.

BREIDENBACH'S PHLOMIS (Sweet Scented). Beautifully fragrant and lasting. 2s. 6d. to 40s. Bottle. BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE, invaluable for preserving the growth of the Hair. 1s., 2s. 6d., 5s. Bottle. Of all Chemists and the Makers, 157B, New Bond-street.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO has been proved, by its unparalleled success of fifty years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and a fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds, which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

THE PARIS "FIGARO" of APRIL 3, 1874, says the reason why the English ladies so far surpass their French rivals in the beauty of their hair is because they are not constantly changing their treatment of it, but keep to the use of its best and truest friend—viz., ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL—which for eighty years has been considered the best and safest preparation for the Hair ever used. It is especially adapted for the Hair of Children. Sold everywhere.

SOZODONT.—The Peerless liquid Dentifrice. Its use imparts the most fragrant breath; it beautifies, cleanses, and preserves the teeth in a surprising manner. It gives a delightfully fresh taste and feeling to the mouth, removing all Tartar and Scurf from the Teeth, completely arresting the progress of decay, and whitening such parts as have already become black by decay or neglect. Impure Breath caused by Bad Teeth, Tobacco, Spirits, or Catarrh, is neutralised by Sozodont. The price of the Fragrant Sozodont is 3s. 6d., put up in large bottles, fitted with patent sprinklers for applying the liquid to the tooth-brush. Each bottle is inclosed in a handsome toilet box. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers, and by JOHN M. RICHARDS, Great Russell-street, London. Observe the Name SOZODONT on the label, box, and bottle.

CAUTION.—BOND'S CRYSTAL PALACE GOLD MEDAL MARKING INK (three Gold, five Silver and other Medals for merit and superiority). Some chemists and stationers for extra profit deceive you. Genuine label, "Daughter of late John Bond." Works, 75, Southgate-road, N. No heating required. £100 reward on criminal conviction for conspiracy, misrepresentation, or vending a colourable imitation.

IT IS A SCIENTIFIC FACT that no preparation, blending, or doctoring, can destroy the noxious properties of immature Whisky, therefore consumers of Whisky should have the Government Guarantee that the Whisky they buy is really the age it is represented to be, and should not accept the very vague and indefinite descriptions of "Matured," "Old," "Very Old," &c.

The General Order of H.M. Commissioners of Customs, dated Feb. 22, 1878, permits us to bottle our Whisky and Label it in Bond. Each bottle bears a label, which is a guarantee signed by us (and practically endorsed by Her Majesty's Custom House Officers) that the spirit contained therein is the Distillation of the year stated thereon, and is not flavoured or in any way adulterated. We offer it to the Public as

PURE IRISH WHISKY.

Guaranteed by our Name and Trade-Mark (Swan and Crown). Age, Registered, Bottled, Labelled, and Capsuled in Bond, per case of 12 bottles (2 Imperial gallons).

THOMAS SCALLY and CO., Eustace-street, Dublin.

"Sept. 25, 1879.

"I have carefully examined several samples of 'Swan and Crown' Whisky sent to me by Messrs. Thomas Scally and Co., of Dublin, from the Queen's Bonded Stores. The spirits were of various ages, the newest being three years old. All the samples were of the best manufacture, and proved to be free from any trace of 'fusel oil.'

"If stimulants must be used, the safest for almost all purposes certainly is pure whisky; but it is a matter of prime importance that it should be well matured, in order that the deleterious compounds I have never failed to detect in new distillations of the best 'pot still' spirit may undergo chemical change, and thereby lose their noxious properties.

"In good whisky the changes referred to are generally complete in two years—certainly in three; but no amount of flavouring can destroy the injurious character of immature spirit.

"Some years ago I had to report to her Majesty's Government on the composition of large numbers of samples of whisky collected by the authorities throughout the country, and I pointed out that some of the samples contained in a single glass sufficient 'fusel oil' to kill a well-grown rabbit. The maddening effects of such raw, fresh whisky were, at that time, attributed to adulterants, but incorrectly, as I proved, the chief cause being the immaturity of the spirit. The remedy suggested was the compulsory retention in bond of all whisky under a certain age.

"I regret much that my old recommendation has not yet been carried out; but Messrs. Thomas Scally and Co. have arranged a plan whereby the exact age of their 'Swan and Crown' Whisky is substantially guaranteed by the Revenue authorities, and the security offered by the firm with their brand seems to me to be as complete as merchants of high character can make it.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1879.

The Cabinet Council held on Monday last, the arrival and reception of Cetewayo at Capetown, the new Settlement of Zululand devised and put in force by Sir Garnet Wolseley, the advance of our Indian Forces upon Cabul, the late and very unsatisfactory progress of the Harvest at home, the anti-rent agitation in Ireland, and the lamentable depression of agricultural interests in Great Britain, compose altogether a budget of subjects for speculation and reflection to which it is impossible to do justice in a single article. The questions which they involve, over and above party considerations, with which we do not meddle, are many and various; but for the present they can hardly be styled "urgent." They will keep. In some form or other, they will come up for discussion again and again during the next three months. We have the less scruple, therefore, in putting them aside for a while, and giving the place of precedence to the Social Science Congress which must be dealt with immediately, or entirely passed over.

A somewhat novel feature characterised the meetings of the Social Science Congress this year. Its President was a Bishop—the Bishop of Manchester—and perhaps no fitter man could have been found to occupy the post. His opening address was singularly adapted to the occasion. The field of topics over which he ranged was wide, but comprehensive. The President did not lose sight of the central conception which he was chosen to represent, and he treated all questions he thought fit to touch in their relation to that conception. He seems, however, to have been perplexed, as others before him have been, with the misleading title conferred upon the Society by its founders. Social life, by its very nature, is unsusceptible of scientific treatment. The art of living together in communities is deduced from empirical not from scientific reasons. It is tentative rather than absolute—or, perhaps, we might more accurately say, it draws its material from facts and influences which are mutable rather than from fixed laws. How can we best utilise and enjoy individual life without trenching upon that of our neighbours, or how can communities best consult the common welfare without trampling individual rights into the dust? There is a large field here for intellectual and practical effort. It is not science, but it closely borders thereupon. It touches innumerable interests, but it cannot suitably touch them with dogmatic certainty. It is bound to pay special regard to circumstances. It cannot be quite sure of its conclusions, but it is not therefore worthless. On the contrary, the region which it adopts for its own presents no end of problems the approximate solution of which is of vital importance to human kind.

There are scarcely any topics relating to the life of communities which may not be suitably touched upon in a Social Science Congress. Health, education, and morals—public amusements, customs, habits—how far men in society may act upon rights which belong to them as individuals, and how far they are bound to keep them under restraint—what kind of provision should be made to satisfy social wants, and whether that provision should be legal or voluntary—these, and an innumerable variety of similar questions, while they perhaps will admit of no positive reply applicable in all cases, yet furnish ground for useful interchange of thought, and even sentiment, and for that kind of discussion which tends to practical results, if it do not actually bring them to pass.

Take, for example, one of the subjects discussed at the Congress this year—namely, the relations of the modern Stage to public morals. Two Papers were read upon this theme—one by Canon Woodhouse, and another by Mr. Hermann Vezin: one from a clerical point of view, the other from the point of view of an artist; and, as usual, lively discussion followed the reading of the papers. Now, it is not necessary to hold, on the one hand, that the Drama, in the present condition of society in England, can be wielded as a moralising force of great power, upon the English population, nor to believe, on the other, that its effect upon the mind is essentially depraving. But a great deal can be said, and was said, on both sides, calculated to remove ignorant prejudices, to inspire new hopes, and, on the whole, to suggest an apt use of one of the social forces still available for raising the moral tone of the community. It is better sometimes to talk about a subject than formally to expound it. We think it was so in this instance. It is so, perhaps, in the majority of instances furnished by the proceedings of the Social Science Association. But, what then? It may lead to no direct action, but it indirectly prepares the mind for action—often, too, of the right kind—when the time for action has arrived. There is much truth in the words of one of our contemporaries:—"Proposals exceedingly absurd in themselves have sometimes been the forerunners of real improvements; and so long as they are known to be nothing more than suggestions thrown out in a discussion club, they are, at the worst, perfectly harmless. It is only when they arrogate to themselves the name of science that they become irritating and consequently mischievous."

The chief danger to which the Social Science Association is exposed is, we are glad to see, diminishing year by year. That danger consisted in a disposition to promote, of course from the very best of motives, a paternal Government. In its earlier days it was but too ready to countenance the notion that communities could be drilled into methodical habits and good behaviour. The forces to which it now looks for the accomplishment of the ends it has in view are less coarse and will prove to be more effective. Influence, rather than law, is the weapon in which it places its main trust. It is more persuasive and far less imperative than it once was. In fact, its members understand better what they have to do and how to do it. The Society, in consequence, though it may make less noise than it did, makes more progress. Its last Session ranks among its best.

THE COURT.

The Queen continues at Balmoral. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn took leave of her Majesty yesterday week, and left the castle for town en route for Aldershott. Professor Charteris arrived at Balmoral. The Queen, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Grand Duke, and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Hesse attended Divine service on Sunday at Crathie church. Horses were changed, and the journey continued to the Linn of Dee, where tea was partaken of. The Royal party enjoyed a walk down the vale towards Glen Tilts. Braemar was reached about six o'clock, and her Majesty was heartily greeted. The Queen and the members of the Royal family have enjoyed their usual out-of-door pleasures. Colonel Maude has left and Lord Charles Fitzroy has arrived at the castle. Mr. Wilson Fox has left and Dr. Marshall has arrived, and Dr. Royle has also left the castle.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their children, accompanied by the King and Queen of Denmark and the various members of the Danish Royal family, have made frequent yachting and driving excursions within reach from Copenhagen. The Prince and the Russian and Danish Princes, with Prince Louis of Battenberg and other members of the English Royal suite, have enjoyed excellent sport deer-stalking, and also at the pheasant battues in the Royal preserves on the Island of Arnack. The various Princes and Princesses one evening assisted at the performance of the ballet "From Siberia to Moscow," at the Royal Theatre. The Prince and Princess, with Princesses Louise Victoria and Maud of Wales, accompanied by the King of Denmark, have attended Divine service in the Protestant church at Gientofte, a small village near to Bernsdorff Castle. Captain Hedemann, R.D.N., has been attached to the Prince during his visit in Denmark.

THE EMPRESS EUGENIE.

The Empress Eugénie left Camden House on Thursday week en route for Abergeldie Castle, the Highland residence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, which has been placed at the Empress's disposal for a few weeks. She drove to the Chiselhurst station, where a special Great Northern train was in readiness for the conveyance of the Empress to the north. Mr. John Shaw attended the train over the South-Eastern Railway viâ London Bridge to King's-cross; where the saloon carriages were attached to the Scotch express, which, accompanied by Mr. Cockshott, superintendent of the line, left at half-past eight o'clock. The Empress breakfasted at Perth the next morning and lunched at Aberdeen, whence by command of the Queen, the remainder of the journey was performed by special train to Ballater, where the Marchioness Dowager of Ely met the Empress and attended her to Abergeldie Castle, the Queen's carriage having been sent to convey the Empress. She attended Divine service on Sunday in the Roman Catholic chapel at Braemar.

The World says that the household at Camden Place is broken up, and Dr. Conneau and M. Pietri have virtually taken their leave of the Empress, with whose family they have been so long associated.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, who have been staying six weeks at Jugenheim, left Darmstadt on Tuesday for Paris, en route for London.

Princess Louise of Lorne will leave Quebec on the 18th inst. by the steamer Sarmatian for England.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

The Congress of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science was opened on Wednesday week at Manchester. As reported in a large portion of our last issue, the Bishop of Manchester gave the opening address in the evening. He dealt principally with the subjects of education and health, both of which, he said, were being treated with a great amount of practical wisdom in Manchester. The School Board system, he argued, had not failed in its immediate object of getting a larger number of children to attend efficient schools, and the next step onwards would be the gradation of those institutions. He had no doubt the cost was a serious trouble to the minds of the ratepayers, but probably within a quarter of a century the Boards would be masters of the situation. He spoke at length on questions of sanitation, water supply, and drainage. The burial of the dead was, he thought, a problem which would have to be faced more practically and seriously than hitherto, and the Bishop expressed his opinion that the earth was made or the living and not for the dead. Cemeteries, he added, were becoming not only a difficulty, but actually a danger. He added some observations on the encouragement of thrift and providence.

The actual work of the Congress began next day, when an address on international law was given by Sir Travers Twiss, after which all the sections met. Sir Travers Twiss recommended an assimilation of the laws of different nations in regard to testamentary dispositions, marriages, and in other respects which relate to the domestic and commercial intercourse of nations. The principal papers during the day were by Mr. Chesson upon our obligations towards uncivilised nations; Mr. Hughes, upon local self-government; Mr. Chadwick, upon the management of joint-stock companies; and Mr. Watts, upon art.

All the sections sat yesterday week. The Hon. Lyulph Stanley, president of the Education Department, delivered an address upon secondary and higher education. He advocated an efficient and extended organisation of the board system applied to the education of boys and girls alike. The basis must be unsectarian, and there must be an alteration of the present lax mode of payment by results, which led to fraud and cramming. There should be a thorough inspection by a mixed body, on which the Government should be represented, but where it should not be supreme. Some remarks on the subject were made by the Bishop of Manchester. Sir Arthur Hobhouse dealt with the subject of charitable endowments; Mr. John Lloyd drew attention to the operation of the Prisons Act; and Mr. F. J. Kingsley introduced the question of the Land Laws. In the health department the sanitary conditions of houses was discussed.

Last Saturday Mr. F. S. Powell gave the opening address of the day in the Health Section. He laid some stress upon the inferior political position in the Government of the gentleman whose department deals with the health of the country. Those who desired the effectual working of the laws dealing with poverty and disease should endeavour to place the Minister in charge of these matters on an equality with a Secretary of State. There was a long discussion in the art section on the moral aspects of the drama and the stage. The Bishop of Manchester presided, and papers by the Rev. F. Woodhouse, upon "The Power of the Drama as a Moral Teacher," and by Mr. Hermann Vezin on "The Moral and Artistic Aspects of the Stage," were read. The Bishop of Manchester, in summing up the discussion, said that there appeared to be a healthier moral taste in the middle and lower classes of this community than in the upper, whose moral standard was half conventional. He noticed that the worst type of plays in London appeared during "the season." Amongst the subjects discussed in the other sections were the treatment of habitual criminals, defects of public elementary schools, which could be amended by the Kindergarten system, domestic water supply, and the reform of the land laws. All the sections rose early, and, though the weather was far from pleasant, many members of the congress joined the excursions arranged for the afternoon.

The Congress on Monday gave up its morning meeting in the Concert-hall, which all last week had been so scantily attended. Lord Reay delivered his address as President of the Economy and Trade Department in the reception-room at the Townhall, a handsome apartment which, in addition to the attractions given to it by the skill of the decorative artist, possesses a striking adornment in a series of admirable paintings of the Cumberland lake district, in which the municipality of Manchester has recently been so much interested. In this room there was a goodly gathering to hear Lord Reay discourse on Foreign Land Tenure, comparing it with ours, and giving the preference to an improved English system. He arrived at the conclusion that our existing system is quite capable, with judicious reform, of answering all the needs of the present hour. Everything which interfered with the application of capital and science should be removed, and facilities given for the easy sale of land. The President of the Association (the Bishop of Manchester) took occasion, in thanking Lord Reay for his address, to call attention to the system of co-operative farming employed on two farms at Sudbury. Lord Reay's audience divided itself speedily into groups, who took their way to the several sections. Papers were read on the marriage laws, commercial treaties and free trade, art administration, domestic water supply, and criminal jurisprudence. The best attended section was the Jurisprudence Section, where Dr. Waddilove and Dr. Edgar advocated the assimilation of the marriage laws of England. The papers gave rise to a long and occasionally animated discussion. In the Economy and Trade Section there was a large attendance, including the Bishops of Manchester and Salford, Mr. Jacob Bright, M.P., and others. Mr. John Slagg read a paper on the renewal and extension of our commercial treaties and the chief obstacles to the general adoption of Free Trade. At a working men's meeting held in the Free-Trade Hall at night, the Bishop of Manchester said that he was grieved when reading a report of the Trades Union Congress at Edinburgh to see a suggestion to form a federation of trades unions to struggle against the masters. He advised them to take a fair, intelligent view of the situation, and not to be misled by any erroneous idea of their own interests. Unless they and their masters worked together on a good understanding, the prosperity of the country could not be maintained. Several other gentlemen addressed the meeting.

The last presidential address was delivered in the Townhall on Tuesday morning, in the room set apart for the consideration of matters affecting economy and trade. The Bishop of Manchester presided, and there was a fair attendance of members. The address by Sir Coutts Lindsay, as president of the Art Department, was upon the Relations of the Fine Arts to Social Science. He contended that England is making progress in art, but that, with the exception of poetry, in which we stand unrivalled, the circumstances of the country have prevented us from acquiring proficiency. Some interesting questions were discussed in the sections. Mr. G. Smith brought under notice the condition of gipsy and Arab children, and recommended that the Canal-Boats Act should be applied to them. Mr. Charles Hallé read a paper on the Progress of Music in England during the last thirty years. He stated that there had been a considerable increase in the number of English composers, but none of them have produced works as brilliant as those of Sterndale Bennett. Orchestral playing has gone on improving in this country until our bands are now equal to the best of those on the Continent. Mr. Hallé spoke on the great increase of musical teaching in the country. It was increasing year by year, and was helping to raise the standard of instruction. Thirty years ago the standard in England was very low indeed. Depressed trade, the licensing system, and Parliamentary representation were also considered. With pleasant words of compliment or greeting, all the occupants of the chairs closed the sittings of their respective departments for the Congress of 1879.

On Wednesday the Congress was brought to a close. At the meeting of the council an invitation from Edinburgh to hold next year's sitting in that city was accepted. Mr. Hastings, president of the council, took the chair at the concluding meeting of the Congress, in the Mayor's parlour of the Townhall. The usual congratulatory resolutions were passed, together with votes of thanks to the Bishop of Manchester for his services as president, to the local authorities for the accommodation afforded, and to the officers of the association for their services.

"Echoes of the Week" and several other articles are unavoidably deferred.

A handsome new Townhall was opened at Saffron Walden last week. It is the free gift to the inhabitants of Mr. Alderman G. S. Gibson, banker.

The compensations paid in the last financial year to the officers of the late Ecclesiastical and Prerogative Courts amounted to £59,677.

At a meeting of the Walsall Town Council on Monday, it was agreed to acquire forty-six acres of land at Reed's Wood, for the purpose of a public recreation ground, on the terms assented to by the lord of the manor, the Earl of Bradford.

The sixth annual provincial meeting of the Incorporated Law Society was held on Tuesday and Wednesday at the Guildhall, Cambridge, under the presidency of Mr. N. Tertius Lawrence, the president of the society.

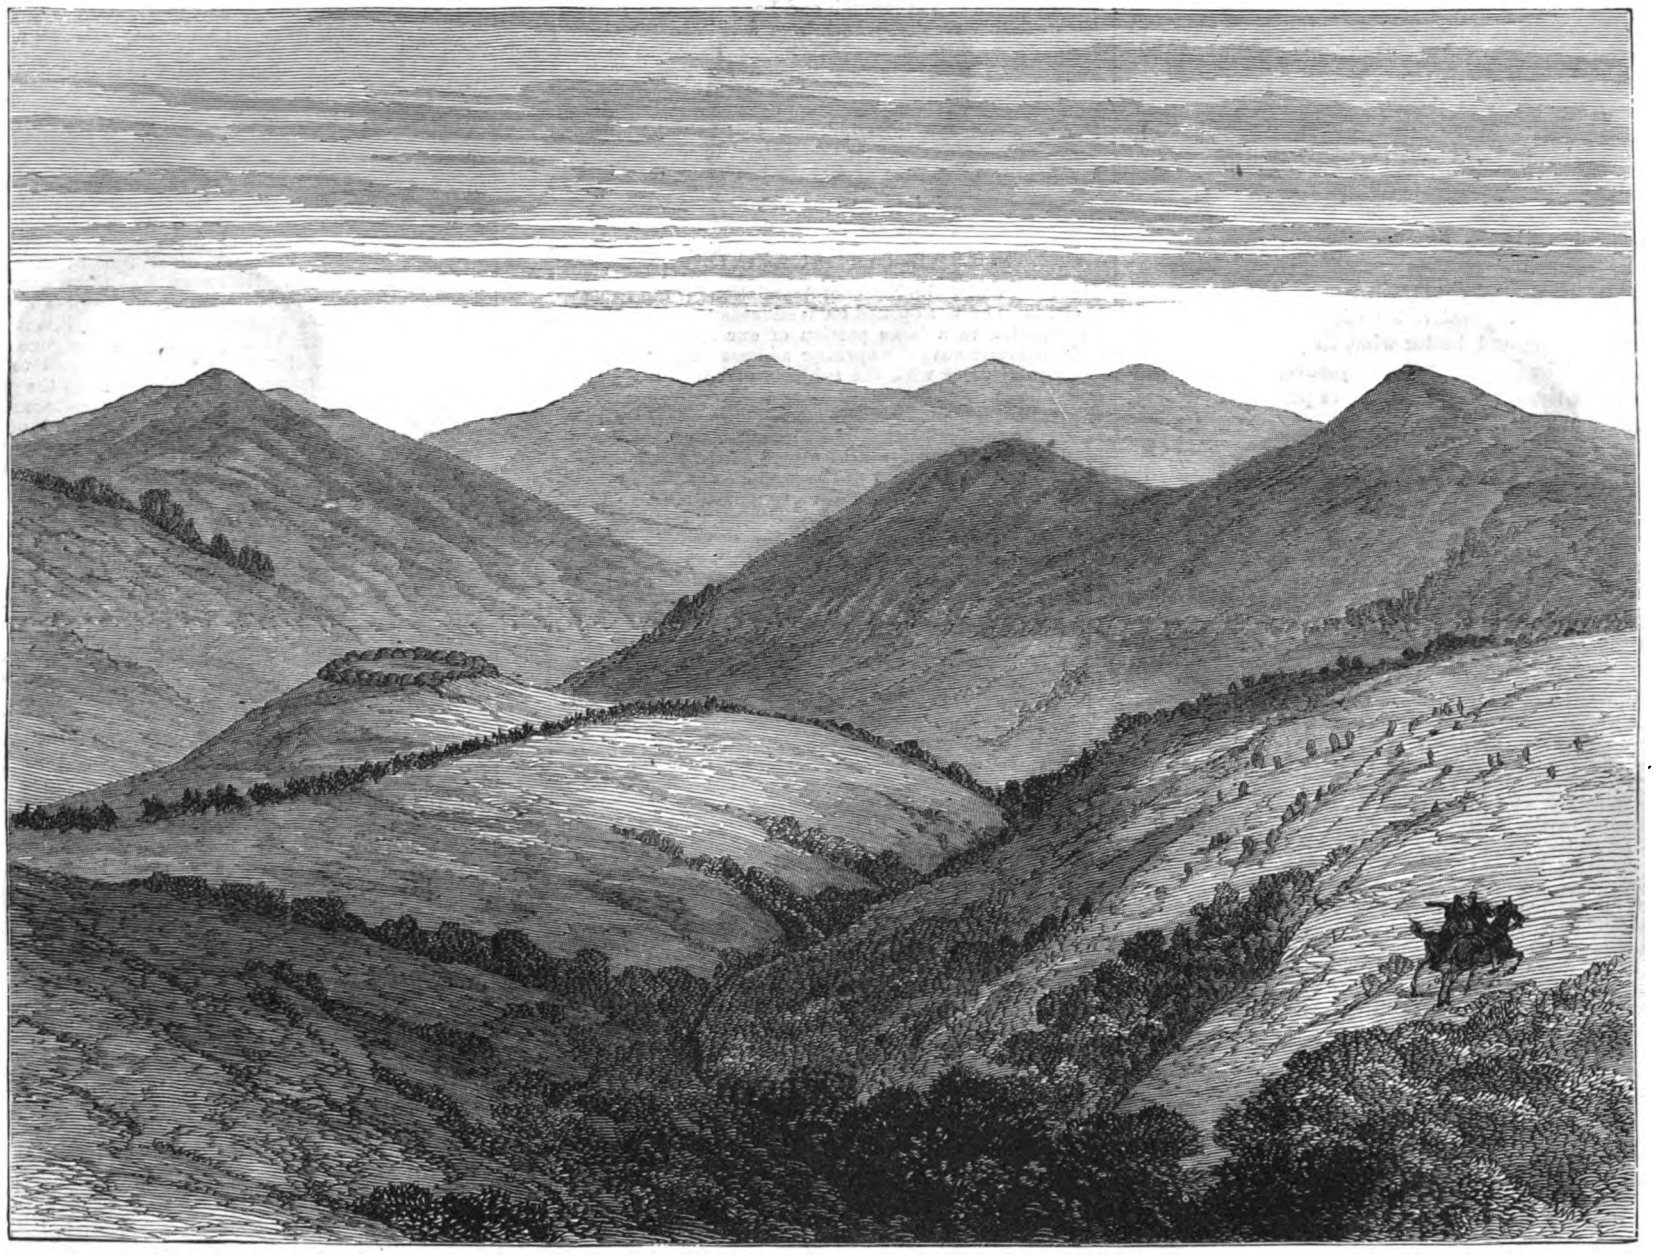
Mr. St. Barbe, the British Assistant-Resident in Mandalay, in accordance with instructions from the Indian Government, and after notice to the Burmese authorities, left Mandalay on the 6th inst., intimation having been given to British residents.

The annual congress of German authors was this year held at Dresden, and was attended by about fifty members. Among the chief resolutions come to was one respecting the institution at Leipsic of a court of arbitration to decide disputes as to literary property, whether between authors and authors, or between authors and publishers.

A conference of miners' delegates from all parts of the North Staffordshire colliery district was opened at Kidsgrove on Monday to discuss questions relating to labour and wages. A resolution was passed calling upon the miners for renewed agitation, and it was also decided to reorganise the union and stand upon the defensive to the utmost degree in all matters relating to the reduction of wages.

The inquiries which are being made at Liverpool for Miss Edwards have led to the clearing up of another mysterious disappearance. A young woman who left her home at Ingleton eight months ago and had not been heard of since has been found in Liverpool. She had gone to London and got married there, but soon became a widow, and she then went to Liverpool for employment.

A reading-room at Liverpool, which has cost £25,000, was opened on Wednesday by the Mayor, and in the evening a banquet to celebrate the event was held, at which Lord Derby presided. His Lordship spoke in praise of local or municipal patriotism. Mr. Sala replied for "Literature," and Professor Roscoe for "Science." The evening closed with a conversazione in the new Reading Room, the Art Gallery, and the Museum.



A meeting of the Incorporated Law Society was held at Cambridge on Tuesday, at which Mr. N. T. Lawrence, the president, read an address on the law of real property. He controverted various statements made by public writers and speakers, and made many suggestions for amending the law. The Mayor of Cambridge moved a vote of thanks to the president, which was seconded by Mr. Marten, M.P. The members were afterwards entertained at dinner at the Guildhall by the Cambridgeshire Law Society. Sheffield has been chosen as the place of meeting next autumn.

Special services were held last Sunday in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, on the occasion of the opening of the southern part of the building, which has been restored at the expense of Dr. William Chambers. By the restoration the divisions between the High Church and the Preston aisle have been removed, thus adding greatly to the general accommodation. The Preston aisle was erected in 1455 by the Lord Provost, magistrates, and community of Edinburgh in testimony of their gratitude for having succeeded in obtaining possession of the arm-bone of St. Giles. The stonework, which was hidden from view, has been restored to the condition and appearance which it presented before the Reformation, and the whole forms an excellent specimen of fifteenth-century architecture. An offshoot from the Preston aisle, called the Chapman or Montrose aisle, has also been restored. It was built by Walter Chapman, who introduced the art of printing into Scotland in 1507, and founded by him in honour of his Royal patron, James IV. The services were largely attended.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

We have received most satisfactory intelligence of the arrival and instant victory of the British force marching on Cabul. The Afghan insurgents there made an obstinate resistance, but were speedily and completely defeated, losing their guns and taking to flight; so that we may expect soon to hear that the Bala Hissar and the whole of the Ameer's capital city have been occupied by the British army.

The following official telegram from General Sir F. Roberts was received at the India Office, Westminster, on Wednesday:—

"Charasiab, Oct. 6, 8 p.m.—Reconnoitring parties sent out on all roads to Cabul at daybreak this morning. Reported enemy were advancing in great force from direction of city. Parties had to retire, and soon afterwards the high range of hills intervening between Charasiab and Cabul were crowned with troops and city people, while parties of Gilzais appeared on the hills running along both flanks of camp, and reports were received that the road to Zahidabad was threatened, along which General McPherson was advancing with large convoy of stores and ammunition. Warning was sent to McPherson, and some assistance in cavalry. It was absolutely necessary to carry the heights in front before evening.

"General Baker was intrusted with this very difficult duty, which he completed in the most admirable manner. He sent a party under Major White, 92nd Highlanders, consisting of a wing of that regiment, three guns, eighth battery third brigade Royal Artillery, 100 of 23rd Pioneers, and two squadrons 5th Punjaub Cavalry, to advance by the right of the gorge. After an obstinate resistance, Major White succeeded in driving the enemy off the main hills, and later in the day captured twelve guns; our loss here, three Highlanders killed, six wounded, and a man of 5th Punjaub Cavalry killed, two wounded, and a 9th Lancer man. General Baker, with 72nd Highlanders, wing 5th Goorkhas, one hundred of 5th Punjaub Infantry, remainder 23rd Pioneers, four guns No. 2 mountain battery, and two Gatlings made a turning movement to the left, and was soon hotly engaged; he reports that the advance of the troops was made to his entire satisfaction, height after height being carried in gallant style; our loss, Captain Young, 5th Punjaub Infantry; Lieutenant Ferguson, 72nd Highlanders, Dr. Duncan, 23rd Pioneers, wounded, and about seventy men killed and wounded; enemy's loss unknown, but it must have been considerable. They fled in great confusion, and lost two standards.

"We have had strong piquets posted, as large numbers of Ghilzais are still in the neighbourhood, but I hope to-morrow to be able to march within a short distance of Cabul. Ameer states that Bala Hissar is no longer in possession of people he can trust; his family have moved into the city. The headmen of Chardeh and suburbs of Cabul have asked if they may pay their respects to me. Others will probably follow their example, and I am sanguine that the country will quiet down now that the people see opposition is useless, but at present there is very great excitement in the city and country generally. I received greatest assistance throughout the day from army signalling under direction of Captain Stratton, 22nd Regiment."

A Plan of the city of Cabul and the roads of approach to it, sketched by Mr. W. Simpson from the most approved sources of topographical information, is engraved this week. Cabul is situated at the extremity of a plain elevated 6400 feet above the sea level. It stands on the Cabul river, immediately above its junction with the Logurh, and on the east side of a range of hills, or two ranges divided by the river, so that it is well protected from the north-westerly and south-westerly winds. The vicinity of the town, being fertile soil, and being thus sheltered and well watered, is adorned with orchards and fruit-gardens, and the climate is very agreeable. The city itself is about three miles in circuit, and is not walled, but surrounded by a line of weak ramparts, which run from one hill to another, affording no great defence. The western entrance, from the Jellalabad road, which will also be the road for General Sir F. Roberts to approach from Khushi and Zergun Shahr, coming down the Logurh valley, passes into the city by the Lahore gate. Here was formerly a ruinous wall of sun-dried bricks, which would be a feeble obstacle to the passage of an army into Cabul. There is no entrance direct from the south side of the city, where the ground is high and precipitous, but here is the citadel, called the Bala Hissar, containing the Ameer's palace and garden, and the barracks of the troops. This precinct, which is about half a mile long and a quarter of mile broad, is inclosed by high stone walls and a broad moat, with towers at intervals, as shown in our Plan. It also includes an upper fort, or Keep, standing 150 ft. above the city, and armed with batteries of artillery, but this is commanded by a steep eminence rising to the south-east. The whole city, and the Bala Hissar likewise, are commanded by the range of hills on the north-west side, beyond the river. The road from Kandahar and from Ghuzni approaches Cabul from the south-west, and in that direction lies the tomb of Sultan Baber. In the centre of the town is the Chouk, the principal bazaar, which is a square with covered arcades on its four sides. The Shor bazaar lies adjacent to the Bala Hissar. The city population has been reckoned at 60,000, Afghans, Kuzzilbashis, Tajiks, and Hazaras, with a few Armenians and Hindoos, most of whom are money-lenders. The Kuzzilbashis, or "Red-heads," numbering ten or twelve thousand, belong to the Shiah sect of Mohammedans, and are therefore detested by the Afghans, who are fanatical Sonnites. The Chandol quarter of the town, inhabited by these foreign sectaries, who are of Persian extraction, has sometimes been attacked and plundered by the Afghan mob. The townsfolk have some manufactures of leather and iron, and weaving of cottons, or even shawls; but they are more employed in the transit trade between India and Central Asia.

The localities marked and named in our Plan include those which are associated with the British occupation of Cabul nearly forty years ago, the encampments of our army in 1839, the murder of Sir Alexander Burnes by the mob on Nov. 2, 1841, and that of Sir William Macnaghten by Akbar Khan on Dec. 23, and Behmaru, the place where General Elphinstone's troops were attacked, in January, 1842, when leaving their cantonments under the guarantee of a formal capitulation.

Our Illustration of a street or avenue of shops in the city bazaar at Cabul has, by permission of Mr. Henry Graves, of Pall-mall, the fine-art publisher, been copied from Atkinson's "Sketches of Afghanistan," a volume of lithographed views to which we are much indebted. We also present, on our front page, the warlike figures of Afghan mountaineers, some of whom, for aught that anybody here can tell, may at this moment be giving trouble in the rearward communications of Sir Frederick Roberts on his march to Cabul. They may have cut the telegraph line in the Khoorum Valley or slain the bearers of his despatches from the front, as we have no news of his doings in these last few days. The "dak," (pronounced "dawk") is the Indian post or mail, and Mr. Simpson our Special Artist, shows the style in which it has to be carried in Afghanistan. A strong guard of sowars or troopers, from one of the Native Cavalry regiments, escorts the letter-bags, which are conveyed on horseback, with relays of horses at every "choki," or station, along the road.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL DORAN, C.B.

This distinguished officer commands one column of the force under Major-General R. O. Bright, C.B., entering the territory of Cabul by way of the Khyber Pass. Brigadier-General John Doran, C.B., is son of the late Major Doran, of the 18th Royal Irish. His brother, Robert Doran, was adjutant of the same regiment, and was killed at the storming of the Great Pagoda at Rangoon in 1852. General Doran entered the Army in 1842, and in point of years is the senior officer with the northern column. He was in the 24th Native Infantry at Moodkee and Ferozeshah, receiving the Sutlej medal. He then served against the Black Mountain tribes in 1852 (India medal). On the outbreak of the Mutiny he served as Brigade-Major at Peshawur, and for his services there he was recommended for the command of a regiment (now the 27th Punjaub Infantry), which he had raised at Rawul Pindee in 1857, and which he led against the rebels in 1858-9, obtaining the Mutiny medal. He commanded this corps also in the China war, obtaining another medal and a Brevet-Majority, in the expedition against the Loondkhor tribe in 1866, and in Looshai in 1872, gaining then the C.B. In 1877 he commanded a brigade in the Jowaki expedition, and again he commanded a brigade under Sir F. Maude in the Khyber, which gives him his fifth war medal.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL DUNHAM MASSY.

The cavalry brigade forming part of the army of General Frederick Roberts, in the advance on Cabul from Ali Kheyl and the Khoorum Valley over the Shutargardan Pass, is commanded by Brigadier-General William Godfrey Dunham Massy. This officer, who won signal renown for personal bravery at a very early age, has now again distinguished himself by promptly seizing the Shutargardan pass when the news of the recent massacre at Cabul reached the British outposts. He was born on Nov. 24, 1838. We find by Burke's "Peerage" that he is the eldest son of Major Henry William Massy, a gentleman of an old Anglo-Irish family. Before he was sixteen years old Mr. Dunham Massy was gazetted to an ensigncy in the 19th Regiment of Foot. He served with that regiment a few months later in the Crimea, and was under fire at the battle of the Tchernaya, and frequently in the trenches before Sebastopol. He commanded the leading company of the regiment at the storming of the Redan, and rendered himself famous by the cool courage and fortitude he displayed in that desperate engagement before he was seventeen years old. He was dangerously wounded, and lay in the ditch for the night. For his services on this occasion he was promoted Captain three months after he completed his eighteenth year. He also received the war medal and a Turkish medal, and was specially nominated Knight of the Legion of Honour by the late Emperor of the French. He was presented with a sword by the Fellows and Students of the University of Dublin, of which he was a member, and where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and was subsequently granted the diploma of Doctor of Laws. Captain Massy was transferred to the 5th Royal Irish Lancers on the re-embodiment of that regiment, and became its Major at the age of twenty-four. Before he was thirty-two he became its Commandant, which post he filled with great credit for over seven years. He was promoted full Colonel in the Army on Oct. 31, 1871, being the last officer of the service who was compelled to purchase his commission, which, to the discredit of the country he served so well, cost him out of his own pocket nearly £8000. Last March Colonel Massy was selected, without solicitation, by the Duke of Cambridge for the command of a brigade in India. The late war had nearly closed on his arrival, and he was sent to take temporary command of the Khoorum Valley field force of nearly 12,000 men in the absence of General Sir F. Roberts. The massacre of Cabul found this able and energetic young General at his post and ready to march. General Massy is married to the elder daughter of the late Sir Thomas Seaton, and has a family. He receives a small pension for wounds equivalent to the loss of a limb.

The fine steamer Fairy Queen, which plied on Loch Eck, Argyleshire, was destroyed by fire yesterday week.

An Industrial Exhibition was opened at Rochester on Wednesday afternoon. Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., delivered an address, wherein he congratulated the nation on its emancipation from the restrictions of the old trade guilds, which would have rendered such a display impossible.

At a meeting of the Liverpool Town Council on Monday it was resolved, by 33 votes to 12, to direct the promotion in Parliament of a bill for obtaining a supply of water from the river Virnwy and its tributaries, in Montgomeryshire. Under the provisions of the Borough Funds Act, a town's meeting will have to be held to confirm this resolution.

On the Cavan estate of the Marquis of Headfort a number of the tenants met on Monday to give expression to their deep feelings of indignation at the gross treatment of his Lordship and his agent, through anonymous letters, threatening them with death unless a reduction of rent were granted. A reward of £100 has been offered for the discovery of the writer of the menace.

The experiment is being tried of importing oranges into England from Australia. In announcing the dispatch of the fruit the grower stated that he should not have thought of sending oranges such a long distance but for the fact that they were now in season and cheap in Adelaide. A few of the oranges with paper wrappings showed signs of a minute brown mould in bruised places; those packed free in the sawdust are said to be in perfect condition.

The Gazette contains the following notice:—"The Queen has appointed Henry A. Churchill, C.B., her Majesty's Consul at Resht, to be Consul in the Island of Sicily, to reside at Palermo; Robert C. Clipperton, Consul at Nantes, to be Consul for the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin, to reside at Philadelphia; Richard Reade, Consul at Philadelphia, to be Consul for the Ionian Islands, to reside at Corfu; Hugh Mallett, Consul at Panama, to be her Majesty's Consul at Buenos Ayres; Robert Drummond Hay, Consul at Mogador, to be Consul for the Eastern Coast of Sweden, to reside at Stockholm; John Edward Wallis, now her Majesty's Legal Vice-Consul at Cairo, to be her Majesty's Consul at Port Said."

The remains of Colonel Bourne, who has been missing since Aug. 28, were found on Tuesday in a stream which runs into the River Fyne, Argyleshire. A party of searchers penetrated, by means of ladders and ropes, to the recesses of a deep ravine below the Eagle's Rock, and one of them discovered the body lying in the water, half covered with gravel, exactly below the spot where the deceased appears to have fallen over the precipice.

Ferry opened a new college at Coulommiers, and at a banquet given subsequently by the municipality of the town the Minister made a speech, in which he thanked the municipal authorities for having appealed to the University to co-operate in the organisation of the college, and said the University was not, as had been asserted, the embodiment of irreligion, but was the institution which did the largest part in the work of free examination by the human intellect, and whose task it was to defend the conquest of modern ideas.

M. Léon Say has written a letter to his colleagues in the Cabinet requesting them to hasten, as far as possible, the preparation of their estimates for the Budget for 1881. M. A movement has been begun in France by private individuals with a view to drawing closer the commercial relations between that country and the United States, and removing the restrictions upon their trade. A meeting of Belgian ironmasters was held last week at Charleroi, and was largely attended. It was stated that the orders for future delivery received in Belgium, as well as the general tendency of the news from abroad, gave ground for the belief that the revival of the iron industry had all the better prospects of duration since it seemed to extend to all countries.

GERMANY.

The final elections to the Lower House of the Prussian Diet were held on Tuesday. In Berlin all the nine deputies returned belong to the Progressist party; but on the whole it is believed that the Opposition have lost considerably. The president, Dr. Simson, and other officials were then sworn in, and Dr. Simson made a speech, and closed the proceedings by a call for cheers for the Emperor, to which an enthusiastic response was made.

Field Marshal von Manteuffel, the newly appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, arrived at Strasburg on the 1st inst. and issued the following address to the inhabitants:—"I to-day assume the office with which his Majesty the Emperor has intrusted me of Imperial Governor of Alsace-Lorraine. May God give me strength to exercise the powers conferred upon me to the glory of the German Empire and to the welfare of Alsace-Lorraine."

DENMARK.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

An Imperial decree, dated the 30th ult., has been published, appointing Count Trautmansdorf President, and Prince Schönburg Constantin Czartoryski Vice-President, of the Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath.

The appointment of Baron Kallag as head of department in the Ministry for Foreign Affairs has been officially announced.

The Austrian Reichsrath met on Tuesday. Count Trautmannsdorf, the newly-elected President of the Upper House, opened the proceedings with a speech in which he said the Reichsrath had now to devote its attention to the practical interests of the empire, its former task having been to strengthen and consolidate the Constitution. The formal opening of the Reichsrath by the Emperor took place on Wednesday. mercial treaties. The deficit in the national income for 1880 is to be covered by a reform in the direct taxation. Upon foreign affairs his Majesty remarked that the Berlin Treaty had been carried out in all its essential conditions.

Both Houses of the Hungarian Diet assembled yesterday week for the first formal meeting of the session. The Lower House on Monday appointed its president, vice-presidents, and bureaux. RUSSIA.

The Emperor came from Livadia on Tuesday week, and held a review of the troops stationed around Sebastopol. His Majesty afterwards returned to Yalta.

It is stated that during next year the Russian Ministry of Finance will authorise coinage of bullion of the total value, in roubles, of 27,712,000.

A Daily News telegram from St. Petersburg states that the Chinese Ambassador and his suite left Livadia on Saturday for St. Petersburg. The treaty having been signed, the business of the mission is concluded.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that a secret printing-press was discovered there at a private house in one of the most fashionable districts of the city. Fourteen men and three women were arrested, and type and manuscripts for a revolutionary publication were seized.

The St. Petersburg journals have been remarkably warlike. They speak of a war with Germany and England as inevitable, and as likely to break out in a few months. One of them avows that the Central Asian expedition has for its object to make a clear road by which Russia may invade India in case of war; and the language held against Germany is said to be even more threatening. In preparation for what Russia is thus expecting, she has just increased her naval force in the Pacific, in order to have a number of fast clippers available for privateering.

More recent news from the Russian expedition in Central Asia gives a bad account of its condition. Not only did the invaders lose a large number of officers and men in the engagement with the Turcomans, but the advanced force has been obliged to retreat. This is attributed to a supposed necessity for constructing and defending a hospital.

TURKEY.

The Commission for the rectification of the Turco-Greek frontier had another sitting on Sunday. The Greek commissioners declared that the 13th Protocol of the Berlin Treaty could be discussed, consequently admitting that it would be subject to modification. The Turkish Commissioners announced that they adhered to their former declaration without addition, which is interpreted as signifying that they now make that declaration in a conciliatory sense, but maintain the principle of the free discussion of the 13th Protocol of the Berlin Congress. The Greek Commissioners will refer this declaration to their Government, and the next sitting will be held when they have received a reply.

From Constantinople it is stated that the Marquis of Salisbury has declined to authorise Mr. James Calvert, the British Vice-Consul at Rhodes, to accept the appointment of European inspector of Turkish finances in Asia, on the ground that the duties would be incompatible with the independence necessary in his present position.

A Cabinet Council has been held at the Porte to discuss the question whether the financial commission shall administer, control, or farm out the Turkish customs revenue.

By order of the Governor of Kars, all the Armenian parish schools under the Turkish Government have been closed.

AMERICA.

President Hayes has met with a very cordial reception at Indianopolis.

General Sherman, who accompanies the President on his tour, delivered a speech in the course of which, alluding to the recent fight in Colorado between the Indians and the United States troops, he declared that the army was too small, and strongly urged that it should be increased.

Reinforcements to the number of 1500 men have been ordered to proceed to Mill Creek, under the command of General Crook. Further details have been received of the encounter between the Indians and the United States troops in Colorado. The fight began on the morning of Sept. 29 at Mill Creek, in the Uti reservation. The troops which were on the way to the relief of the White River Agency, which had long been threatened, narrowly escaped a deadly ambush in a deep ravine. They were subsequently surrounded by the Indians, but cut their way out, when Major Thornbury was killed. Fighting continued all day, the United States troops, under the command of Captain Payne, making use of waggons and dead animals for breastworks. The number of white men killed was seventeen. The Indian loss is not so large as at first reported. Firing ceased at nightfall. Captain Payne has taken up a fortified position, and hopes to be able to hold out until the arrival of reinforcements, which are being hurried up from Rawlins, on the Pacific Railway, seventy miles to the north. It is feared that all the members of the White River Agency have been massacred. A new York telegram says that reinforcements reached Payne on the 2nd inst. The Government have issued 1000 rifles to the settlers in Colorado with which to protect themselves against the Indians.

A meeting of Irishmen was held at Boston on Monday, when resolutions were adopted expressing sympathy with the tenant-farmers of Ireland, and pledging themselves to afford them substantial assistance.

The great Agricultural Exhibition, held from Sept. 8 to 20, in the main building of the late Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, has proved a success in every way. The aggregate attendance numbered over 150,000. The total receipts were £13,000, of which £3000 were distributed in premiums. The profits were between £5000 and £6000. It is proposed to hold another national fair in the same place in 1880. The premiums are to be largely increased. It is said that they will amount to £10,000.

Mr. C. S. Read, M.P., and Mr. A. Pell, M.P., members of the British Agricultural Commission, were entertained at a banquet at Winnipeg yesterday week, during which they both expressed a very favourable opinion of the wheat-producing resources of the Red River Valley.

INDIA.

A telegram from the Viceroy states that the month of September was very favourable on the whole to the crops in India. Floods and excessive rain had done harm in parts of Bengal and the North-West. The relief operations continued in the Deccan, and the prospects of the season were generally satisfactory.

The revenue returns of Queensland for the quarter ending September show a total of £403,000, showing a diminution of £32,000 as compared with the same period last year.

The revenue of South Australia for the September quarter was £481,000, being an increase of £89,000 compared with the same quarter of 1878.

Yesterday week was the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of his first work by the most popular Polish writer of the day, Josef Ignaz Kraszewski. His countrymen seized the opportunity to make a great demonstration at Cracow; and from all parts of the world addresses and presents came to the famous author, whose writings, strongly tinged with the national sentiment, have led to his being regarded in an especial manner as the representative of Polish national feeling.

A Lima correspondent, writing to New York papers, states that an attempt made by the Peruvian steamer Huascar to destroy the Chilian ironclad at Antofagosta resulted in a singular episode. A new war torpedo was dispatched towards the Chilian steamer, and when it had travelled half the distance it changed its course and travelled slowly back direct for the Huascar. She had no time to get out of the way, but a Lieutenant jumped overboard, swam to the torpedo, and diverted its course so that it passed to stern of the Huascar.

The Marquis of Salisbury has directed a communication to be forwarded in reply to a memorial from the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society to the effect that negotiations are at present going on between King John of Abyssinia and the Egyptian Government with the view to arrive at an arrangement satisfactory to both parties in regard to the trade to be carried on between Abyssinia and the outer world. Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt has been authorised to address a communication to King John tendering the good offices of her Majesty's Government with a view to a settlement of his differences with Egypt, and Lord Salisbury is not without hope that the negotiations now pending may result satisfactorily.

POLITICAL.

It is a noteworthy coincidence that Sir Stafford Northcote was the first Cabinet Minister to give expression to the natural feeling evoked in this country by the news of the Cabul Massacre, and th at the right hon. Baronet had the opportunity of being the earliest exponent of the views approved at Monday's Council in Downing-street. But, as it happened, the Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke without saying anything political. Entertained by the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Sir Stafford Northcote aptly alluded to the fact that one of the most prominent men of the day, Sir Garnet Wolesley, was an Irishman; and expressed the sorrow with which the Government heard of the massacre at Cabul, in which several Irish fellow-subjects were lost to the service of their Queen and country. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had also the satisfaction of announcing the intelligence of the victory before Cabul.

Sir William Harcourt's two speeches have afforded Ministers ample material for comment. The right hon. gentleman and Lady Harcourt received what some special reporters delight to call "a complete ovation" on their arrival at Southport on the 2nd inst. The object of Sir William Harcourt's visit to this flourishing Lancashire Watering-Place was to open the new Southport Reform Club and to enforce upon its members the necessity of "putting an end to the Government." If not all the ills that flesh is heir to, then clearly all the diseases of the foreign body politic were attributed to the action of the Administration. First, however, Sir William Harcourt entered into a forcible justification of Party Opposition, and plumed the Liberal Party for its services in the past, and its determined antagonism to each step taken by the present Ministry. Told by the Ministerial press that his charges were but a rehash of old arguments, Sir William Harcourt may be said to have compressed his two speeches into the smallest compass on the night the Liverpool Reform Club did him the honour to entertain him at a banquet, presided over by the accomplished Editor of the Liverpool Daily Post, Mr. E. R. Russell. We quote the epigrammatic sentences in question which "Historicus" rolled forth in his bantering post-prandial speech on Monday night:—

> If we happen to have said from the first that the Treaty of Berlin would settle nothing—and it has settled nothing; if we have predicted that Eastern Roumelia would produce a delusion—and it is a delusion—(applause); if we have affirmed that Cyprus would be good for nothing—and it is good for nothing—(applause); if we have said that the Anglo-Turkish Convention was a sham—and it is a sham; if we predicted that to send an Envoy to Cabul would produce disaster—and that disaster has occurred—how can we help saying the same thing? (Cheers.) The logic of facts and the obstinacy of events impose upon us a consistent monotony (Loud applause). No doubt her Majesty's Ministers are not doomed to the same hard fate (Cheers). They can indulge in a variety of style and a diversity of action which is always interesting and sometimes surprising (Cheers). If you want a variation on Lord Salisbury at the Conference at Constantinople, you will find it in Lord Salisbury at the Congress of Berlin (Cheers). No one has practised with greater success the art of expounding opposite opinions (Laughter).

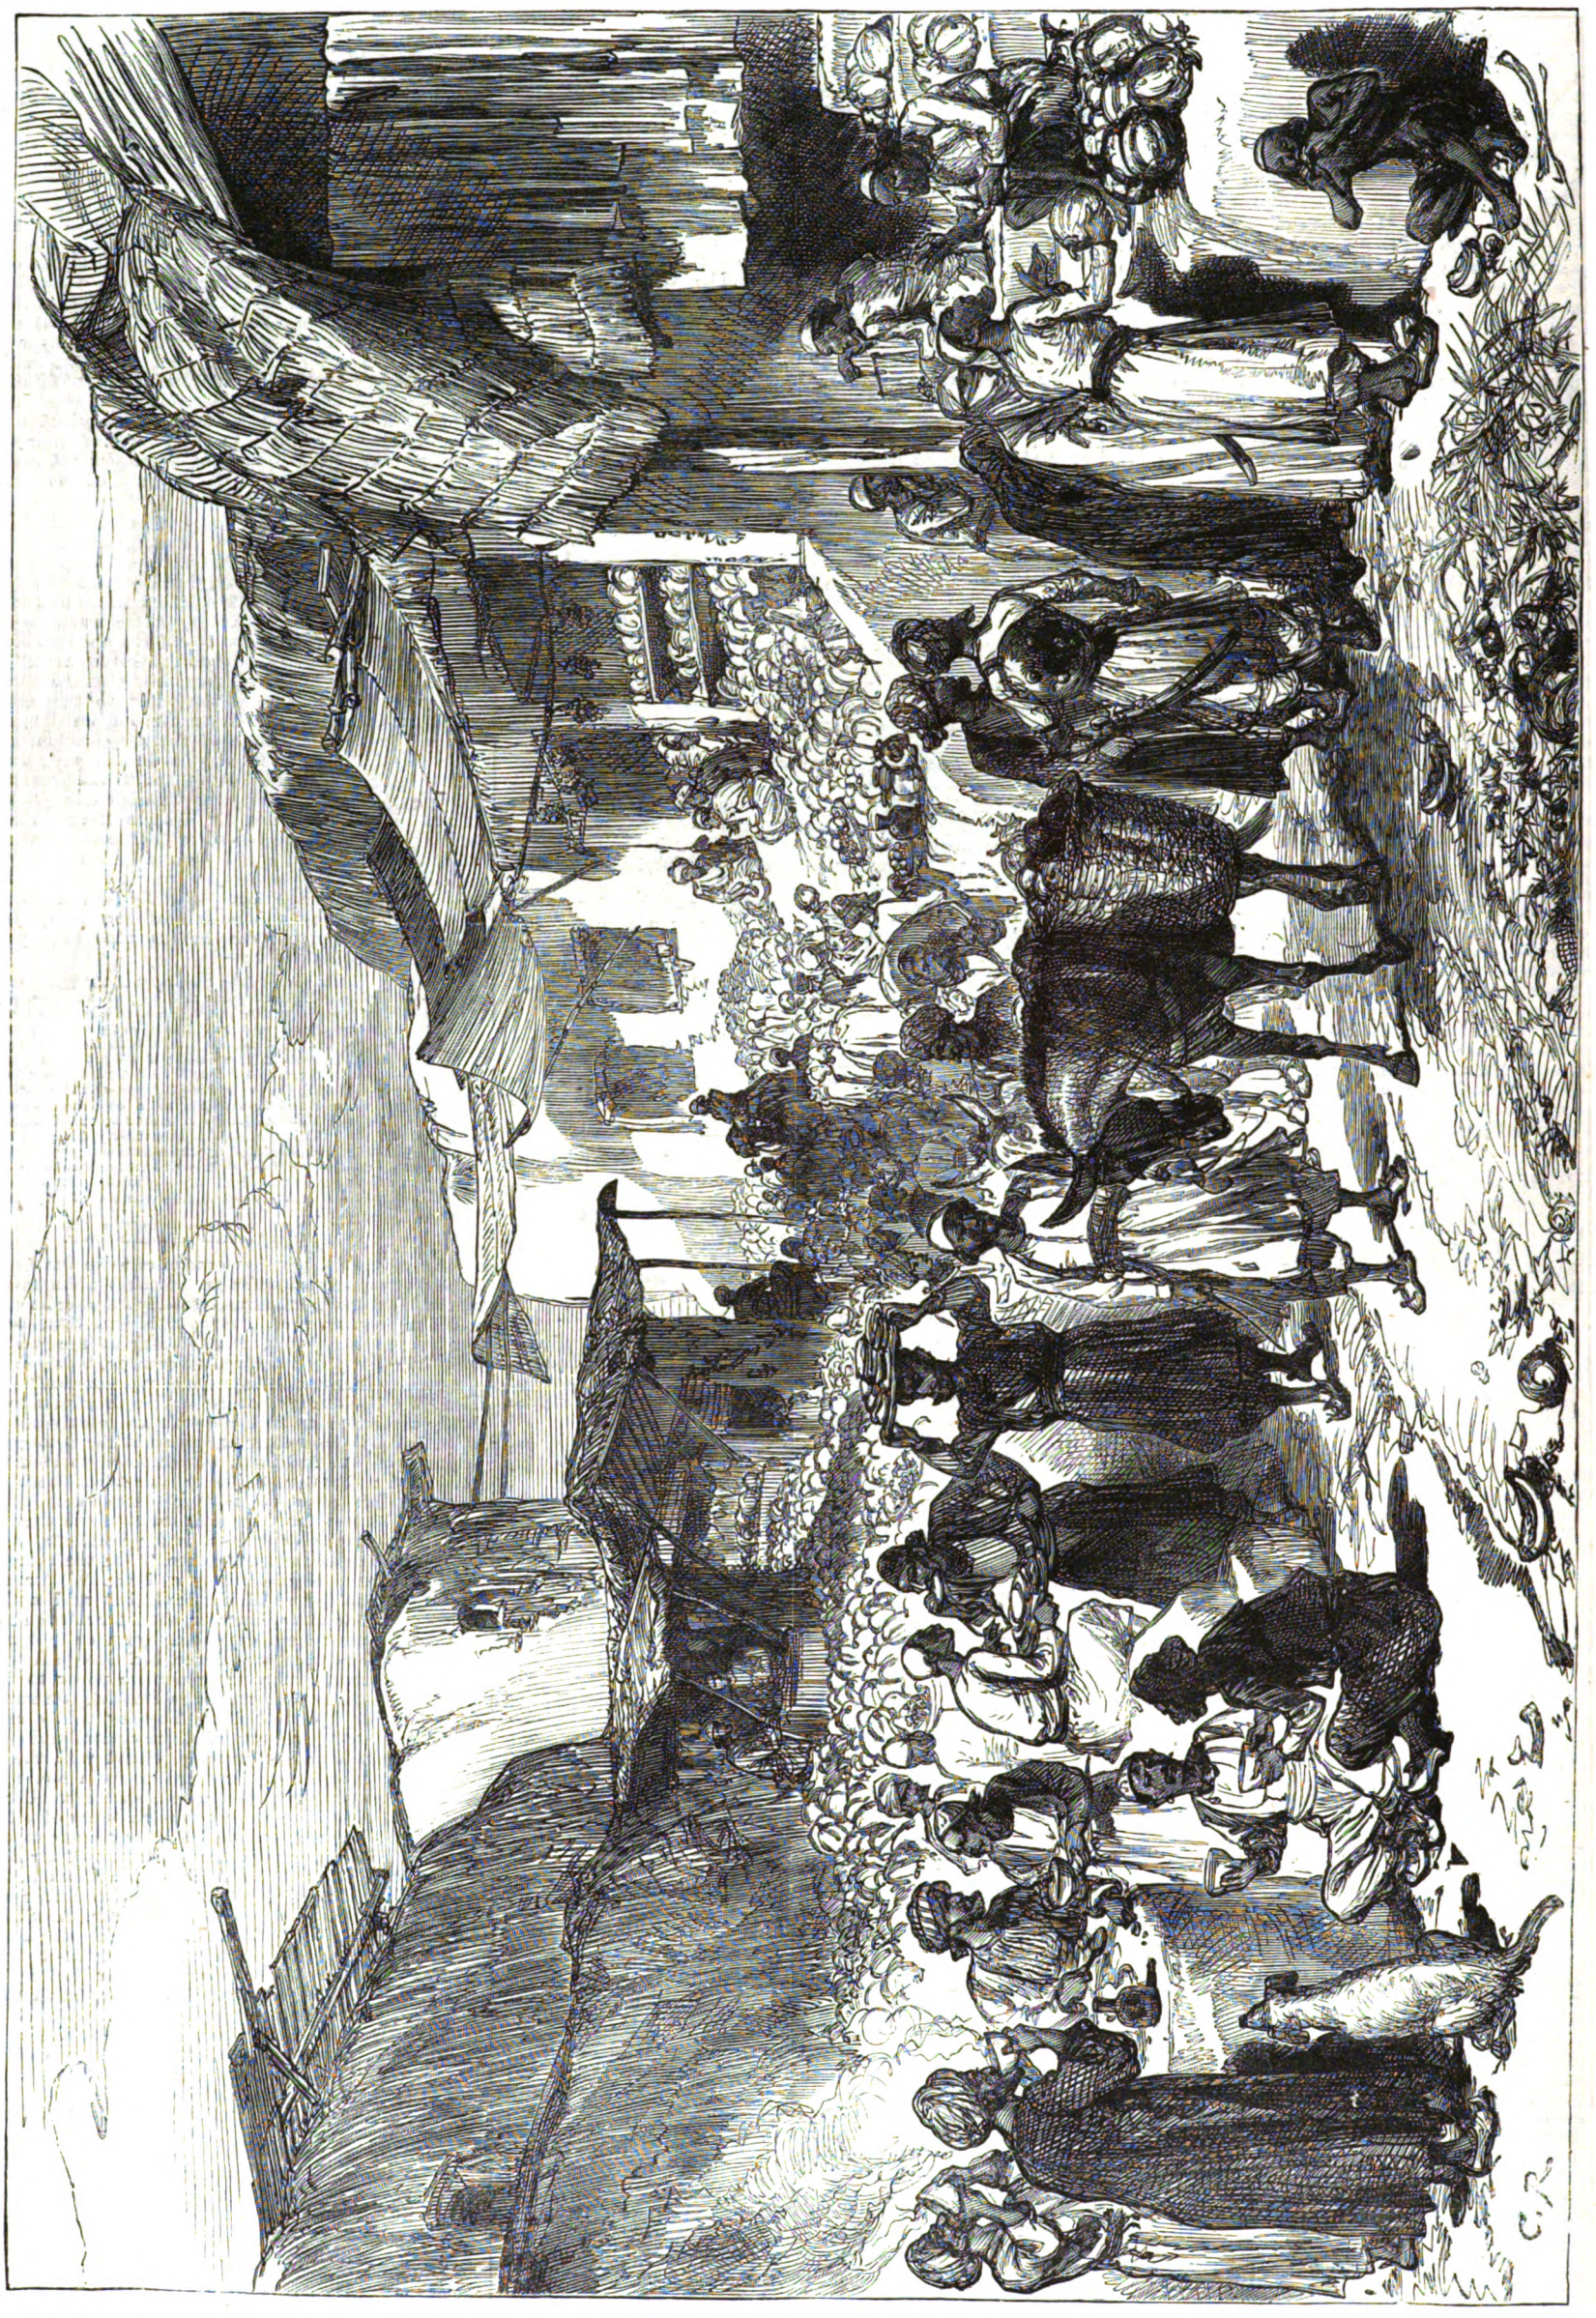
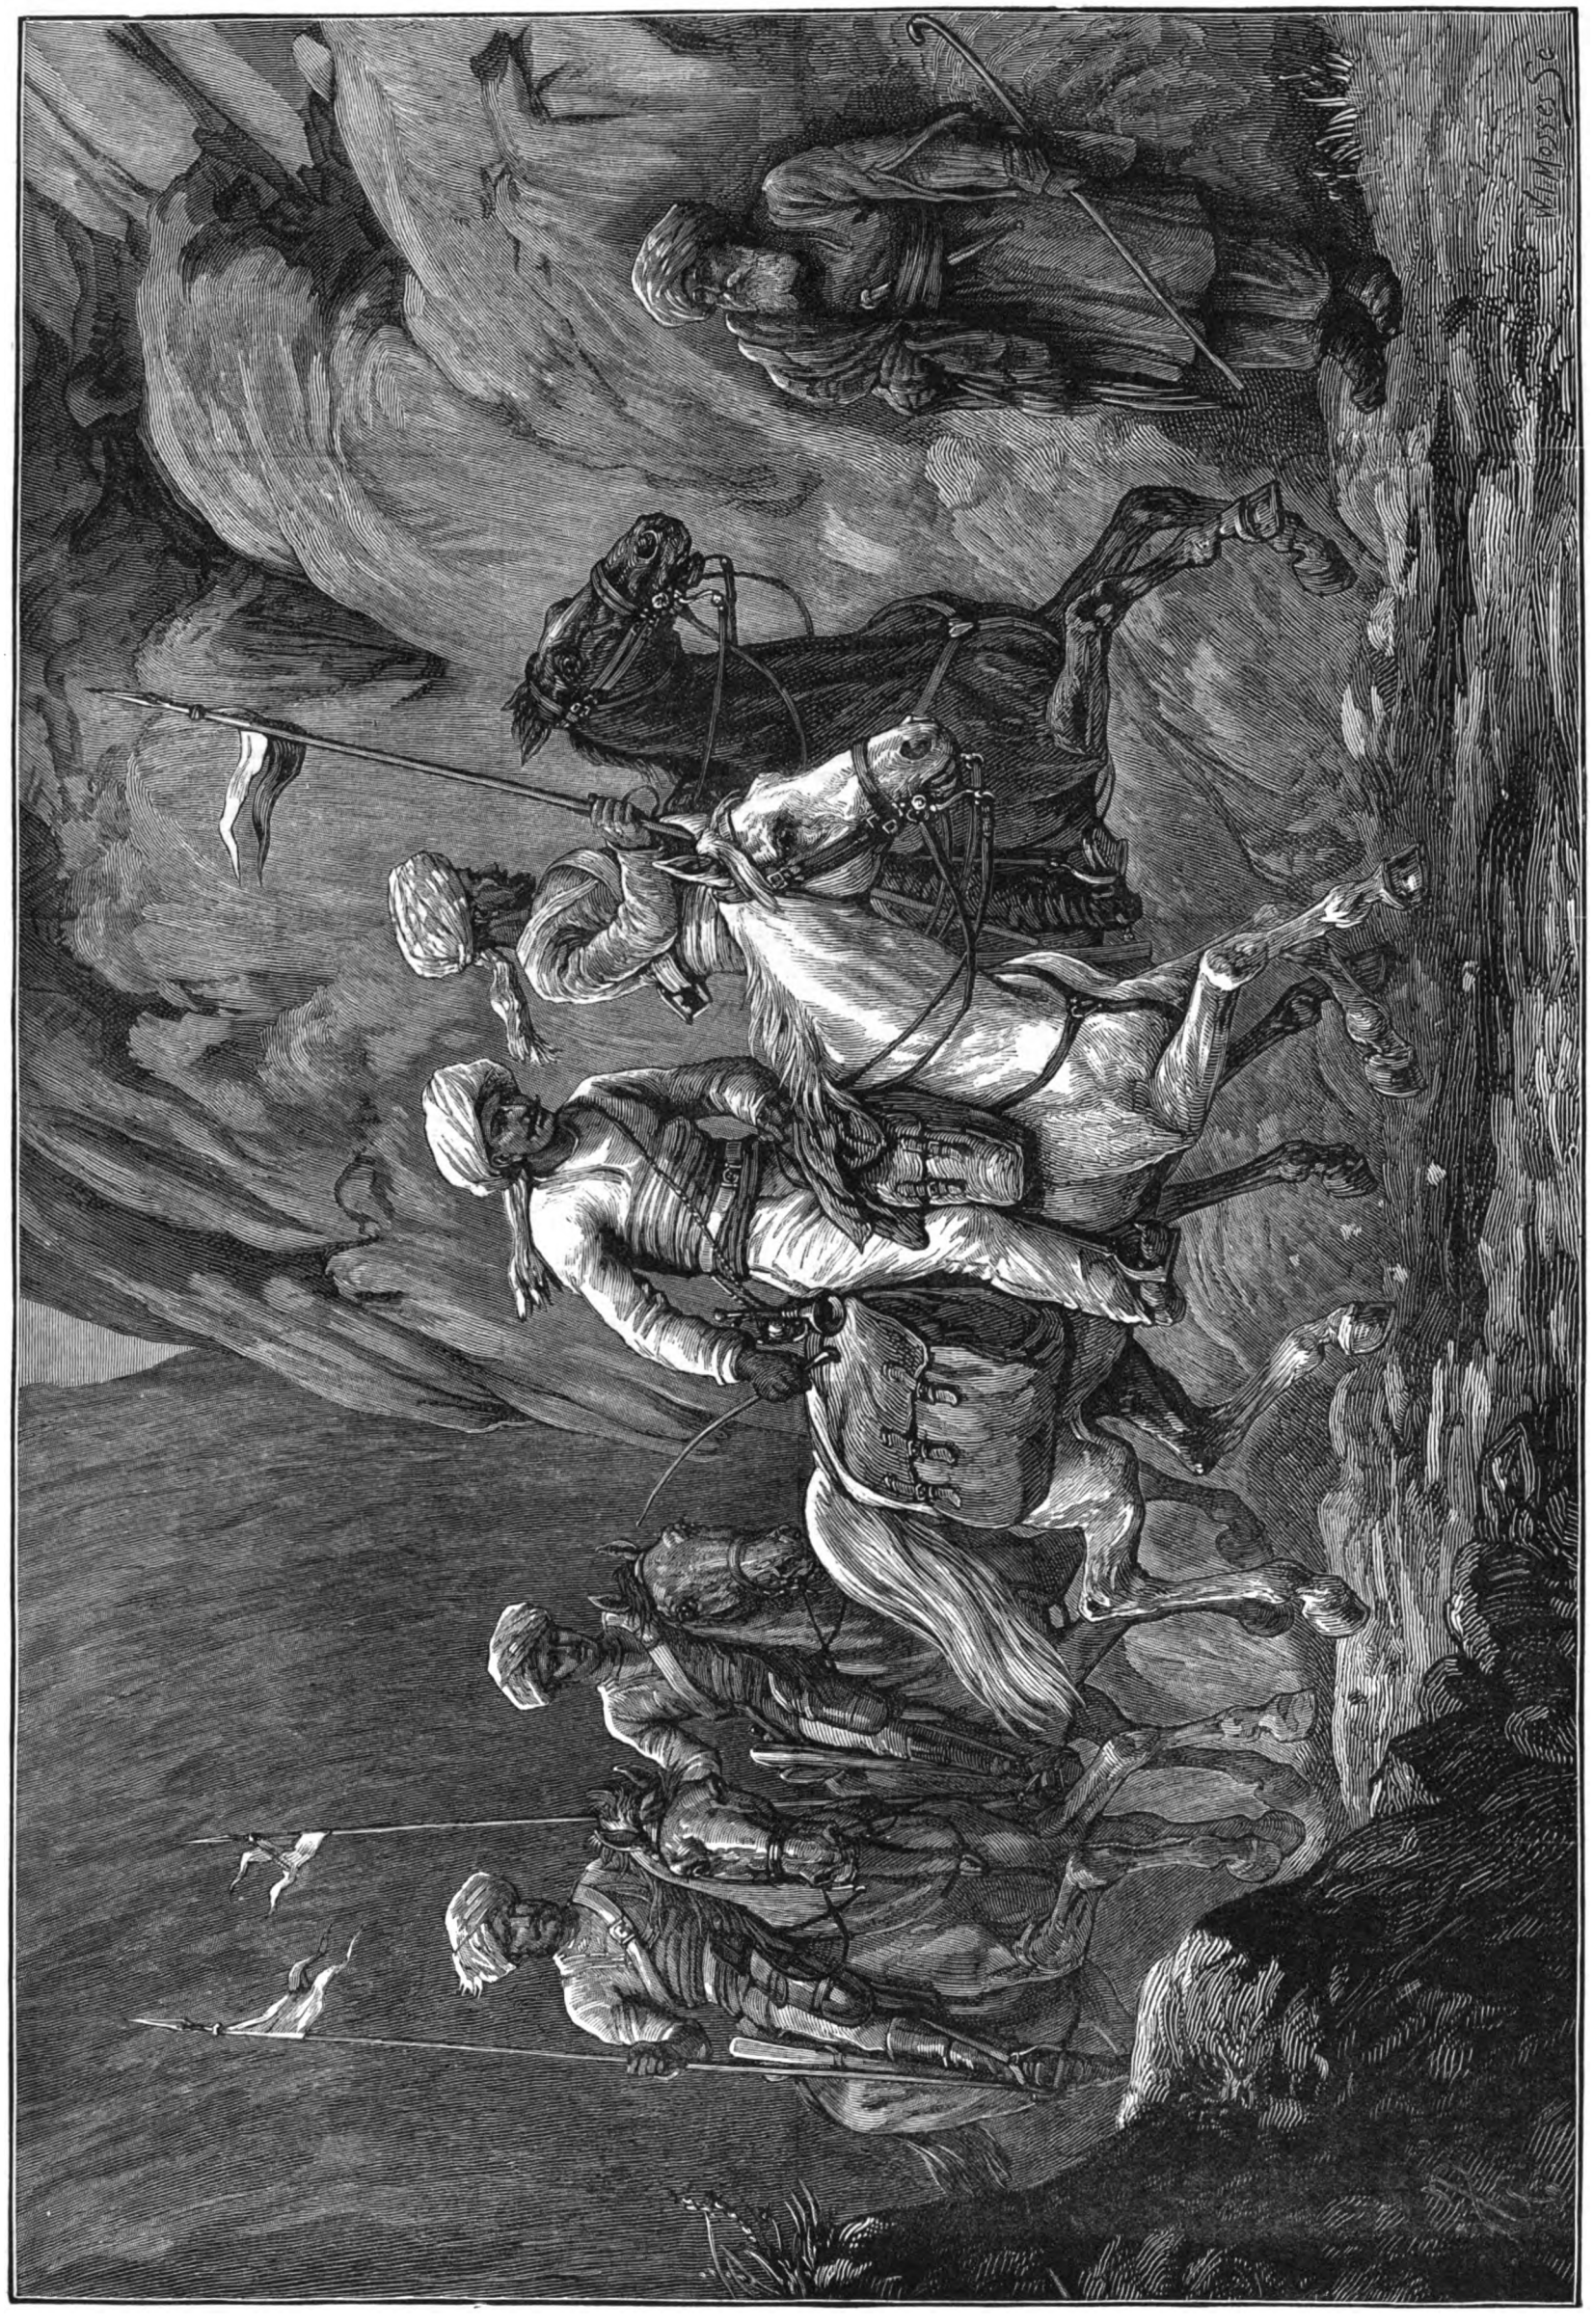
Agricultural depression continues to be the favourite text with the majority of speakers. Lord Walsingham, presiding at the Wayland Agricultural Society's dinner on the 1st inst., could suggest no remedy more efficacious than patience; but Sir Rainald Knightley, M.P., being at the Brockley Agricultural Society's feast the same evening, boldly recommended a return to the exploded system of "protection." The Right Hon. the Speaker (whose philanthropic efforts to settle the land question on an amicable basis are widely known), on the other hand, in presenting the prizes at the Cottagers' Show at Glynde, on the 2nd inst., was disposed to look to the sun for relief; but on Saturday the right hon. gentleman returned his gaze to mother earth, and dropped the practical hint at the Glynde Harvest Home that "the only way to meet the depression is for landlords, tenants, and labourers to pull heartily together." On the same engrossing subject Colonel Loyd-Lindsay and Mr. Walter also mainly spoke on Tuesday at Maidenhead, but said nothing worth repeating. Attention, however, should be drawn to the views on land tenure reform expressed by an enlightened working man of much political experience, Mr. George Howell, who on Tuesday evening read a comprehensive paper to the National Liberal League in their rooms in Buckingham-street, Strand. Lord Randolph Churchill on Tuesday boldly advocated at Woodstock changes in our "antique agricultural system."



The Zulu War has, happily, closed with the capture of King Cetewayo; but our entanglements in South Africa continue to be reverted to in public speeches. There may be a division of opinion as to the advisability of officers taking advantage of demonstrations in their honour to enter into a zealous defence of the political conduct of Sir Bartle Frere. The example set by General Sir Evelyn Wood in this respect was quickly followed by Colonel Redvers Buller and Colonel Pearson; but it may be noted that Mr. A. Staveley Hill, M.P., in addressing the Willenhall Conservative Association on the 2nd inst. as a firm supporter of Lord Beaconsfield, explicitly questioned the wisdom of Sir Bartle Frere's precipitate action, and condemned the war, which the Government had formally disapproved.

From Ireland we have bad tidings—on the one hand, the use of violent language calculated to lead to a breach of the peace at the Sunday tenant-right meetings, which had on Sunday last so largely increased in number that there was one at Cork, addressed by Mr. Parnell, another in Mayo, a third in Galway, another in Sligo, and yet another in Maryborough, Queen's County; and on the other hand the reports of movements of troops to repress agrarian outrages. The Cork meeting, it should remarked, was the more noticeable as Mr. Shaw joined Mr. Parnell, and recommended an extension of the Bright clauses of the Irish Land Act, and the application thereto of the surplus funds of the Irish Church.

Of Conservative meetings the most prominent took place on Monday, when Colonel Burnaby wooed his Birmingham friends afresh, and Colonel Shute defended the Ministry with soldierly vigour at Brighton.



Mr. Adam sent an encouraging note to the Chester Liberals on Monday; and on Saturday Mr. Rylands and others addressed a Liberal meeting at Nelson.

COLONEL REDVERS BULLER, V.C., C.B.

Her Majesty the Queen lately received this gallant officer, with Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, as her visitors at Balmoral Castle, and invested each of them with the Victoria Cross for their acts of personal valour in the Zulu War. The country neighbours and old friends of Colonel Buller in Devonshire last week entertained him with a "welcome home" banquet at Exeter, and it is their intention to present him with a piece of plate. The Duke of Somerset, Lord Lieutenant of the county, presided at the banquet, and among the company were the Earl of Devon, the Earl of Portsmouth, Sir T. Dyke Acland, M.P., Sir Lawrence Palk, M.P., Mr. Arthur Mills, M.P., Colonel Drewe, of The Grange, Broadhembury, and the Mayor of Exeter. Colonel Redvers Henry Buller, of Downes, near Crediton, is eldest surviving son of the late James Wentworth Buller, Esq., formerly M.P. for Exeter and for North Devon, who died in 1865, and who was highly esteemed as a country gentleman and magistrate. His mother was a daughter of the late Lord Molyneux Howard. He served with the second battalion of the 60th Rifles through the campaign in China in 1860, for which he obtained a medal with two clasps; in 1870, he served in the Red River expedition, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, with the first battalion of the same regiment. He next accompanied that commander to the Ashantee War, in 1873, being on the staff as Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, and Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General, and head of the Intelligence Department. He was slightly wounded in the fight at Ordahsu. He was several times mentioned in despatches, obtained the war medal with clasps, and was rewarded by promotion to the brevet rank of Major, and by the Companionship of the Bath. His recent services in the Zulu War must be fresh in recollection; he was there in command of a force of colonial volunteer cavalry, "Frontier Light Horse," and some mounted infantry, with native troops, attached to the force of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, entering Zululand from the Utrecht district of the Transvaal, and they afterwards joined the army of Lord Chelmsford for the final advance on Ulundi. The following extract from the London Gazette specifies the particular action for which he has received the Victoria Cross:—"Captain and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Redvers H. Buller, C.B., 60th Rifles.—For his gallant conduct at the retreat at Inhlobane, on March 28, 1879, in having assisted, whilst hotly pursued by Zulus, in rescuing Captain C. D'Arcy, of the Frontier Light Horse, who was retiring on foot, and carrying him on his horse until he overtook the rear guard. Also for having on the same date, and under the same circumstances, conveyed Lieutenant C. Everitt, of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse had been killed under him, to a place of safety. Later on, Colonel Buller, in the same manner, saved a trooper of the Frontier Light Horse, whose horse was completely exhausted, and who otherwise would have been killed by the Zulus, who were within eighty yards of him."

The portrait of Colonel Buller is from a photograph by A. Bassano, of Old Bond-street.

Major Chard, V.C., who so gallantly distinguished himself at Rorke's Drift, arrived at Portsmouth on the 2nd inst., in the transport Egypt, from the Cape. On the following day at Taunton he met with an enthusiastic reception at the station. An address was presented to him by the Mayor expressive of their admiration of his bravery. Major Chard, in reply, said so many gallant deeds had been performed since the affair at Rorke's Drift that he was glad to find that what happened in January last had not been forgotten, as well it might be. He would prize the address that had been presented to him as long he lived. Major Chard then drove through the town to North Curry on a visit to his brother-in-law, Major Barret. There were great rejoicings in North Curry, a congratulatory address being presented by the Vicar, and the place being elaborately decorated. There was a display of fireworks in the evening. Major Chard, V.C., has received the Royal command to proceed to Balmoral in order to receive the congratulations of the Queen.—Brigadier-General Pearson, the gallant defender of Ekowe, was presented on Monday, at Yeovil, with a sword of honour by his admirers in his native county. In acknowledging the gift he spoke warmly of Lord Chelmsford as a military commander, and his belief that Sir Bartle Frere's policy was a sound one for South Africa; and he praised the self-denial and patriotism of the colonists of Natal.—The arrangements for the Essex county reception of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., on the 14th inst., are making rapid progress. The sword of honour bought by public subscription will be presented to Sir Evelyn on a platform to be erected in front of the Shirehall at Chelmsford. The company at the ball in the evening promises to be a brilliant one.—Lieutenant-General Lord Chelmsford had an interview with Lord Beaconsfield on Tuesday at his Lordship's residence in Downing-street. — Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel Browne, V.C., K.C.B., lately commanding the Afghan Expedition, has returned to England from India, and reported his arrival at the India Office. — Tuesday's Gazette announces her Majesty's intention to confer the Victoria Cross on Lieutenant Walter Hamilton, of the Bengal Staff Corps, for conspicuous gallantry at Futtehabad on April 2 last. [Lieutenant Hamilton was killed while resisting the attack on the British Embassy at Cabul. We gave his portrait last week.]—The Standard states that orders have been given for the immediate return to India of all officers now home on leave from regiments detailed for service on the frontier, excepting such officers as may be unfit for active service on account of ill-health.

Lord Leigh, the Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, has addressed a circular letter to his tenants on the subject of the present agricultural distress, in which he states that he regards the system of making 10 per cent return to tenants as unsatis- factory in many respects. If he thought the present state of things would be permanent he would readjust his rentals; but, believing the depression to be temporary, he has decided to return at the Michaelmas rent audit 15 per cent of the rent of arable and 7 per cent on grass lands. Similar returns will be made for the two next years. Mr. Allsopp, M.P., feeling that relief granted to tenant farmers in respect of rent, if it is to be of any real service, must be considerable, and extended over several years, if not made permanent, and believing that owing to the disastrous state of the weather all new corn brought to market for some time to come will be in such bad condition as to materially affect the price, has informed his tenants that the payment of rent falling due on Sept. 29, and usually paid in December, will be deferred, if agreeable, till March 25, 1880. Taking into account the depression in agriculture, caused mainly by a succession of bad harvests, Mr. Allsopp proposes to allow his tenants 25 per cent on their rentals for the next three years, to be expended in lime, bones, linseed or cotton cake; and, further, if the country be not blessed with more favourable harvests and times, he suggests that his farms be revalued on a basis consistent with the state of the farming interests at the end of the three years.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

After a miserable apology for a summer, we seem likely to have a magnificent autumn; and the Newmarket Second October Meeting began on Monday under the most favourable auspices as regards weather. The programme for the first day was not a particularly strong one; and backers generally, though they began well, had a bad time of it. The Second October Nursery Stakes fell to Lord Rosebery by the aid of Cipolata (7 st. 1 lb.), and everyone was glad to see the "primrose, rose hoops" in front again, for they have been terribly out of form all through this season. This victory was only the forerunner of a far more important one for Lord Rosebery, as Camorra, a beautifully bred filly by Rosicrucian—Modena, carried off the Clearwell Stakes. The finish was a very good one, as Geraldine and MacGeorge were only a neck and a head respectively behind Camorra; still, as they have both won good races and nine others were unplaced, the performance is a very fair one. Dolly Pentreath represented Lord Falmouth, but she was virtually unbacked, and the two-year-olds that have carried the famous magpie jacket this season are altogether unworthy of their illustrious predecessors. The Ditton Stakes was selected for the début of Grace Cup, by The Duke—Noyau, and, therefore, half-sister to the flying Philippine. She is a grand-looking filly, with immense length and power, and gives promise of taking very high honours on the turf. Though Glenronald beat Mask easily enough in the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, the latter had evidently improved so much in condition since then that odds were laid upon him for the October Produce Stakes, while 3 to 1 was easily obtainable about the roaring brother to Prince Charlie. Backers were quite correct in their judgment, for Mask had the race in hand throughout, while Ambassadress also managed to beat Glenronald.

The first race on Tuesday made us wonder more than ever how Charibert ever managed to win the Two Thousand. He had only Rycerski and Glencairn to beat over an easy mile and a quarter, yet his roaring has grown so much worse that the moment he touched the hill he was utterly helpless, and Mr. Bowes' very moderate colt disposed of Glencairn with very little trouble. Innocent ran right away with the Burwell Stakes, and as Gil Blas, who was second, has won some really good races, Count Lagrange's colt is evidently quite in the first class. No one paid much attention to the Apprentices' Plate, which enabled Rawlinson to score his first winning mount on old Paramatta, as all attention was now concentrated on the Cesarewitch. There was little change in the betting towards the close, though Adamite (6 st. 7 lb.) became in stronger demand than ever, and actually started at 100 to 30, while Bay Archer (7 st. 2 lb.) passed Westbourne (7 st.) in the quotations. A capital start was effected at the first attempt, and there was little to choose between the lot for some strides; but when they had fairly settled down into their places Bay Archer held a slight lead of The Bear, Adamite, Iron Duke, Quits, Thurio, and Alpha, who raced away all in a cluster in front of the middle lot, which was made up of Breadfinder, Westbourne, and Dresden China, clear of Topaz, Barde, and Chippendale, whilst the whippers in of the party comprised the heavy weights, Isonomy, Advance, Prince George, Parole, and Chocolate. In coming through the Ditch gap, Bay Archer resigned his pride of place to the favourite, and the pair came on followed by Quits, The Bear, and Dresden China, next to whom succeeded Alpha, Iron Duke, and Thurio, the last named just clear of Jagellon, Westbourne, Breadfinder, Topaz, Discord, Sunburn, and Chippendale, while Isonomy, with Parole and Chocolate, had also improved their positions. Coming across the flat, the pace began to tell upon many of the competitors, and the field assumed straggling proportions. To the dismay of the talent, Collins was observed to be hard at work on Adamite in approaching the T.Y.C. winning-post, and by the time that landmark was reached he was hopelessly beaten. Upon his retirement, Iron Duke was left momentarily in command; but he soon resigned to Chippendale, the two coming on followed by Bay Archer, Dresden China, and Westbourne, with Jagellon and Isonomy at the head of the others, of whom Discord and Sunburn were well up on the extreme left. Coming over Bushes Hill Iron Duke was done with, and Chippendale's nearest attendants became Dresden China and Bay Archer, clear of Mr. Gretton's pair, Jagellon and Adamite, while next came Iron Duke, Parole, Discord, and Sunburn, with Rhidorroch, Advance, and Breadfinder in front of the others. Down the hill Dresden China gradually drew up to Chippendale, and the pair were followed into the dip by Isonomy and Westbourne, Jagellon and Bay Archer. Of these the first named lost his place by being somewhat interfered with by his stable companion in the endeavour of the latter to get an opening. As they commenced the ascent for home Westbourne managed to make a way for himself, and, splitting Dresden China from Chippendale, disposed of the former cleverly enough; but though he made a fine effort, and was rapidly catching the leader, he could not quite get up, and eventually suffered defeat by a length and a half. A length separated the second and third, and then a length away came Isonomy, who was placed fourth by the judge. Jegellon was fifth, Bay Archer sixth, Adamite seventh, Iron Duke eighth, Rhidorroch ninth, Breadfinder and Parole next, a long way in front of Quits, The Bear, and Thurio, and the last lot was composed of Prince George, Chesterton, Exmouth, Barley Sugar, and Barde. The result makes it apparent that Chippendale's form with Silvio at Ascot was not very far wrong after all, yet, but for the collision between Mr. Gretton's pair and Dresden China, it appears more than probable that Westbourne would have won. Still, the honours of the race fairly rest with Isonomy, who carried his crushing burden of 9 st. 10 lb. into fourth place, and, but for the mêlée to which we have referred, might have been nearer still. As it is, his performance is one of the best, if not the best, in the history of handicapping, and will never be forgotten. Dresden China beat her stable companion Adamite by some distance, and Bay Archer ran prominently; but Parole and Discord were never really dangerous. The remaining races were of little importance.

Lord Anglesey won the Middle Park Plate on Wednesday with Beaudesert; Mr. A. C. Barclay's Grace Cup being second, and Count Lagrange's Dora third. The betting was 65 to 40 against Beaudesert, and 100 to 12 against Grace Cup. Mr. Beddington won the Post Sweepstakes with Brother to Ersilia, Mr. C. Bush the Ditch Mile Nursery with Belfry, Mr. J. Gretton the Two-Year-Old Selling Plate with Moonstone, Count Lagrange the Select Stakes with Rayon d'Or, Prince Soltykoff the Sweepstakes with Orchid, Lord Hartington the Flying Welter Handicap with Merrythought, and Mr. A. Egerton the Cambridgeshire Welter with Fiddlestring.

Some first-class performances were accomplished at the first autumn meeting of the London Athletic Club, which took place at Stamford-bridge on Saturday last. C. L. Lockton won the 100 Yards Challenge Cup and the 120 Yards Handicap, covering the former distance in 10 1-5 sec., and running the latter, both in his trial-heat and the final, in 12 sec. exactly. C. Hazen-Wood beat two minutes for the Half-Mile Challenge Cup, and H. D. Thomas ran a full mile just inside 4 min. 30 sec., which is a wonderful improvement on anything that he has previously accomplished. There was a large attendance.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers in the fourth week of September was 79,664, of whom 42,685 were in workhouses and 36,809 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 3160, 3069, and 2067 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 717, of whom 542 were men, 149 women, and 26 children under sixteen.

In the centre of the watchmaking district of Clerkenwell a new building was opened on Wednesday by Sir Edmund Beckett, president of the British Horological Institute. The institution, to which Baroness Burdett-Coutts has been a liberal subscriber, provides a library and rooms for lectures and classes. Sir Edmund, in addressing the audience, deprecated the habit of overvaluing draughtsmanship and essay writing, and deplored that apprenticeship, the best form of technical education, had gone out of fashion.

The parochial authorities of Bethnal-green have issued notices calling the attention of the inhabitants to the necessity that exists, in order to avoid fever, for the proper cleansing of their dwellings. It is stated that in Mile-end, Stepney, and St. George's-in-the-East scarlet fever has broken out; and in order to prevent the spread of the epidemic the dealers in old clothes, of whom there are many in the district, have been warned that cast-off clothing is one of the most effective means of disseminating the disease.

The firework season at the Crystal Palace closed on Thursday week, when the display was for the benefit of Mr. C. T. Brock, the pyrotechnist. The weather being fine, there was a large gathering of spectators. An illumination of the Italian terrace, a representation of the Arc de Triomphe, and other things which Messrs. Brock and Co. have already made familiar to pleasure-seekers, formed the chief part of the programme. A special feature was a faithful reproduction in coloured fire of the likenesses of the First and Third Napoleons and the Prince Imperial. During the fireworks the band of the Grenadier Guards played on the terrace before the great transept.—The display was so successful that it was repeated last Thursday.

The twentieth election of inmates to the almshouses and the eleventh election of orphans to the orphan asylum, in connection with the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation, took place on Monday evening at Anderton's Hotel. For admission into the almshouses there were seven candidates, out of which two were elected; and for admission into the orphan asylum three candidates, out of which one was elected. The trustees and council of the Corporation earnestly urge upon the benevolent consideration of all parties, whether connected with the printing profession or not, the pressing necessities of the almshouse fund. The building at Wood-green consists of twenty-four suites of apartments, which are now all occupied; and as the scheme of the Corporation requires an allowance towards support to be made to each inmate, in order to meet that liability and the cost of maintaining the building, liberal subscriptions are greatly needed and urgently solicited.

Last week 2580 births and 1318 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 128, whereas the deaths were 83 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 21 from measles, 61 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 34 from whooping-cough, 38 from different forms of fever, and 61 from diarrhœa. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had slowly increased from 143 to 189 in the four preceding weeks, further rose to 201 last week, but were 18 below the corrected weekly average. Different forms of violence caused 45 deaths: 36 were the result of negligence or accident, including 25 from fractures and contusions, 3 from burns and scalds, 4 from drowning, and 2 from suffocation. The Society for Preventing Street Accidents states that during the week ending Oct. 4 7 persons were killed by vehicles in the London streets and 35 run over. In Greater London 3162 births and 1551 deaths were registered.

FIELD MARSHAL SIR W. ROWAN, G.C.B.

The death of this military veteran, who was ninety years of age on June 18 last, has been recorded in our obituary. He lived to attain the highest rank in the Army, without having ever purchased a step of promotion, or ever solicited any rank or appointment; and he fought all through the Peninsula war and at Waterloo, without ever being wounded, though he had a horse killed under him at Waterloo. He was born in 1789, the son of Mr. Robert Rowan, of Garry, in the country of Antrim, and entered the Army at the age of fourteen. He served with the 52nd Regiment in Sicily in 1806-7; on the expedition to Sweden in 1808; in Portugal and Spain under Sir John Moore from August, 1808, to the embarkation of the army at Corunna; at the bombardment and capture of Flushing in 1809; in Portugal in 1811, including the action at Sabugal; in the Peninsula and south of France, from January, 1813, to the end of the war, including the battles of Vittoria and the Pyrenees, attack on the intrenched camp at Vera during the passage of the Bidassoa river, attack on the fortified positions of La Rhune and Sarre during the passage of the River Nivelle; battle on passing the river Nive, and attack by the French on heights of Arcanguez; battles of Orthes and Toulouse, and intermediate affairs. He served also the campaign of 1815, and was present at the Battle of Waterloo and capture of Paris, when he was appointed Commandant of the first arrondissement of that city. He was promoted to Brevet-Major for the battle of Orthes, and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel for services in the field. He was Civil and Military Secretary in Canada from 1823 to 1829, Commander of the Forces in the same Dominion from 1849 to 1855. He was appointed Colonel of the 19th Foot in 1854, and retained that position until 1861, in which year he was given the colonelcy of his old regiment, the 52nd. In 1856 he was created a Military Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, and was made a General in the Army in 1862, and Field Marshal in 1877. He married, in 1811, Martha, daughter of John Spong, Esq., of Mill Hall, Maidstone; but she died in 1874. He leaves no sons or daughters, but his nephew is General Rowan, C.B. The portrait is engraved from a photograph by Mr. Medrington, of Bath, where Sir W. Rowan latterly resided.

WRECK OF THE STEAMER BREST.

Our Illustration, from a Sketch by Lieutenant Henry Pearson, R.N., of H.M.S. Assistance, shows the wreck of the steamship Brest, of Glasgow, on the rocks in Cadgwith Cove, near the Lizard Point, Cornwall. It was on Saturday, the 6th ult., that this vessel, which was an iron screw-steamer, built at Glasgow, 1874, and owned by Messrs. J. Burns and Co., of Glasgow, while on her voyage from Havre to Liverpool, going full speed in a fog, with foretopsail and fore and aft mainsails set, ran upon the rocks. The wind was fresh from the south-west. The ship struck with such force as to break away large masses of rock with her stem, and the noise of this blow was heard by the coastguard men on shore. A boat put off to render assistance, upon a blue light being shown on board, and the crew and passengers, thirty seamen, and a hundred and thirty passengers, mostly foreigners, except four missing, were brought on shore. The passengers were emigrants going to embark at Liverpool for America. The ship lay, a few days ago, with her port bulwarks partly under water, and with her deck exposed to view, as shown in Lieutenant Pearson's sketch. The master has been censured, and his certificate suspended, for negligent conduct.

SHEFFIELD BLIND INSTITUTION.

The new building in Manchester-road, Broomhill, Sheffield, erected by public subscription, at a cost of £15,000, for the educational and industrial training of blind young persons of both sexes, was opened on the 24th ult. A North of England Manufactory for the Blind was established in that town, about twenty years ago, by the late Miss Harrison, of Weston. The late Mr. Daniel Holy also left his personal property in trust for the application of the yearly income from it to an institution of this kind, the establishment of which he recommended to local benevolence. The project has now been carried into effect, Mr. S. Roberts and Mr. J. H. Barber having been the most zealous and devoted labourers in this cause, and the first-named gentleman a contributor of £1000.

The building, of which we give an Illustration, is intended for the accommodation, to begin with, of twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls, but it is capable of accommodating about double that number. It is a substantial structure of stone. The principal entrance is in the centre of the front, and divides the building into two wings, that on the right for boys, and that on the left for girls. Each wing has its separate staircases and side entrances to distinct playgrounds. The ground floor is occupied by dining-room, 40 ft. by 20 ft.; school-room, 40 ft. by 20 ft.; work-rooms, 30 ft. by 20 ft.; lavatories, committee-room, matron's room, and the necessary kitchens, pantries, wash-house, &c. The chamber floor consists of bed-rooms, bath, and lavatory, and sick room to each wing, with a nurse's room common to both. The roof has attics for the servants. The grounds are about two acres in extent, mostly at the back of the buildings, and laid out as playgrounds. The building has been erected according to the designs of Messrs. Flockton and Gibbs, of Sheffield. Mr. J. H. Thorpe, of Leeds, has been the contractor.

The blind children admitted must not be under seven years of age; there will be a charge for their maintenance and education, but those in a position to need charitable aid will be taken for £7 per annum, and £10 above twelve years of age, if they belong to Sheffield, or £10 and £12 if they come from beyond that parish. Their clothing must be provided by their parents or friends, but the institution will afford their board, lodging, and washing. They will receive plain English instruction, equal to that given in the best National Schools, being taught to read by means of raised letters. Musical instruction will be given to those who show an aptitude for it, and they will learn trades for their support in after life. Mr. W. Wood, formerly master of the Blind Institution in Upper Avenue-road, Regent's Park, is appointed Superintendent.

A PICNIC AT BURNHAM BEECHES.

That renowned piece of woodland scenery—twenty-five miles from London, an hour's walk from the Slough railway station—was "going, going," all but "gone," at the tap of the auctioneer's hammer last Midsummer Day, as the advertisement said, "for the erection of Superior Residences, other portions being suitable for smaller houses." Bless the builders' hearts! they wont leave a tree or a meadow in Old England by the end of the nineteenth century. Haven't they just made havoc of pretty Westcombe Park, from the east end of Blackheath-common towards Old Charlton? But the Burnham Beeches were saved by the liberality of the London City Corporation, prompted thereto by an accomplished writer of pleasant books about trees and ferns and rural delights, Mr. Francis George Heath, who addressed the public authorities with earnest letters of remonstrance. A moderate sum was voted to purchase this "remnant of sylvan beauty," which will be a joy for ever—like the choice bits of Epping Forest—to so many of the London citizens and their families as may choose to make holiday there. We hope the free use of this wholesome boon to half-stifled metropolitan townsfolk will be generally valued, and there shall be many a summer picnic, as shown in our Illustration, under the shade of the Burnham Beeches. And there shall not be wanting a gipsy fortune-teller for the amusement of the giddy young ladies, till they all become "sweet girl-graduates," much too wise and scientific for that sort of nonsense.

Diocesan conferences have been held at Oxford and Lincoln.

On the 2nd inst. the Archbishop of York preached at St. Martin's, Scarborough, on the occasion of the opening of an extension just made of the west end of that church.

Lord George Hamilton distributed the prizes on Wednesday to the pupils of the Bolton Church of England Education Institute.

A large granite memorial cross (executed by Mr. Forsyth) has been erected over the remains of Sir William Hayter in Easthampstead churchyard.

Sir George Elliot, Bart., M.P., has given a piece of ground on the West Cliff, at Whitby, as a site for a new church; and has promised a subscription of £2000 to the building fund.

Clare Market Mission Chapel, near Clement's Inn, Strand, was reopened on Wednesday, after restoration principally by the Bishop of London's Fund. The preacher in the evening was the Rev. Henry White, of the Savoy Chapel.

The Countess Dowager of Mount Edgcumbe laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Gunnislake, in the parish of Calstock, Cornwall, on Tuesday week. Mr. Piers St. Aubyn has been selected as the architect of the new church, which is to be erected in the Early English style, at an estimated cost of £2000. It will be dedicated to St. Anne, and will accommodate 300 persons.

The Marquis of Londonderry last week opened a fancy fair in the Borough-hall, Stockton-on-Tees, in aid of the fund now being raised for the erection of a large and handsome church in the newly formed parish of St. Peter's. The Marchioness, Lady Aline Vane-Tempest, Mr. J. Dodds, M.P., and the Mayor also took part in the ceremony. It is estimated that the new building will cost about £5400.

After undergoing restoration, from designs by the late Sir Gilbert Scott, the parish church of Halifax, one of the most interesting ecclesiastical fabrics in a county peculiarly rich in such structures, was reopened on Tuesday, the Archbishop of York being the preacher. At the various services throughout the week, the preachers included the Bishops of Ely, Carlisle, Manchester, Rochester, and Hereford.

Sir John Kennaway, M.P., for East Devon, speaking at a dinner given on the occasion of a Church opening at Teignmouth, said that the real work of the Church was to gather people into its fold, and keep them there. When they looked with satisfaction on the material fabric, they must not forget the reproach laid at their doors that so large a proportion of the working men were not within the fold of the Church. To see this error righted the laity would have to assist the clergy.

The parish church of Solihull during the last eighteen months has undergone extensive repairs and alterations, including the removal of the west gallery, the reflooring and reseating of the nave, and other improvements, at a cost of nearly £3000. At the opening services on the 30th ult., sermons were preached by the Bishop of Worcester and the Rev. Berdmore Compton. The offertories amounted to £479, increased by subsequent donations to £500. The large west window of the nave has been filled in with beautiful stained glass, representing a Jesse tree, by Mr. C. E. Kempe, of London, the gift of Mr. Thomas Lowe, an old parishioner.

Mr. Maxwell Ben-Oliel having issued a public appeal for funds to rebuild St. Patrick's iron church, at Earl's Court, the Bishop of London writes:—"I am sincerely sorry for any pecuniary loss which Mr. Ben-Oliel may have sustained, and am anxious to stay no contributions which may be benevolently given to compensate him; but it is right to state, as he has not done so, that the iron building called St. Patrick's was not a church, but merely a proprietary chapel belonging to Mr. Ben-Oliel himself, and that I have distinctly told him, as the two previous owners of the chapel, that I have no intention of consecrating, or of consenting to the assignment of a district to, any permanent church built on that site."

The Church Congress at Swansea was opened on Tuesday. In the morning there were services at the parish church and at the Church of Holy Trinity, the Archbishop of Canterbury being the preacher at the former and the Bishop of Winchester at the latter church. In the afternoon the president of the congress, the Bishop of St. David's, delivered the opening address at the Music-Hall. The Bishop spoke of the general scope and value of Church congresses, of the necessity to avoid the danger of making them the battle-ground of different classes of thought in the Church, and of the peculiar position of the Church of England in Wales, whose principal difficulties were, he said, the poverty of its endowments, the bi-lingual character of the country, and its geographical isolation. He took exception to Mr. Gladstone's statement that the Welsh were a nation of Nonconformists, and said that a somewhat larger acquaintance with the facts of the case would, in his opinion, have induced that distinguished person to state his case in a somewhat less trenchant manner. In one of the sections there was a discussion on the subject of higher and intermediate education in Wales; and in the evening the Bishop of Winchester opened, as president of the Home Reunion Society, a discussion on the causes of and the remedy for Dissent. Among those who took part in the discussion were Canon Curteis, the Rev. J. W. Bardsley, Mr. Hussey Vivian, M.P., and Bishop Perry. Papers were read on Wednesday by Canon D. Melville and Mr. H. Birley, M.P., upon the maintenance of Voluntary Schools, and the best means of promoting religious education in them and in Board Schools. At another meeting the position of the Church in Wales was discussed, when there appeared to be a generally expressed opinion in favour of the clergy in Wales being acquainted with the Welsh as well as the English language.

The Marquis of Bute has, according to the Western Mail, completed and is about to publish the first translation into English of the Roman Breviary of the Catholic Church.—A new Roman Catholic chapel was opened on the 2nd inst. at Mountain Ash, by Bishop Hedley. The building, which will serve as a school and church, cost £1200, of which £250 was given by Lord Bute.

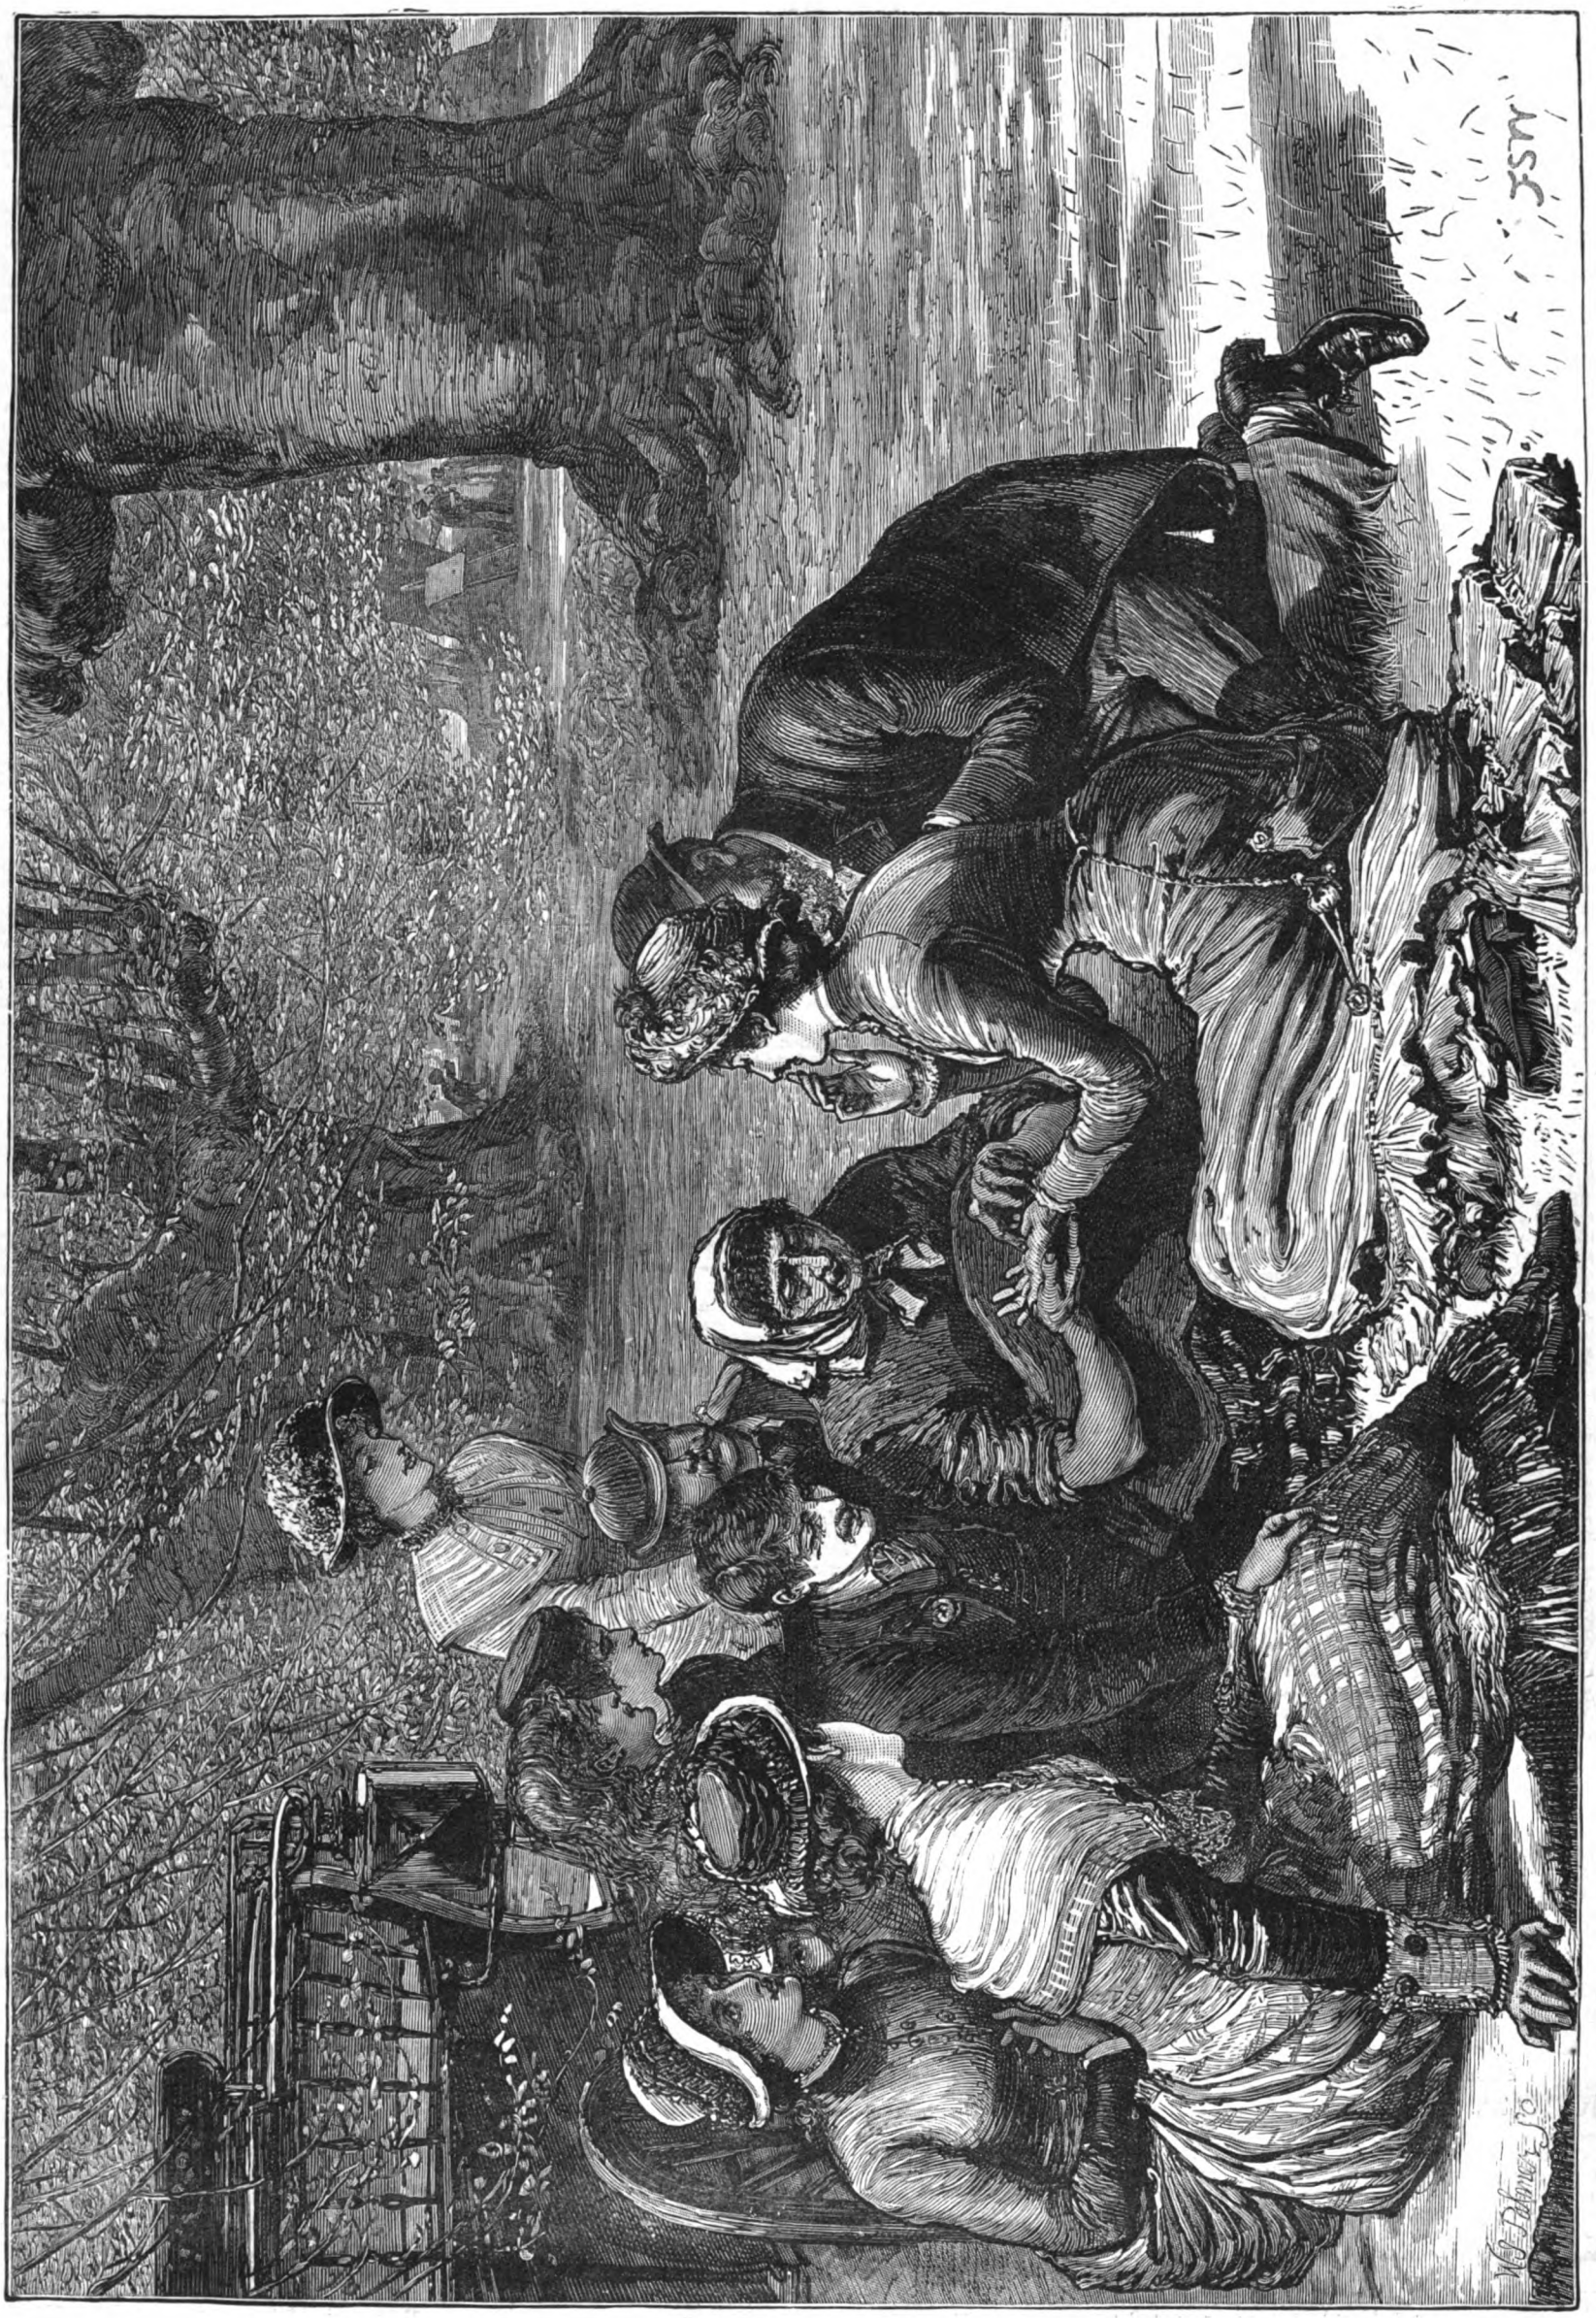
The autumnal session of the North Stafford Congregational Union was held on the 2nd inst. After the ordinary business had been disposed of, a discussion ensued on the policy of her Majesty's Government, especially in relation to Afghanistan and South Africa, and a resolution was carried embodying a vote of censure on such policy as opposed to the principles of Christianity and justice. There was a large attendance.

The autumnal meetings of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, continued during the greater part of the present week in Glasgow, were opened on Monday night by a public reception of the ministers and delegates in the Corporation galleries. The Union continued its sittings on Tuesday, when meetings in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society were held. On Wednesday the Rev. George Gould, of Norwich, the president, gave an address on the use and disuse of confessions of faith by Christian churches. Deputations from other denominations and associations were afterwards received. A number of reports were adopted, and a motion was passed in favour of the Sunday Closing Bill. In the afternoon the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon delivered a sermon in St. Andrew's Hall to more than 3000 persons.—The bazaar held at Wolverhampton on behalf of the Baptist Chapel, during the two days it was open, realised over £700.

The anniversary meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held on Monday evening at Exeter Hall, London. Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., took the chair, and was supported by Mr. S. D. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Alexander M'Arthur, M.P. The total receipts were as follow:—Home, £126,169; foreign, £8970; total, £135,144—the expenditure being £159,920. The chairman, in the course of his address, said that there was never a time in the history of the society when there was more need of enlarged liberality and concentrated effort. He was thankful to say that the Wesleyans as a body could raise a large sum of money; but he believed that more could yet be done. In England and Scotland there were 377,612 members, and their subscriptions amounted to £104,000; but he did not see why they should not raise £500,000 yearly for the great missionary cause. In the Traansvaal, which had been annexed, there was not a single missionary; and Japan was similarly situated. Some time ago he paid a visit to Australia and New Zealand, and was greatly pleased at the progress made in these places, where the missionaries were working hard. A number of addresses were delivered on mission work.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

At Oxford the following gentlemen have been selected for the vacant Scholarships at Pembroke College:—1. Mr. Harrower, from Aberdeen University; 2. Mr. Forty, Mathematical; 3. Mr. Lazarus, Manchester School; 4. Mr. Porter, Cheltenham College; 5. Mr. Evans, Shrewsbury School. Proxime accesserunt: Mr. Short, of Christ's Hospital, Classical; Mr. Ballantyne, of Bradfield College, Mathematical. The vacant Classical Postmasterships at Merton College have been awarded to Mr. E. W. Huntingford, of Winchester College, and Mr. J. C. Wright, of Manchester Grammar School.



The Exhibition in the University of Cambridge, founded by the London Company of Clothworkers, for proficiency in Physical Science, has been awarded to Mr. Bowman, of the Manchester Grammar School.

At a private meeting held in the University of Aberdeen on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Lord Provost, it was resolved that a memorial should be erected, in connection with the University, to Mr. Jenkyns, secretary to the Cabul Mission, who in his last letter expressed his strong attachment to his alma mater.

A well-attended meeting was held in the Townhall, Denbigh, on the 2nd inst., to consider what steps should be taken to render Jesus College, Oxford, more efficient, and to secure to the inhabitants of the Principality greater educational privileges in connection therewith. Mr. Cornwallis West, Ruthin Castle, Lord Lieutenant of the county, occupied the chair; and among the speakers were the Mayor of Denbigh, the Dean of Bangor, Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., Mr. John Roberts, and Sir Robert Cunliffe. Six resolutions were submitted to the meeting affirming that Jesus College had for centuries been the national College of Wales, that the endowments had been given for the education of Welshmen, and that these endowments should not be diverted from the channels for which they were intended; that the Meyrick trust fund should be devoted by the Charity Commissioners to the creation of school exhibitions for Welsh boys; that the principalship be at the next vacancy reduced to £1000 per annum; that education at Jesus College be made cheaper; and that the University Commissioners help those Welsh students who enter University as "scholares non ascripti;" that advowsons in the gift of the college be sold, and superior scholarships established for higher education of Welshmen; and that the honours, offices, and advantages of Jesus College should be offered to all natives of Wales without restriction; and that due regard should be paid to the words of the charter, "Ad pauperum et inopia afflictorum sublevationem." All the six resolutions submitted were carried with some unimportant verbal alterations.

Professor Seeley yesterday week gave the opening lecture of the winter session of the evening classes at King's College. He chose for his subject "The Influence of Geological and Geographical Phenomena on the Progress of European Civilisation." In the course of an able address, he showed that the physical fact of the rice of the central region of Asia had influenced the migration of the plants, animals, and races of men inhabiting Europe, and geographical and climatic conditions had then modified their physical characteristics and habits of thought. Canon Barry, in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, welcomed the large attendance of students on returning to their studies, reminding them that the usual service would be held in the chapel on Sunday, and reading a letter from an old student, who, in gratitude for the benefit he had derived from attending the classes, which had qualified him for being received as a partner in a commercial house with which he had been connected, sent a cheque for 25 guineas, to be devoted as prizes to the commercial section of these classes.

"LE FOLLET" for OCTOBER, 1879, and the LOUIS VELVETEEN.

"Whether black or coloured, no material will be more fashionably worn. It is rarely so attractive an appearance is accompanied by the greater quality of very serviceable wear; but to ensure these desiderata great care must be taken to purchase only the specialities recommended by experts and connoisseurs. Some of the dark colours now worn are very effective in these superfine makes; and a violet 'Louis' Velveteen we have lately seen, intended for a dinner dress, was the very perfection of colour and quality, being of the richest amethyst, and preserving all the purity of its tone with the bright lights and deep shadows quite as effectively by night as by day—a qualification as rare as it is desirable."—Le Follet.

NOTE.—Every yard is stamped on the back in plain letters, the "Louis Velveteen," without which none is genuine.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO has been proved, by its unparalleled success of fifty years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds, which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—

"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—

HERR F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

IS AQUA ALCOHOL?
YES, AQUA FORTIS.
AQUA VITÆ ONCE,
NOW, AQUA MORTIS.

THE FESTIVE SEASON; or, HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or whisky largely diluted with soda-water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

FAGGED, WEARY, and WORN OUT! or anyone whose duties require them to undergo mental or unnatural excitement or strain, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT. It allays nervous excitement, depression, and restores the nervous system to its proper condition by natural means. It is pleasant, cooling, sparkling, refreshing, and invigorating. You cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease.

BILE, or YELLOW TINGE of the SKIN, FEVERS, BLOOD POISONS, &c. Low Spirits, Loss of Appetite, and other diseases are caused by the bile not being withdrawn from the blood by the healthy action of the liver. The great success of ENO'S FRUIT SALT has firmly established the fact that it promotes the separation of the bile from the blood (by natural means), which is then passed from the system, thus preventing and curing fevers, blood poisons, and other diseases.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—From the Rev. Dr. Hurst, Vicar of Collerley:—"I have used your FRUIT SALT for many years, and have verified your statements. The thanks of the public are due to you for your unceasing efforts to relieve suffering humanity. Long may you live to be a blessing to the world!"

A NATURAL APERIENT.
An unsolicited testimonial from a gentleman, an F.S.A., who is now above eighty years of age, writes: "I have for a long time used ENO'S FRUIT SALT. I have found it an effective, yet gentle aperient, very beneficial to persons of sedentary habits, especially such as exercise not the limbs but the brain, and frequently require to assist nature without hazardous force. It acts according to the quantity taken—either as a relieving medicine or as a cooling and refreshing drink, and I am convinced that it does not weaken when it stimulates."

SUCCESS IN LIFE.—"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.
Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it you have been imposed upon by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy one that cannot be too widely recognised."

Extra Supplement.

AT BAY!

Our Extra Supplement is a fine picture of animal life. The tawny tyrant of the jungle has turned on the hunters with a fierce purpose of revenge, which can only be stopped by a well-aimed rifle bullet within the next thirty seconds of this critical time. Mr. Goddard has produced a lifelike portraiture of the magnificent Indian tiger. It is not every man among us here, let alone the women, who would much care to see that splendid but terrific beast in such a perilous mood without the barred cages of the Regent's Park Zoological Society. Everyone to his taste; if some people wish to be torn to pieces, or to run their chance of it, other people would rather not. The progress of civilisation in Asia, Africa, and America, whether or not it shall prevent mankind from making wild beasts of themselves, is likely to put an end to various races of mighty destructive brutes. It is probable enough that, in the twentieth century of our era, tigers and lions will only be preserved in scientific collections. India will then be delivered from a fearful pest. There is a famous man-eater lately sent to our Gardens by his Vice-regal Majesty Lord Lytton. Hundreds of human lives, "and also much cattle," are devoured by these ferocious beauties in every twelvemonth.

THE ZULU WAR.

The end of this unhappy business, which does not seem to have given satisfaction to the South African colonists, while it has entailed heavy burdens upon the English tax-payer, was recorded two or three weeks ago. Several of the remaining Illustrations, from Sketches by our Special Artist, and by Lieutenant D. A. East, who was engaged in the pursuit of Cetewayo, are presented in this Number of our Journal. They comprise a view of a kraal at which the Zulu King slept, in his flight of many days to the north-eastern forest region; the finding of some of his chattels, with ammunition stores, in a rock-cut recess; and the reception of a number of Zulu warriors in Sir Garnet Wolseley's camp at Ulundi, where they gave up their arms. Two scenes on the homeward march of our troops are shown in the other Engravings.

There is no further news of importance; but the deposed and captive Zulu King has been received at Capetown by Governor Sir Bartle Frere, and is lodged in the Castle there, with four of his wives and a little daughter. He is in pretty good health, and his appearance and manners, and some reported fragments of his talk with privileged visitors, have made a rather favourable impression of his mind and character.

Amidst the friendly demonstrations that are now taking place in this country, to welcome home with deserved praise and honour several distinguished soldiers lately employed in the Zulu War, there have been some incidental references to the political and moral aspects of that undertaking. This was to be remarked in the banquet at Exeter last week, in honour of Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., and in the entertainment given on Monday, at Yeovil, to Brigadier-General Pearson, who commanded the garrison of Ekowe; as well as in Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood's speech at Fishmongers' Hall, reported in our last. It may now be needful to remind the ordinary newspaper reader that the most eminent military leaders of a campaign are scarcely the persons who are most likely to have acquainted themselves with a long series of precedent transactions, which furnished the supposed casus belli. That knowledge upon which alone a correct judgment may be formed upon the question whether Sir Bartle Frere was justified in declaring war, and at once invading the Zulu kingdom, is to be obtained from a careful study of the abundant official correspondence, printed by order of Parliament. The personal observations of a gallant officer riding over the Border country, and sometimes talking with European settlers, cannot, therefore, be regarded as sufficient material for a decided opinion in favour of a course which has been disapproved by her Majesty's Government, and by the majority of the British people, after the publication of authentic documents.

Colonel Buller, for instance, declares with perfect truth that, shortly before the war began, he saw "along what was then our border, dozens of burnt-down and deserted farms;" and he was told, by a Dutchman who rode with him, how one farmer, named Beeston, had been compelled to leave by the Zulus driving away or killing his cattle, and threatening to take his life, and frightening his wife in his absence. But Colonel Buller was probably not aware that the land upon which those farms stood, which is the tract of Border country east of the Blood river, adjacent to the Utrecht district of the Transvaal, belonged to the Zulu kingdom; that it had been wrongfully taken from the Zulus by the Dutch Boers of the Transvaal Republic; that Cetewayo's claim for its restitution to his people had been constantly urged, during many years before, and countenanced by the British Government of Natal; that this territorial dispute had been referred, by mutual consent, to the arbitration of the English Commissioners of Inquiry appointed by Sir Henry Bulwer, the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal; that these Commissioners, who were the Attorney-General of Natal, the Natal Acting Secretary for Native Affairs, and the late Colonel Durnford, R.E., had determined, after a patient local investigation of the evidence, that the Zulus were in the right, and that the land, a valuable tract of eighty by sixty miles, was the lawful property of their nation. It has, in fact, been formally surrendered to the Zulus by Sir Bartle Frere's own decree, accompanying, as if in mockery, the ultimatum which he put forward last December to herald the declaration of war. Colonel Buller must necessarily have been unacquainted with the above-mentioned facts, when he rode over the country; seeing that it pleased Sir Bartle Frere to withhold publication of the Natal Commissioners' inquest and award, supported by Sir Henry Bulwer's earnest, honest, and just recommendations, during many tedious and perilous months of last year, keeping Cetewayo and all the Zulus in gloomy suspense meanwhile about the fate of their country. With regard to the local outrages complained of, they occurred towards the end of 1877; they consisted of the destruction of houses and gardens, and sometimes of cattle, but without personal violence towards the European settlers. This was a rude and insolent method of enforcing the notices to quit, which had been repeatedly communicated to each of the Border farmers. We should be disposed to agree with Sir Henry Bulwer, who says, in his Memorandum of Nov. 18, 1878, "The Zulus have long looked upon themselves as aggrieved and injured with respect to this piece of territory, and some allowance must, I think, be made for them under all the circumstances of the case; but the King ought not to have taken the law into his own hands, even assuming the Zulu claim to be a good one; and he may fairly be called upon to make some compensation for the individual losses and damage."

There was, however, another tract of Border territory, north of the Pongolo, which has never been recognised by the British Government as a portion of Zululand, but to which the Zulu Kings had always laid claim since a period long before the approach of European settlements. It was held by their neighbours, the Swazies who made a doubtful cession of whatever title they had in it to the Transvaal Dutch Republic; and a number of German settlers, with a few English, obtained grants of land there. In that quarter, likewise, the Zulu Border chiefs resorted to a similar process of eviction, followed up by wilful destruction of property in farms and homesteads. This sort of misconduct, for which Cetewayo would not ultimately have refused to make an apology and to give substantial redress, but which was certainly prompted by a notion of territorial right, is all that could bear any resemblance to an invasion of the European colonies by the Zulus at any time previous to the war. "They did afterwards," as Colonel Buller says, "invade the part of the country I was in;" and he speaks with becoming horror and indignation, as every Englishman would do, of "the slaughter of men, women, and children" in Swaziland by the Zulu band of Umbelini's followers. It is impossible too greatly to deplore that outbreak of ferocity, though no British subjects were among its victims; but, far from being regarded as a cause of our war against Cetewayo, it seems more like an incidental effect of the policy adopted towards that ruler, who had preserved peace so long as he confided in the friendly purposes of the British Government. So late as Oct. 27 the Landdrost of Utrecht reports a message from Cetewayo, "that he was sorry to hear that many of the border farmers along the Blood river had trekked away, and that others contemplated leaving also, as he had never desired that the Boers should leave their farms, but that they should remain and live in friendly intercourse with the Zulus located on the opposite side of the river, so that when a calf strayed across the river from either side, it would be returned to its owner in a friendly way." He added, "that the white people ought to be satisfied with that portion of Zululand which they already possessed, and not claim or covet any more of his country." At the same date, Mr. Rudolph informed the Transvaal Government that Cetewayo had summoned Umbelini before him, being "very angry with Umbelini" for his attack on the Swazies, with whom the Zulu King was then "in treaty for rain." Cetewayo had actually pulled down, at the request of the Transvaal Government, a kraal built on the north side of the Pongolo for the residence of a chief appointed to keep order among his people there, notwithstanding that he did not renounce his old claim of territorial sovereignty. Sir Henry Bulwer wished to have this claim also referred to a commission of inquiry; but Sir Bartle Frere, without such investigation, decreed that the Zulus should not have the land.

It was not to be expected that soldiers called to guard the frontier should be enabled to appreciate these circumstances, which were referred to the political administrators of the Colonies, in their relations with the Zulu Kingdom. Colonel Buller's statements are perfectly correct, as we believe, in point of fact, but his inferences from what he saw and heard must appear very questionable. The traces of savage warfare in Swaziland were very shocking, but there was no ground for apprehending "such an invasion as that to be carried into Natal." In the entire history of Natal as a British province, no Zulu invasion has ever been attempted or threatened; no colonist or settler in Natal has ever yet been molested or annoyed by any of the Zulus. And the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, who should know best, has invariably denied that there was any danger of a Zulu attack on that side.

These questions, it may be said, have become matters of merely historical interest, since the Zulu kingdom is now disarmed, overthrown, and to be divided into a dozen petty districts under dependent native chieftains. But the affairs of South Africa appear to be more unsettled than ever. The British army is withdrawn, and untold millions of money will have to be paid by England; while the Cape Colony, Natal, and the Transvaal are not at all more inclined than they were to accept Confederation and to provide for their own defences. Two or three millions of the native race, with their old institutions of hereditary chieftainship, polygamy, and heathen superstition, not yet repressed by the power of "our civilisation," stand their ground in face of the broken-down policy of a South African Empire. The ability of Sir Garnet Wolseley is doubtless equal to the task of organising a good military administration, and much reliance may be placed on his sense of equity, as well as on his tact and prudence. We shall hope the best for the future, but will not forget or slur over the all but ruinous mistakes of the recent past.

A public subscription is being made among the gentry of the county of Kilkenny to raise a memorial in St. Canice's Cathedral to Lieutenant Pollock Hamilton, V.C., who was killed in the attack on the British Residency at Cabul. The Marquis of Ormonde, Sir James Langrishe, Bart., and Sir Charles Caffe Wheeler, Bart., have, with others, formed a committee for the purpose.

The liquidators of the City of Glasgow Bank have raised an action in the Court of Session against the directors and managers of the bank for payment of £6,231,000 due by the defenders in October, 1878. The liquidators wish to have a ranking on the estates of the defenders. Mr. J. Stewart, late chairman of the directors, was examined on Monday in bankruptcy. Though he had been visited by severe legal consequences, he considered that he had not been in the slightest degree guilty of any moral wrong in connection with the failure of the bank, and that it was entirely in consequence of the misdeeds of others that he occupied the position he had been brought to.

The Army and Navy Gazette says that the Army Reorganisation Committee, under the presidency of General Lord Airey, will shortly reassemble at the War Office. The committee is not expected to conclude its labours until the close of the year, as it finds the task it has to carry out of far greater magnitude than was at first supposed. The same paper states that the War Office will consider the advisability of issuing a general medal for South Africa when the present operations are brought to a peaceful conclusion; but as yet the subject has not been even mooted officially, and the announcements which some time since appeared stand no chance of obtaining confirmation for the present.

The first battalion of the 24th Regiment arrived from South Africa in the Egypt, transport, at Portsmouth, on the 2nd inst., and, after having been inspected by the Duke of Cambridge, marched to their quarters at Gosport, being received along the line of march with much enthusiasm. On crossing the ferry and landing at Gosport the Local Government Body presented an address of welcome, to which Colonel Glyn responded. In the evening the officers were the guests of the officers of the garrison, and there were some illuminations in the town in honour of the regiment's return. The Duke of Cambridge yesterday week again inspected the 24th and addressed the men. He referred to the gallant services of the regiment at Chillianwallah, Isandlana, and Rorke's Drift, and said he had such a high opinion of the efficiency of the men that he should be prepared to go anywhere with them on active service.

FINE ARTS.

PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBITION.

Various causes have been unfavourable to the exhibition of the Photographic Society for the current year, which opened on Monday last at the Old Water-Colour Society's Gallery, in Pall-mall East, the private view and evening soirée having taken place on the Saturday preceding. Most potent among these causes has been the extraordinary dulness of the sky for many months, in consequence of which some only of the leading contributors of former years have been able to prepare works for exhibition at the last moment. We are told that part of the planet Jupiter is obscured at this moment by a remarkable red spot; but the astronomers of Jupiter must have discovered that an equally singular spot, varying in hue from a dirty brown to a dull leaden colour, has hung over the earth for a long time past, hiding from view that portion of the pigmy planet where England is unfortunately situated. Another reason why some of the customary exhibitors are absent, or not in force, probably is that many photographers are not yet familiar with the more rapid gelatine process lately introduced. When you can justly object to a photographer that he has exposed his plate some seconds too much or too little you may fairly expect him to do better next time; but when you tell him that his exposure has been too long or too short by a quarter of a second he may not unreasonably urge the difficulty of appreciating such fractional atoms of time. The value, however, of the increased celerity of these new methods for seizing a transient expression or gesture — for everything that has life or movement—can scarcely be over-estimated.

But we had already seen what may be done by the "instantaneous process" properly so called. And, again, Colonel Stuart Wortley astonishes the visitor, and affords delight to the marine-painter in his series of coast scenes in Scilly and elsewhere, wherein the passing clouds in splendid compositions of various aerial strata, the march and welter of twinkling waves, and breakers dashing themselves among rocks, and even the flying scud are caught and fixed for ever. In other studies from the Scotch firths and coast (28) by Messrs. Valentine there are effects of reflections on the sea which might scarcely be credited in a picture. A small photograph by A. Donald, called "The Trout's Retreat" (148), with an added sky, is also strikingly expressive of wind in the sway of the foliage and the drift of the luminous clouds. The value of the rapid process, by means of a small negative, enlarged in the printing, for rendering animals, is also well shown by T. J. Dixon, among others, in studies (at the head of the room) of a grand old lion and lioness—though the enlargements are obviously "touched up." The necessity, again, of a process, instantaneous or nearly so, for "taking" children is no less obvious—for are they not restless little animals? Stimulated, probably, by the success of Mr. Faulkner, several contributors have sent frames of photographs of children only—notably Messrs. W. E. Debenham (105 and 127), W. J. Byrne (90 and 91), and E. Greaves (237), in which frames some of the little darlings are quite sculpturesque in their beauty. The children by Mr. Debenham are especially charming in pose and grouping, and as photographs they are technically perfect. Yet Mr. Faulkner is scarcely rivalled on the larger scale of his vignette heads called "Studies of Expression" (114), and the children of the Prince of Wales (113) which, reproduced by the autotype process, resemble drawings in red chalk. Apropos of the autotype, the company exhibit specimens of its excellent process, including some examples of the success lately attained in reproducing monochrome studies by artists or pictures through the medium of a monochrome drawing prepared by the artist himself—see, for instance, "Studies from Nature," by R. Elmore, R.A. (340). There seems, however, something left to desire in the rather rough and not pleasantly toned "Enamel Photographs" by the company at the end of the room—i.e., photographs burnt in on porcelain and earthenware. This application of photography may, nevertheless, prove acceptable for decorative purposes to manufacturers, if not to the more artistically educated portion of the public.

We need hardly say that the bulk of the exhibition consists of landscape-work—prominent among it being the productions of Messrs. W. Bedford, Vernon Heath, the Woodbury Company, the Chatham School of Military Engineering, and others scarcely, if at all, inferior. The names of the contributors we have mentioned is sufficient guarantee of the high manipulative excellence of their exhibits, and it would be supererogatory to attempt to criticise this department in detail had we space to do so. The autotype enlargement of Stoke Pogis church (112), from a negative by Vernon Heath, is a tour de force as regards size, if a little hard—perhaps inevitably so from the nature of the subject. By its side is an equally large magnificent piece of woodland scenery, "Pain's Hill, Cobham," enlarged by the admirable process of the Woodbury Company from a negative by Captain G. H. Verney, which is remarkable for the breadth and true values of its gradations, combined with clearness. The School of Engineers of Chatham maintains their reputation in a series of beautiful views of Tintern Abbey, &c. (14 to 20). The merit of these views appears the more extraordinary when we consider that they are produced in the leisure of the Corps of Engineers, not by professionals. They reflect great credit on the teacher of the school, Lieutenant L. Darwin (son of the philosopher), the hon. sec. of this society. Among other works in this class deserving particular notice are W. J. Grant's views taken during the Dutch Arctic Expedition, 1878, F. G. Norton's views in Demerara, and a series of scenes in Armenia by Nikilin, a Russian photographer. We would also mention four or five tender little landscapes (245 to 247) by W. Huggins, taken on gelatine plates developed four weeks after exposure and printed by Willis's platinum process. To be able by this means to take a view and develop long after would evidently often be a great advantage in travel. Mr. W. Willis, jun., exhibits many samples of the process of printing we have just named—the "Platinotype," invented by him: a chemical novelty whereby some disadvantages of the processes of gold, and still more of silver, printing are obviated. The objections to platinum printing at present are that the tone is cold and the shadows a little opaque or smoky.

Returning to the figure-works, there are, of course, many exhibitors of portraits and studies besides those already named. As noteworthy for some novelty of aim we may mention the frame of "Studies taken on Dry Plates" (295), by H. S. Mendelsohn, which evince much artistic feeling in arrangement and lighting; the so-called "Panel Portraits" (292), by H. Rocher; "Portraits direct from Life" (137); and others, by A. Lombardi; by the Woodbury Company, from negatives, by Lock and Whitfield; a study of a reaper in sunlight (147), by G. Bruce; portraits by H. Vander Weyde, taken by electric light (which renders the photographer independent of the fickle sunlight in this climate), soft, yet effective, but a little theatrical in pose; and others taken by the luxograph light. But the portraits are generally touched up with the pencil, or "retouched," using the word the photographer borrows from the artist—as though the previous work had been done by hand! The difference between many of the portraits consists merely in the degree in which this retouching is concealed. The object is not simply to remove blemishes in the photograph itself, but to give an artificial smoothness to the flesh gradations. And we cannot too often repeat that precisely in the degree that this falsifying dishonest stippling is used (with a mistaken aim at flattery) so does the photograph lose its essential value and one great recommendation as a trustworthy record of scientific accuracy, so far as that is possible within its actinic, chemical, and optical limitations. It cannot be too strongly insisted upon that photography and art are two worlds which are absolutely and must eternally be distinct from each other in the very nature of things. For this reason we must still more strongly condemn what are called pictorial photographs, or "combination prints"—obtained by the piecing together of two or more negatives, taken necessarily under different, and therefore incongruous, lighting, with (generally) diverse degrees of exposure, and from varied points of view. There are fewer examples of such artifices than usual here; but No. 232, "Between the Lights," by Mr. H. P. Robinson, will bear out our remarks. A little girl is seated by the fireside, and the object is to render the effect of firelight on her figure in opposition to the daylight that enters the window; but an artist will instantly feel that the true effect of firelight is not rendered, and that it has not a just relation to the light of similar intensity at the window. Moreover, the photograph is obviously retouched.

Mr. Torrens, M.P., on the 2nd inst. distributed the prizes at the Islington School of Science and Art in Windsor-street, Essex road. The report stated that with the examinations of last May the school had completed its eighteenth session. The evening classes had been attended by 193 students, 150 of whom had gone up for examination. The work of all the classes had been good, and the interest in them continued up to the end.

The Right Hon. W. Massey, M.P., in distributing the art and science prizes on the same day at Tiverton, Devon, congratulated his hearers upon the effects of the Education Act. He argued that the prosperity of the nation was in a large measure due to the observance of the true principles of science, and notably of political economy, in the adoption of free trade.

The annual meeting of the Reigate Science and Art classes was held in the Grammar School on the 1st inst., under the presidency of Mr. Hesketh, who distributed the prizes and certificates.

A new School of Art for Kidderminster was opened on Wednesday, the 1st inst. The staple trade of Kidderminster, its carpet industry, depends much upon the attention given to art studies; and this has led to a special effort to provide institutions adequate to the growing needs of the town. Mr. W. W. Bodwin gave a central site for a school; Mr. John Brinton, a leading manufacturer, started the subscription-list with £500; and liberal help on other sides has enabled the new school to be launched free of debt. Mr. John Brinton presided at the opening meeting at the Townhall, and was supported by Earl Beauchamp, Lord Hampton, Lord Lyttelton, Sir W. Fraser, Bart., M.P., Sir E. A. Lechmere, Bart., M.P., and other gentlemen.

The National Gallery is closed during the present month, and will remain so during a part of next month. It was also closed during a part of May last, and, when not in vacation, the public are only admitted four days in the week. Throughout the year the National Gallery is only open 180 days, while the Louvre is open 313 days. Against this anomalous closing of our chief art-institution remonstrances are again being made in the press. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Session before last as good as promised the practice should be discontinued, and the general feeling of Parliament as well as the press, and of all interested in art, is against it. Who, then, are responsible for this continued opposition to the public wish?

The annual exhibition promoted by the Turners' Company was opened on Tuesday at the Mansion House. In beauty of design, symmetry of shape, utility, and general excellence of workmanship, the exhibits were all that could be desired. For the purposes of the competition, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts and the company each contributed £50; Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P., £10 10s.; and Mr. A. P. Bower, £3 3s. The first prize—a silver medal and the freedom of the company and the City, together with a set of Mr. Holtzapffel's works—was awarded to J. G. Norris, 42, Cowper-street. The exhibition remained open until Thursday, when the Lord Mayor distributed the prizes.

Mr. Boehm, sculptor, has forwarded to Ceylon a statue of Sir William Gregory, late Governor of that colony. It was subscribed for by the natives and European inhabitants of the island. It is in bronze, of heroic size.

A fourth exhibition of fine arts at Nice is announced to open on Jan. 15 next. In addition to the gallery of painting, sculpture, and engraving, a room will this year be devoted to ceramics and enamels.

The Corporation of Weymouth have agreed to give 100 guineas for a number of old municipal records known as the "Sherren papers." The papers had been sold by a committee as waste paper, and it was only lately that their value had been discovered. They extend over several hundred years.

A tract, bearing the title "Water," has been issued by the Book Society, in which Mr. Thompson has gathered some gossipy, though not always strictly relevant, scraps of comment and information, gathered from various sources, urging the duty of keeping water pure. What most strikes one in relation to this tract is the excellence of its paper and print.

The Buenos Ayrean, the largest steel vessel in the world, was on the 3rd inst. launched from the shipbuilding yard of Messrs. William Denny and Brothers at Dumbarton. She is specially built to order of Messrs. James and Alexander Allan, of Glasgow. Her length between perpendiculars, is 385 ft., breadth 42 ft., and depth, 34 ft. 2 in.; gross tonnage, 4040 tons. She is built to highest class A 1, Lloyd's. Her engines are 500-horse power, and her boilers are the largest steel boilers ever made. The Buenos Ayrean is intended for the development of the cattle trade of the River Plate and Canada.

Speaking at Haslingden on the 2nd inst., Sir Ughtred Kay-Shuttleworth, M.P., urged that an education which ceased when a boy was fourteen was not sufficient, and that though he might have to leave school for work at that age, he ought by all means to continue his education, either at classes in connection with Mechanics' Institutions, or at some evening classes. While he by no means deprecated reading at home and private study, still he would like to see a large number availing themselves of that technical and scientific instruction which those classes offered.

The endowed schools, which have been erected at Loughborough at a cost of £4300, were opened yesterday week. The Duke of Rutland, Lord and Lady Belper, the Bishop of Peterborough and a distinguished company were present. Archdeacon Fearon presided at a luncheon. The Bishop, in reply to his health, said he was sure the Nonconformists wished to do all they could, as did the clergy, to promote education, not merely instruction in secular subjects, but in those great religious principles without which morality and righteousness could not be propagated.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

This establishment is to reopen on Oct. 18 for an autumn season of Italian Opera performances—again at reduced prices, earlier hours, and free from the usual arbitrary restrictions as to evening dress.

Mr. Mapleson's programme announces the reappearance of Mdlle. Ilma di Murska and the engagement of other more or less eminent artists—these being Mdlle. Minnie Hauk, Mesdames Trebelli, Marie Roze, Pappenheim, Sinico, Crosmond, and Pisani; Mdlles. Lido, Stelzner, and Barnadelli; Signori Fancelli, Frapolli, Brignoli, Tecchi, Bignardi, Franceschi, Rota, Pantaleoni, Antonucci, Susini, Zoboli, Fallar, and Pinto; and MM. Thomas, Pyatt, and Carleton.

That the performances will be ably directed, the name of Signor Li Calsi as conductor is a sufficient guarantee. Various classical and popular operas already belonging to the répertoire of the establishment will be given—a novelty promised being "Katherine e Petruccio," an Italian version of the late Hermann Goetz's "Der Widerspänstigen Zahmung" ("The Taming of the Shrew"). Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer" ("The Flying Dutchman") is also to be performed in Italian—we presume and hope with Mdlle. Ilma di Murska as Senta, as when the opera was produced (also in Italian) at Drury Lane Theatre in 1870. The ballet arrangements are again under the able direction of Madame Katti Lanner, the principal dancers being Mdlles. Maria Müller and Palladino; besides which, the Royal Spanish Ballet Troupe from Madrid has been engaged, and will appear on Oct. 20 in a new ballet entitled "La Macarena," with Senorita Fuen-Santa Moreno as principal dancer.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The twenty-fourth series of the Saturday Afternoon Concerts began last week. Of the many features of interest promised in the prospectus of the season we have already spoken, and have now merely to notice the opening performance, at which Maurice Dengremont made his first appearance here, and achieved a remarkable and deserved success. This young Brazilian artist, but little more than twelve years old, has lately attracted much attention abroad, and there can be no doubt that he will speedily acquire celebrity here. He produces a tone that is pure and liquid, and of much more power than might be expected from the grasp of a mere child. His intonation and execution are exact, and his bowing is dexterous and facile. All the difficulties of the finger-board seem to be entirely under his control, as proved by his unfailing rendering of octave and staccato passages, double stops, arpeggios, and harmonics. His first performance was in Mendelssohn's Concerto, which he interpreted, in each of its three movements, with admirable mechanism and style, the strong impression produced having been evidenced by enthusiastic applause and two recalls. In a brilliant fantasia by Léonard, on Haydn's Austrian hymn, "God Preserve the Emperor," the diminutive violinist (diminutive as to stature only) surmounted the enormous difficulties of the piece with perfect ease and self-command.

Saturday's concert brought forward—for the first time here—the music from M. Delibes's ballet, entitled "Sylvia," arranged by himself, in the form of an orchestral suite. Its principal divisions consist of six movements—"Prelude," "Les Chasseresses," "Intermezzo," "Slow Waltz," "Pizzicati," and "Cortège de Bacchus." Some portions are very characteristic in style, if not highly original; and the scoring throughout is especially skilful. Among the best pieces are the slow waltz, the "Pizzicati" (principally for the stringed instruments), the melodious "sostenuto," the following dance movement, and the concluding music illustrative of Bacchanalian revelry.

The symphony was Schumann's in B flat, the first and brightest of his four works of that kind. It received a fine interpretation by the excellent orchestra conducted by Mr. Manns, as did Mozart's overture to "Die Zauberflöte," and a minuet by Boccherini for the stringed instruments only. Miss Emma Thursby sang, with brilliant execution, the Queen of Night's song, "Non paventar," from Mozart's opera just named, and Sir J. Benedict's bright song, "The bird that came in spring."

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Messrs. Gatti's series of promenade concerts closed on Saturnight with a special performance for their benefit.

On Monday a fresh series of promenade concerts was inaugurated in the same theatre, under the direction of M. Rivière, by whom the performances are conducted. We have already given a summary of the arrangements for these concerts, which are to be carried on for five weeks. Monday's programme comprised a long and varied selection of pieces, commencing with the overture to "Masaniello," which was preceded by the National Anthem. The orchestral playing in the overture and in other instances was very brilliant and effective. The remaining instrumental pieces in the first part consisted of Reber's "Reverie," "Au bond du Ruisseau," an "Air de Danse" by Latour, two extracts from M. Delibes's Ballet "Sylvia;" a Fantasia by Demersmann entitled "Une Fête a Aranjuez;" a Violoncello solo of his own skilfully executed by M. Van Biene, and two Pianoforte solos excellently played by Miss Bessie Richards. Vocal solos were contributed by Misses Giulia Welmi, and Emma Thursby, Mrs. Georgina Weldon, Madame Enriquez, and Signori Carrion and Gustave Garcia. Among the prominent effects in this respect were: the brilliant delivery of Donizetti's "O luce di quest' anima," and Proch's air with variations, respectively, by the two first-named ladies; the expressive rendering of Gounod's song "Entreat me not to leave thee," by Mrs. Weldon, and of Sir J. Benedict's "By the sad sea waves" by Madame Enriquez. Mrs. Weldon's choir sang with good effect in Urich's chorus "Amarilla" (based on a South African melody); in the patriotic chorus, "Dieu le veut," from Gounod's "Jeanne d'Arc" music; and in M. Rivière's patriotic march, "Honour to the Brave," composed to words by Mr. H. Hersee, in tribute to the heroes of Rorke's Drift. This piece formed an effective climax to the first part of the concert, the second portion of which opened with a bright and tuneful "Festival Overture," by A. Lentner, which was followed by a miscellaneous selection.

The regulation referred to in the following paragraph—quoted from the programme—deserves praise and support:—"The programme, being closely timed from eight till half-past eleven, M. Rivière requests the visitors to refrain from demanding a repetition of any song or other piece of music. M. Rivière, however, will bow to the decision of the audience, should an encore be insisted upon. In no case will a second piece be substituted, but simply a repetition of the last verse or of the last movement."

Wednesday was the first classical night.

THE BRISTOL TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL.

The third of these festivals will open on Tuesday next, in the Colston Hall. As before, the performances will be conducted by Mr. Charles Hallé, the co-operation of whose orchestra will be a valuable feature in the arrangements, as will be the chorus-singing of the Bristol Festival Choir.

An important specialty is the engagement of Madame Albani, the other solo vocalists being Miss Emma Thursby, Mesdames Patey and Trebelli, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. B. McGuckin, Mr. R. Hilton, and Mr. Santley.

The opening performance will consist of Handel's "Samson;" the miscellaneous evening concert including Mendelssohn's music to the "Walpurgis Night." On Wednesday, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given, the programme of the evening concert comprising the same composer's "Scotch" symphony and his hymn, "Hear my Prayer," and Brahms's cantata "Rinaldo." Thursday morning will be appropriated to Mozart's "Requiem," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Beethoven's choral symphony forming the second portion of the evening concert. On Friday the festival will close with Handel's "Messiah."

The performances are given in aid of the Bristol Royal Infirmary and the General Hospital—two admirable institutions, by which a vast amount of good is effected in the locality, the large and increasing cost of which renders additional money help a matter of urgent necessity. The subscriptions are such as to promise a result even more favourable than those of the previous occasions.

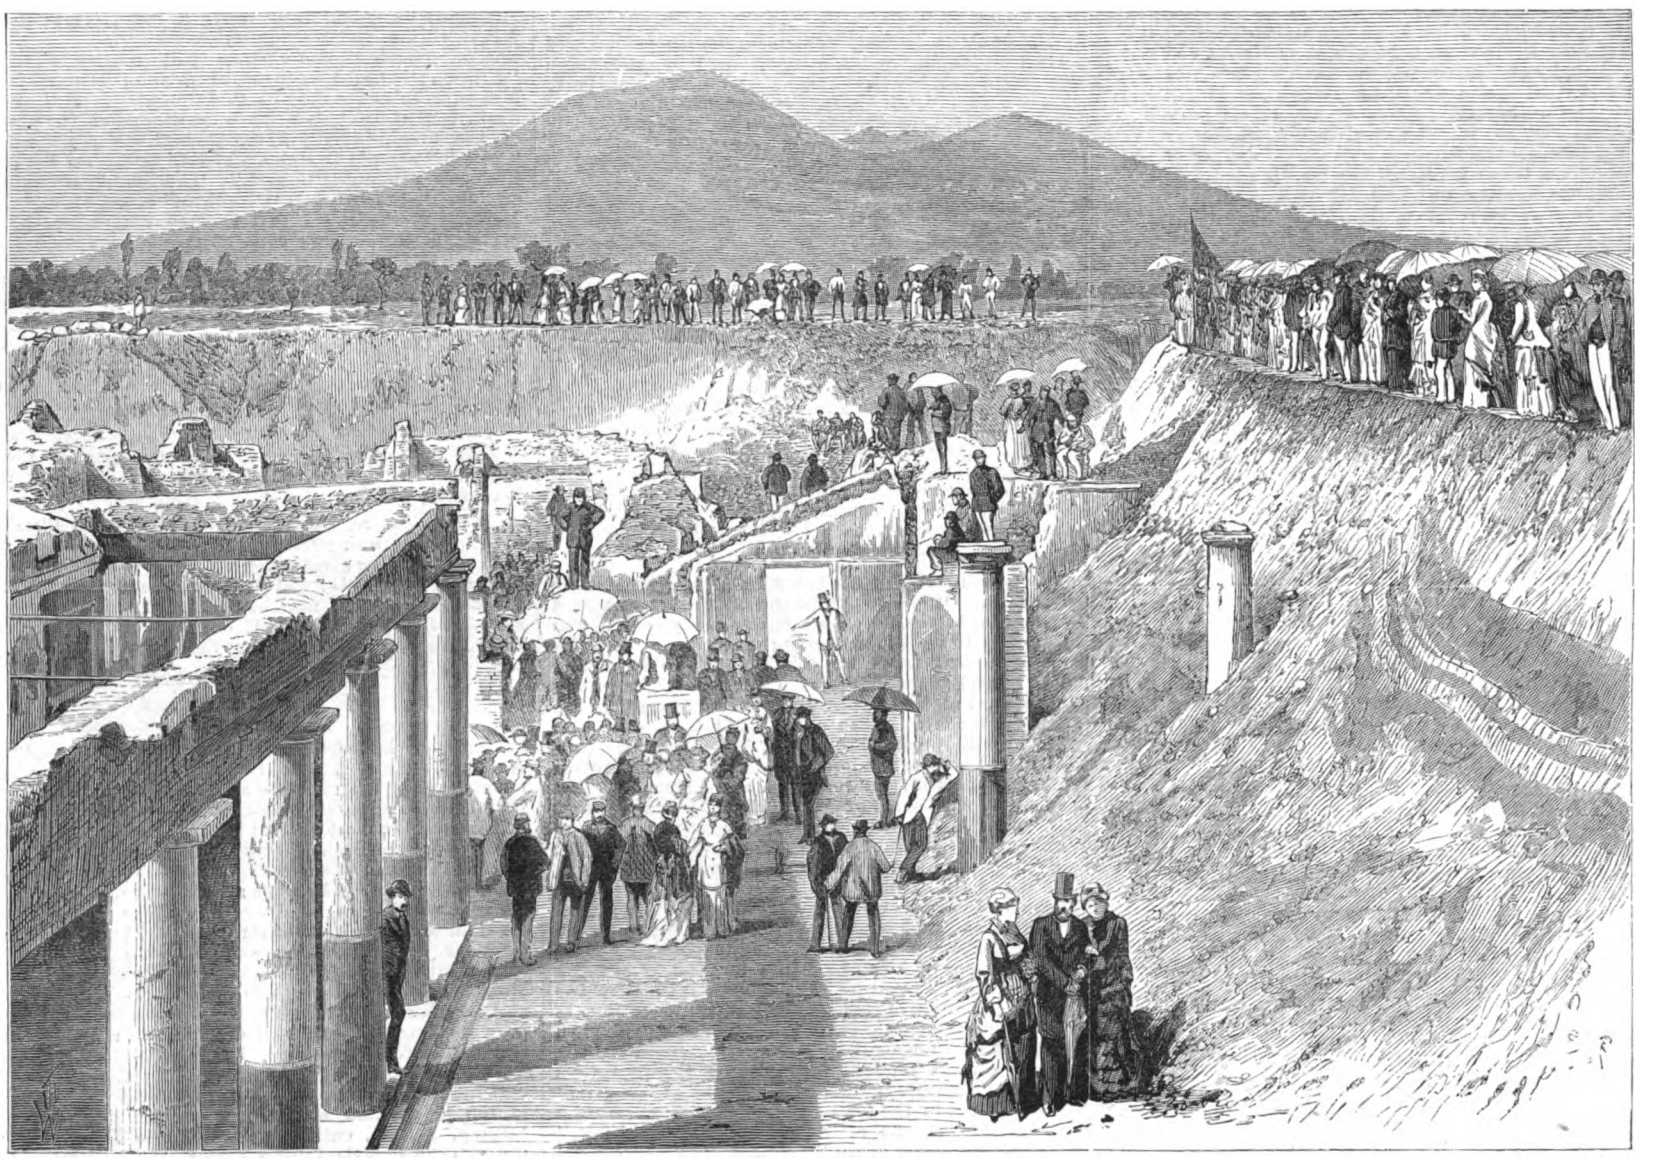
The first of a series of grand concerts at the Royal Aquarium, conducted by Sir Julius Benedict, took place on Wednesday evening.

It has been resolved, at a public meeting in Birmingham, to provide cheap concerts for the people. The Mayor said the concerts might be given twice a week, or nightly, in the Townhall or board schools; and another speaker pointed out that the 20,000 children now being taught music in the board schools would become supporters of the concerts. A committee has been appointed to carry out the scheme.

THEATRES.

On Saturday last the St. James's, under the management of Messrs. Hare and Kendal, reopened with what may be called a flourish of trumpets. The alterations and decorations have been made on an extensive scale, and the theatre may now be pronounced the most tasteful in the metropolis. Particularly worthy of note are an elegant crush-room, near the entrance-hall, and beyond, in connection with the dress-circle, a foyer, hung with paintings by some of our best modern artists. Of these three pictures by Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A., one by Mr. Goodall, R.A.; portraits of Mr. Tennyson and Mr. Swinburne, by M. G. F. Watts, R.A.; and others by Mr. Prinsep, Mr. Marcus Stone, and Mr. Erskine Nicol, claim our immediate attention. Messrs. Macbeth, O'Connor, Frère, and Du Maurier also contribute to the collection. Besides these, the orchestra presents some well executed designs by Mr. James Macbeth; and a tasteful drop-scene, by Mr. O'Connor, reproduces Turner's celebrated picture, "Crossing the Brook." The ornamentation is also of a superb character. The first piece in the programme was a new one-act play by Mr. Val Prinsep, A.R.A., entitled "Monsieur le Duc." The story presents an episode in the career of the famous Duc de Richelieu. We presume that the author has drawn upon his invention for the leading incidents. The Duke is a libertine, abandoning himself to heartless pleasure and dissipation. He is sceptical on the score of female virtue, propounding against the sex his own peculiar theories. The character of the Duke is contrasted with the Comte de la Roche, a man of integrity and feeling, who appears upon the scene as woman's champion. The Duke lays a wager that a certain lady, whom a dying mother has bequeathed to his guardianship, shall, despite her bereavement, consent to sup with his libertine companions. Ultimately, the Duke not only loses his wager, but discovers that the girl, on whom he has fruitlessly exhausted his powers of seduction, is his own child. This is the crowning situation of the piece, which was received with unmistakable demonstrations of approval. The acting was good, Mr. Hare giving an exceedingly graphic rendering of the libertine Duke. The concluding item in the programme was "The Queen's Shilling," which at the time of its production at the Court Theatre was duly chronicled. It was perfectly successful. Between the pieces the National Anthem was sung by Mr. Santley and the members of the company.

The Alhambra has produced (for the first time in this country) Lecocq's comic opera, "La Petite Mademoiselle," the libretto of which has been adapted to the English stage by R. Reece and Henry S. Leigh. The materials on which the opera is founded are slight, and the action takes place in 1652, during the Fronde, or revolt of the citizens of Paris, against the tyranny of Cardinal Mazarin. The story turns on the determination of the Countess Cameroni, otherwise La Petite Mademoiselle, to oppose the will of the potent Cardinal, who seeks to force upon her a distasteful marriage. Assuming various disguises, she passes the Royal lines, and takes refuge amongst the insurgents in Paris. In the interim she has become enamoured of the Marquis de Manicamp, who duly reciprocates her passion. Ultimately the Cardinal yields to the lady's solicitation, and the lovers are united. The piece is magnificently mounted; the storming of Paris at the end of the second act, the whimsical erection of a barricade, and the final taking of the city by the King's troopers being received with acclamation by the audience. The music is throughout lovely and sympathetic. The character of the heroine, La Petite Mademoiselle, was undertaken by Miss Constance Loseby, whose voice is sufficiently powerful to fill without effort the vast area of the building. Several of the lady's songs were enthusiastically encored. The same compliment was paid to Mr. Fred. Leslie in the rôle of the Marquis, though his impassioned ditty at the opening of the second act was too energetic to be quite satisfactory. Mr. Harry Paulton as Taboureau, an innkeeper, was irresistibly funny. Miss Emma Chambers and Miss Alice May were good in their respective rôles. The other characters were adequately rendered.



Mr. H. J. Byron has reappeared at the Gaiety Matinées in his own drama, "An English Gentleman; or, the Squire's Last Shilling." In this he essays the character of Charles Chuckles, a rôle originally enacted by Mr. Sothern. A warm reception was accorded to the popular actor and dramatist. The performance throughout was perfectly successful.

At the Globe Miss Kate Munroe has resumed her original character of Serpolette in the successful comic opera, "Les Cloches de Corneville." She received a cordial welcome.

Mr. Stephen Massett, of whose readings frequent and favourable mention has been made in this paper, goes at the end of the month to the Cape of Good Hope, where he will give his Monologue Entertainment of Song and Chit-Chat of Travel that he has given so successfully at Steinway Hall.

Lu-Lu gave the first performances of his new and wonderful feats in aerial gymnastics at the Aquarium on Monday night.

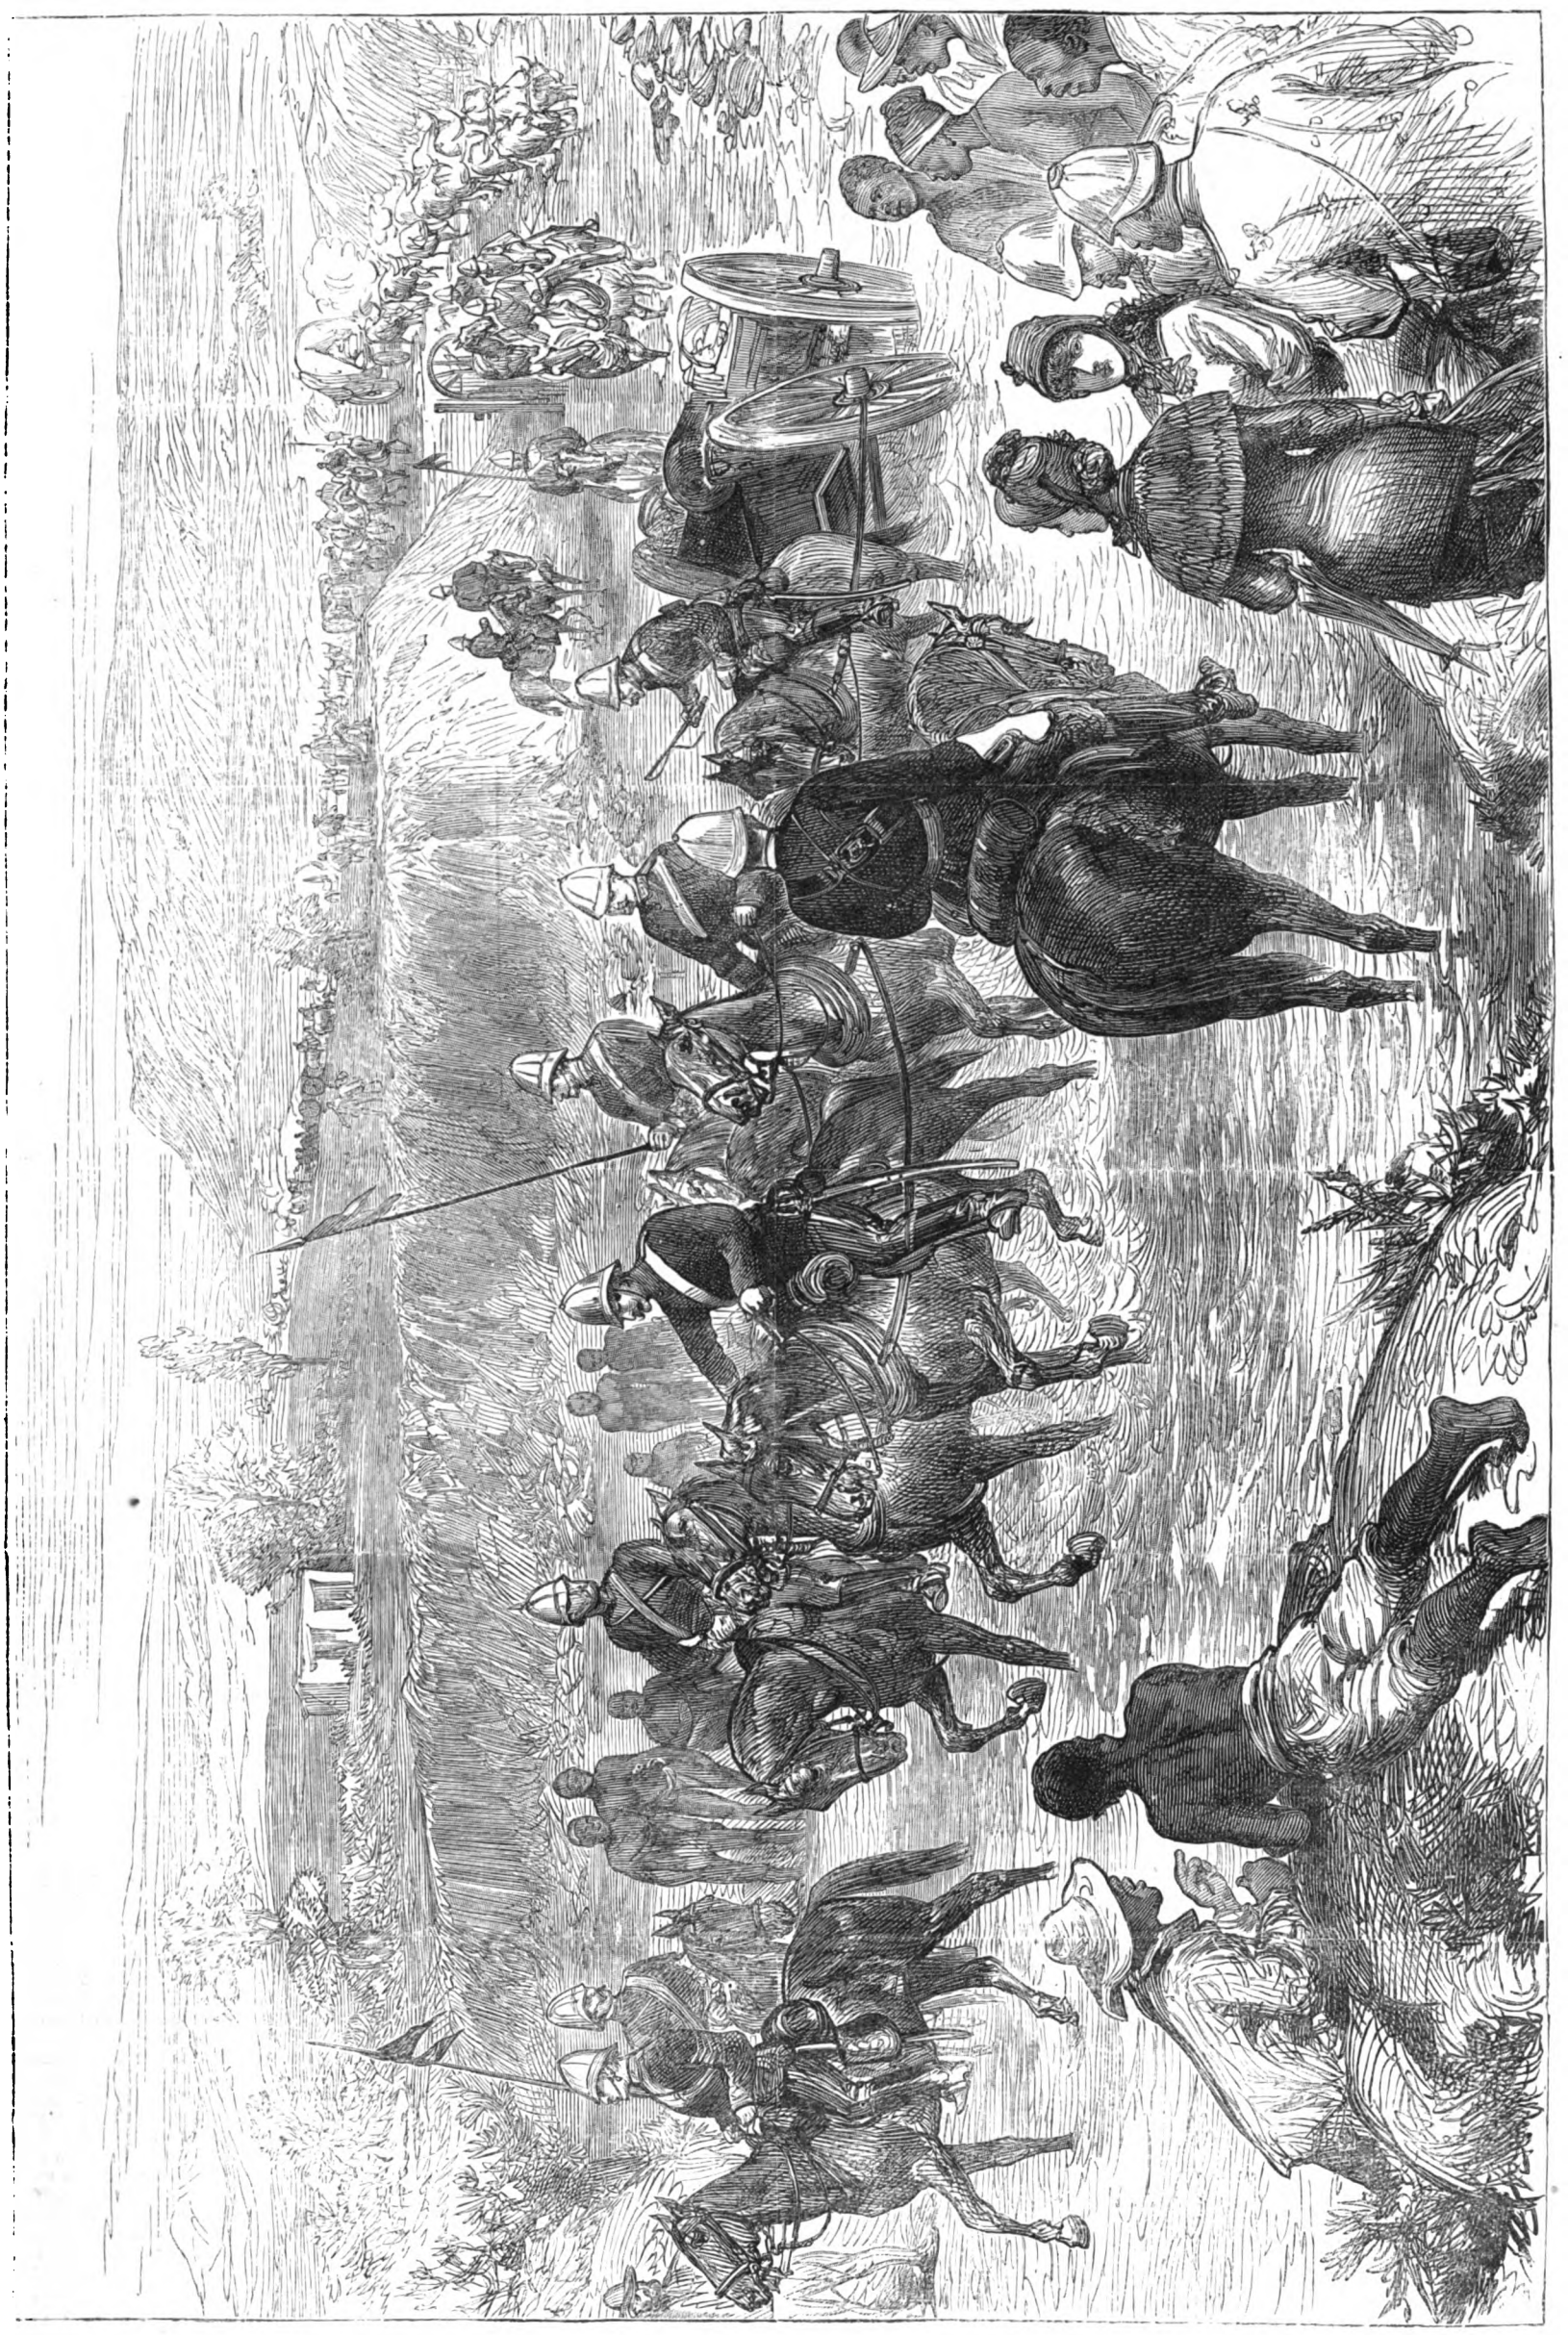
THE COMMEMORATION OF POMPEII.

The leading article of our Journal last week commented generally upon the proceedings at Pompeii on the 25th ult., when a large concourse of visitors from Naples, both Italians and foreigners, came to celebrate the eighteenth centenary of the famous destruction of the Roman city by the great eruption of Vesuvius in A.D. 79. An account of these proceedings and of the fresh excavations which were then made in that quarter of the ancient city designated "IX Regio" was briefly given in our Fine Art intelligence of last week. There was an appropriate address by Professor Ruggiero, director of the excavations at Pompeii, which was delivered in the Basilica to an audience of several thousand persons. The Senator Fiorelli, Director-General of Antiquities for the Kingdom of Italy, and Cavaliere Lanciani, who has the charge of the explorations at Rome for that object, were present on this occasion. Two appropriate compositions in Latin verse were recited by their authors, Monsignor Mirabelli and Count Quintino Guanciali; after which the spectators were invited to see the opening of the new excavations, which were to uncover the floors of ten chambers, the upper layers of cinders and ashes having been removed previously, leaving a bed of that substance four feet thick.

We are indebted to a photograph taken by Signor Michele Amadio for our Illustration of the scene at the beginning of this work in the Ninth Region of the ruined city. Several human skeletons, four in one place and three in another, with fragments of sculpture in bronze and marble, lamps, vases, brooches and other ornaments, a mirror of metal, and sundry articles of furniture, were found amidst the cinders and ashes. The interior of a bird-shop was revealed in one of the chambers. It is hoped that more important discoveries will soon be made.

ELM COURT, TEMPLE.

The Hon. Benchers of the Middle Temple have determined to rebuild these premises in a superior modern style. The old buildings, on three sides of the small quadrangle, are now in process of demolition. The materials were sold by auction last Monday, to several purchasers, by Messrs. Horne and Eversfield; and the work of pulling down, begun on Tuesday, will be finished in six weeks, to clear the site. Four large houses, containing many sets of chambers, are being taken to pieces. We give two Illustrations of Elm Court—one showing the interior of the quadrangle, with the passage leading east towards the Inner Temple Hall and Church, and with the archway to enter Fig Tree Court; the other is an exterior view, on the west side, in Middle Temple-lane. The date of these buildings, as they originally stood, was 1633, as proved by an inscription on the west front; but they were probably renovated at some later date. Some eminent names, of lawyers, politicians, and literary men, are to be found among the former tenants of chambers in Elm-court. Mr. Walford's "Old and New London," or the antiquarian compilations of Mr. Peter Cunningham and Mr. John Timbs, might perhaps yield a few personal notices of this kind.



In the month of September there were twenty-nine resignations of volunteer commissions and forty-four new appointments—a net gain of fifteen for the month. In the eleven months of the volunteer year just expired there have been 743 resignations and 687 new appointments. This shows a net loss of only fifty-six—very much less than under the circumstances had been anticipated.—The competition of the 1st London Artillery Volunteers, A Battery, took place at Staines on the 4th inst. In the first series, offered by the commanding officer of the battery and friends, the winners were Gunner Taylor, Sergeant Snook, Sergeant-Major Berry, and Bombardier Curling. In the second series, by Trumpet-Major Hammond, and Gunners Tombleson and Fennel. The Battery Club prizes by Quartermaster Gray, Captain Adams, and Sergeant Snook. Other prizes were won by Messrs. Snook, Berry, Gray, Seard, and Taylor.

THE MAGAZINES.

The most interesting contribution to an average number of the Cornhill is "R. L. S.'s" essay on Burns, which dwells principally upon a side of the poet's character usually left a good deal in the shade, his attachments. Unfortunately this is not the brightest side, and in one or two instances it seems impossible to avoid convicting Burns out of his own mouth not only of heartlessness, but of vulgarity. With no attempt at a formal vindication, Mr. Stevenson still does the best he can for Burns by pointing out the essential impulsiveness of his character, and the intimate alliance of this trait with others not often found in conjunction with it, manly independence, the capacity for self-sacrifice upon great occasions, and accurate self-knowledge. It is remarkable that nearly all his best work should have been produced within six months. "Earth-born Meteorites" expounds the theory that these bodies have at some former period been expelled from the earth or some other planet; and an essay on Hans Sachs, if not conveying much information respecting the cobbler-poet himself, is rich in illustrations of his period. "Madame de Sainte-Folye's Babies" is another of the clever caricatures of phases of modern French society for which this periodical is celebrated. "Mademoiselle de Mersac" gathers interest as the catastrophe approaches; but the lively passages of description which form the staple of "White Wings" seem less likely than ever to crystallise into a novel.

Macmillan is remarkable for the autobiography of a reclaimed thief in thieves' Latin, contributed by the Chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison. Assuming its strict veracity, the amount of property appropriated during a short career by this unit in a vast host is amazing, and suggests serious reflections as to the damage occasioned to society by those who prey upon it. The depredations of this individual alone would have kept a reformatory going for a month. Dr. Asher's account of the Malakani or "Spiritual Christians" in Russia is also very interesting, and shows the same tendencies at work that have produced the Plymouth Brethren and kindred religious bodies in our own country. The Rev. A. T. Davidson insists forcibly on the unreality of mere party divisions at the present juncture; and Professor Seeley, reaching the same conclusion by a different road, contends that analogies between ancient and modern Whigs and Tories are deceptive, and that our present politics really took their rise in the French Revolution.

All the contributions to the Fortnightly Review are interesting and valuable, but the only one calculated to arouse a large share of public interest is that in which Mr. J. A. Froude, formerly the apostle of general confederation in the South African colonies, advocates their separation into two separate commonwealths. The paper will be regarded as another instance of the writer's incurable flightiness; but some of the incidental suggestions, such as the appointment of a permanent secretary for South African matters (so long as this functionary is not Mr. Froude himself) will be found worthy of attention. Mr. Horace White points out some weighty objections to the apparently rational proposal to give the members of the United States Cabinet seats in the Legislature, all, however, reducible to this, that the measure would strengthen the direct action of public opinion in the country, and that public opinion is not to be trusted. The Hon. E. L. Stanley's defence of the London School Board gains weight by dignity and good temper, while Mr. Romanes's reply to the Edinburgh Review on Evolution spoils a good case by scolding. Mr. Courtney's article on the British Museum Library brings forward many useful suggestions worthy of serious attention.

The Nineteenth Century makes a good show this month. Perhaps the most generally interesting contribution is one from the pen of a distinguished foreign visitor, Herr Karl Hillebrand, being the first of a series of familiar letters on modern England. It is principally devoted to an analysis of the present tendency towards French political sympathies and literary fashions, a tendency which a German observer cannot be expected to approve, and which we agree with him in regarding with some disfavour. We may hint, however, that it may be partly due to the extraordinary feebleness and unattractiveness of contemporary German literature, as distinguished from mere erudite research. Dr. Hillebrand's remarks on Comte betray a very inadequate appreciation of that powerful though crotchety thinker. Mr. Archibald Forbes's defence of military flogging will also attract much attention, and his experience in the ranks undoubtedly adds weight to his opinion. Mr. Fawcett is, for him, singularly optimistic in the conviction he expresses that we have at last made "a new departure" in Indian finance, and oblivious of the strength of the private interests opposed to economy. His article may be usefully read in connection with the concluding part of Mr. Caird's tour, with its recommendations for the simplification of legal procedure, the extension of industrial employment, and the improvement of land tenure. Mr. Gladstone is daringly subtle and ingenious in his speculations on Homeric mythology; but Mr. Schütz Wilson, writing on Lucrezia Borgia, not only brings forward no discoveries of his own, but seems ignorant of the discoveries of others.

The Contemporary Review is solid but dry, the only article with any pretensions to liveliness being one on a subject upon which it is difficult to be dull, Macvey Napiers's Correspondence. Professor Mivart's chapter on "The Forms and Colours of Living Creatures," however, though a mere congeries of facts, impresses the imagination by the writer's consummate mastery over the accumulated mass of detail; and Mr. Keay's essay on "The Myths of the Sea" presents many features of great interest. Mr. H. Miller's appeal to the rich on behalf of the poor claims respectful consideration, but is open to the objection of discouraging self-reliance and self-help in an excess of philanthropic zeal.

Blackwood is hardly up to its usual mark, with the exception of the continuation of "Reata." The exception, however, is significant, for in spirit and pathos "Reata" is at the head of all the novels now in course of publication. Mr. Oliphant's account of his sojourn about Damascus is remarkable for a description of the extraordinary feats performed and sufferings undergone by Mahommedan dervishes in a state of religious frenzy. Unfortunately the susceptibilities of Mr. Oliphant's party prevented them from probing the matter to the bottom. He justly remarks on the advantages which Syrian Christians enjoy over Mussulmans in being under the immediate protection of European Powers, but omits to observe that this privilege is a consequence of Turkish misgovernment, and that the Turks cannot justly complain of a situation which they have created for themselves. There are also a pleasing analysis of the Ion of Euripides, and a French story, tragical enough, and which to a Frenchman would, no doubt, appear purely pathetic, but to English apprehension is not wholly free from an admixture of the ludicrous.

Fraser makes but slow progress towards the ideal which the editor professes to have set before himself. Mr. Blackburne's story is always good, and Mr. Saintsbury's review of the precursors of Corneille exhibits his usual critical mastery, but the subject is uninteresting. Mrs. Brassey's Syrian tour and Mr. Kebbel's sketch of partridge-shooting make pleasant light reading. Mr. Blind's glimpses of Prince Napoleon in the National Assembly thirty years ago is hardly sufficient groundwork for eighteen pages of "reminiscences."

Many shortcomings might be pointed out in Mr. Anthony Trollope's essay on Nathaniel Hawthorne in the North American Review, but he is more successful in estimating Hawthorne's genius than could have been expected with a writer of not dissimilar mental constitution. It is interesting to learn that Hawthorne greatly admired Mr. Trollope's novels, in which he no doubt recognised elements lacking to himself. Professor Newcombe's essay on "The Standard of Value" embodies a proposal, very difficult to carry into effect, of making the conventional value of money correspond to, and consequently vary with, the intrinsic value of the metal. The second and concluding part of Richard Wagner's Autobiography will probably convince any unprejudiced reader of the sincerity and elevation of his aims, whatever may be thought of his concluding prophecy—that German music is destined to become the universal language of humanity. The continuation of the "Diary of a Public Man" at the outbreak of the civil war is as interesting as the first part. It contains abundant evidence of the sagacity and magnanimity of President Lincoln, the more impressive as the writer was evidently far from duly appreciating these qualities at the time.

Scribner and the Atlantic Monthly are, as usual, very pleasant and varied. The continuation of Mr. James's novel, "Confidence," is the most noteworthy contribution to the former. In the latter we especially remark an excellent paper on the Venus of Milo, a review of the life of Albert Gallatin, and an impartial examination of the programme of the "labour party" in the United States, pointing out the affinity between the doctrines of its leaders and those promulgated by Rousseau.

The University Magazine is chiefly remarkable for the continuation of the eccentric but clever and powerful "Ichabod." Ichabod, the apostle of pessimism, is a real creation, and a very curious example of the power of earnest conviction to ensure respect for a personage who is constantly presented in an unamiable and sometimes in a ridiculous light. The subject of the monthly portrait is Mr. Arthur Sullivan. The Month has two lame apologies for two signal pieces of intolerance, the prohibition of Pagan worship by the Christian Emperors of Rome, and the recent ill-treatment of Protestant missionaries in Connemara. Time is full of amusing trifles, but has nothing of remarkable interest except the continuations of "Greene Ferne Farm" and "The Seamy Side," both of which maintain their high standard of merit.

Besides the continuation of Mrs. Linton's powerful fiction, the Gentleman's Magazine has two articles of high literary merit—Mr. Mew's essay on Cervantes as a dramatist, and the first of a series of articles on the younger French poets of the present day by M. Catulle Mendès, himself not the least distinguished of their number. Dierx, Coppée, Heredia, and Mérat are the subjects of this first instalment, and M. Mendès's criticisms are accompanied by admirable translations from the pen of Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy, so easy and finished that they might well pass for original compositions. The rendering of Dierx's poem on the risen Lazarus is especially fine. There are also an excellent popular paper on protoplasm, by Dr. A. Wilson, and an account of the remote and little visited village where Nelson first drew breath.

Temple Bar, besides a fair allowance of fiction, has papers on Tallyrand and Goldoni. Mr. McCarthy's and Mr. Gibbon's novels continue to run their attractive course in Belgravia, which has also an interesting scientific article on spiders and other thread-spinning animals, and one of Mr. James Payn's amusing little stories, "The Honest Farmer." The New Monthly presents a new feature in a series of photographic portraits with accompanying memoirs. Three are given this month, Sir Erskine May, Mr. G. F. Armstrong, the author of "Saul," and Mr. R. Tangye, mechanical engineer. Home is a pleasing miscellany as usual, and as usual the most attractive portion is Mrs. Riddell's story, "Buttercups and Daisies."

The Biograph for this month contains the fourth and concluding part of Lord Beaconsfield's memoir, written by Charles Pebody. The author's standpoint may be known by a single quotation, in which most persons will think that eulogy is overstrained:—"The remark that was once made upon Burke may be made with equal truth upon Lord Beaconsfield. Each and all of these men—Lord Russell, Lord Palmerston, Lord Melbourne, and even Mr. Gladstone—might have been taken out of Lord Beaconsfield's mind without reducing him to the level of a second-rate man." There are seventeen other memoirs, including a portion of a discriminating one upon Victor Hugo, in the present number.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin, and Co. publish this month No. 1 of a new work on Ferns, by James Britten, with coloured plates, painted from nature by D. Blair; Part I of a New and Revised Edition of Old and New London, with which is given a large Map of London as it now is; and the first monthly part of a re-issue of their Technical Educator, most opportunely begun this month. We have also received their Magazine of Art, Illustrated (the success which has attended the issue of which has induced the publishers to determine upon its enlargement, and this change will be effected with the commencement of the new volume, the price of the magazine remaining unaltered); an unusually good part of Longfellow's Poetical Works. Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates: Part I. of European Ferns, with Coloured Illustrations from Nature; the Illustrated History of the Russo-Turkish War; their Family Magazine, with its usual amount of varied excellence, pictorial and descriptive; and the first three numbers of an Illustrated Book of the Dog, by Vero Shaw, assisted by the leading breeders of the day.

We have also to acknowledge the receipt of Part 8 of A Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Good Words, London Society, St. James's Magazine, Tinsley's Magazine, the Argosy, the Churchman's Monthly Magazine, Charing-Cross, Science Gossip, Men of Mark, the Theatre, Greenhouse Favourites, Heath's Fern World, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Familiar Wild Flowers, Haydn's Dictionary of Popular Domestic Medicine, Haydn's Bible Dictionary, Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, Josephus, Science for All, Mission Life, Excelsior, Kind Words, Christian Age, Golden Childhood, the Animal World, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, Myra's Journal of Dress and Needlework, Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal, Sylvia's Home Journal, the Ladies' Treasury, Weldon's Ladies' Journal; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardener's Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Weekly Welcome, Social Notes, Young People's Paper, Sunday Reading for the Young, the Christian Age, and the Boys' Own Paper.

In the financial year, March 31 last, the fee stamps in judicature in England amounted to £224,606, and in the Probate Court to £133,106. The net produce on receipts, draughts, and other penny stamps in the year was £825,559.

ST. NICHOLAS CHURCH, CYPRUS.

The beautiful old Church of St. Nicholas, at Nikosia, in Cyprus, which is said to have been built by the Crusaders, perhaps English, at the end of the twelfth or beginning of the thirteenth century, but which has been desecrated since the storming of the city by the Turks in 1570, is about to be restored for Divine worship according to the rites of the Church of England. This project originated with the Bishop of Gibraltar during his late visit to Cyprus. The Chaplain for the English Residents, the Rev. Josiah Spencer, B.A., has secured, on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, a perpetual lease of the building from the Turkish official corporation of trustees for an annual payment of 6000 piastres (£33 6s. 8d.); and he is at present engaged in collecting, in England, the sum necessary to restore the chancel, which portion of the church, having a beautiful vaulted roof, octagonal lantern and dome, will be sufficient for present requirements. We are informed that £500 will be required before the work can be commenced, which ought to be in October. The present floor of the chancel, roughly paved with pebbles, is three feet above the true floor, and it is expected that inscriptions will be found.

In a pastoral letter which the Bishop of Gibraltar has just published we read:—"It is a remarkable fact that at the beginning of the fourteenth century there was at Nikosia a church which went by the name of 'St. Nicholas of the English,' and is so styled in old records. You will find a notice of this church in a lecture delivered last year at Oxford by the Regius Professor of History. As you may not have an opportunity of reading this lecture, I will give you a short account of the church. When Acre, which was the last fortress in Palestine surrendered to the Turks, was in 1291 finally compelled to yield, and the forces of the Cross had withdrawn from the Holy Land, some found a home in Cyprus, and among them the Order of St. Thomas of Acre, a small, semi-religious knightly order of Englishmen. This order had been founded by the sister and the brother-in-law of Becket, and possessed a hospital, built on the site of the house where Becket was born, and a church on the spot where now is the chapel of the Mercers' Company. During the Crusades the order settled at Acre, and devoted themselves to the office of burying the dead. At the siege of Acre the order is represented as leading the 5000 soldiers whom the English King, Edward I., had sent to Palestine. Such members of the order as survived the siege settled at Nikosia, where they possessed a church called 'St. Nicholas of the English.' The story of the appearance of St. Nicholas and St. Thomas to the London Crusaders in a storm at sea in 1189 or 1190, as Professor Stubbs suggests to me, probably had something to do with the establishment of the order; and the connection between St. Nicholas and the English is clearly due to the fact that the English were sailors. Various religious ceremonies are recorded in ancient documents as having been held in this church. It seems to have been the place in which the masters, priors, and custodes of the order were appointed to their offices. The name continually appears in the registered acts of the order. Speaking of one such ceremony, Professor Stubbs thus writes:—'The ceremony was performed in the Church of St. Nicholas of the English, in the city of Nikosia, one of the many churches which formerly, according to Father Stephen of Lusignan, adorned that city, but of which any relic would now, since the Venetians destroyed 130 in the process of fortification, scarcely be looked for.' Whether the desecrated Church of St. Nicholas which I saw in Nikosia was originally built by funds from London, and is that very edifice in which Englishmen worshipped 500 or 600 years ago, I have not yet been able to discover. At any rate, the church bears the same name. The style, moreover, is transitional. Whatever its history, if we make it our church, we shall have in it a bond connecting us, if not with this knightly order of Englishmen who lived in Nikosia in days long past, yet with our Eastern brethren, whose forefathers worshipped in it before it was seized and desecrated by the Turks."

The Civil Service Commissioners have given notice that an open competition for situations as assistant of Excise in the Inland Revenue Department will be held in London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Liverpool, Bristol, Plymouth, Leeds, Birmingham, Norwich, Glasgow, Dundee, Aberdeen, Cork, Galway, Belfast, Omagh, and Limerick, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 25 and 26. Appointments will be given to the first seventy candidates on the list, if duly qualified in respect of age, health, and character.

A special meeting of the Preston Town Council was held on the 2nd inst. for the purpose of considering the offer of the trustees of the late Mr. Harris Sola to devote £70,000 of the money at their disposal to the establishment of a free library for Preston. It was decided to apply for Parliamentary powers for the purchasing of the necessary site. The whole of the east side of the Preston market-place is to be pulled down, the cost of the acquirement being about £25,000, and the cost of the building itself will be at least £50,000.

The Lancet warns of a peril near home. Grave cases of poisoning by supposed "mushrooms," gathered in Hyde Park and Regent's Park, have fallen under treatment at Middlesex Hospital. The symptoms were urgent, and included violent delirium, though happily the patients recovered under treatment. This is a matter of general interest, because it is quite possible that some of the "mushrooms" supplied by costermongers, and even family greengrocers, may be obtained from the same localities; and it is by no means so easy as is generally supposed to distinguish the genuine edible from the poisonous fungus.

Mr. M'Laren, M.P., opening a bazaar at Linlithgow yesterday week in aid of a local British Workman's Public-house, said no repressive measures and no Act of Parliament would make men sober, but he thought the establishment of such houses would do much in that direction.—Lord Aberdare on Saturday last inaugurated a coffee-tavern at Neath. In his address he observed that the coffee-tavern movement only touched one phase of the evil, inasmuch as the very class of persons to be reached were those who would not attend such houses. He could not concur with Sir Wilfrid Lawson in a scheme which was likely to lead to the absolute suppression of public-houses, but he thought they should be regulated on the Gothenburg system, which had resulted in a gain to the Treasury in one town in Sweden of at least £10,000 a year.—Lord Lyttelton, in speaking at the opening of a coffee-house at Bewdley last Saturday evening, alluded to the want of thrift among English workpeople, and said this had greatly intensified the suffering arising from the depression in trade and agriculture. He pointed out the strong contrast between England and France at the present time, and attributed the greater prosperity of France very much to the thriftier habits of the French people.—A bazaar in aid of the funds of a British Workman and Coffee Palace was opened at Hastings on Tuesday by Mrs. Brassey, who, in the course of a short address, advocated the virtue of temperance in the higher as well as the lower class.

OBITUARY.

THE DEAN OF WORCESTER.

The Hon. and Very Rev. Grantham Munton Yorke, D.D., Dean of Worcester, died suddenly at the Palace, Worcester. He was born Feb. 14, 1809, the youngest son of Vice-Admiral Sir Joseph Sydney Yorke, K.C.B., by Elizabeth Weake, his wife, daughter of James Rattray, Esq., of Atherstone, and was brother of Charles Philip, fourth Earl of Hardwicke. Dr. Yorke was, prior to his appointment to the Deanery, Prebendary of Lichfield, Rector of St. Philip's, Birmingham, and Rural Dean. He married, March 10, 1830, Marian Emily, eldest daughter of the late Sir Henry C. Montgomery, Bart., and leaves one son and five daughters.

BARON CLEASBY.

Sir Anthony Cleasby, Baron of the Exchequer, in her Majesty's High Court of Justice, died at his country residence, Pennoyre, near Brecon, on the 6th inst. He was son of the late Mr. Stephen Cleasby, of Cornwall-terrace, Regent's Park, and was born in 1805. Educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1831, selecting the Northern Circuit. He was made Q.C. in 1861, and seven years later was appointed a Baron of the Exchequer. The deceased unsuccessfully contested East Surrey in the Conservative interest in 1852 and 1859, and in 1868 he opposed Mr. Beresford Hope for Cambridge University, but was again defeated. In 1836 his Lordship married Lucy Susan, daughter of the late Mr. Walter Fawkes, of Farnley Hall, Yorkshire, sometime one of the members for that county.

DEPUTY COMMISSARY GENERAL BOWERS.

Henry Bowers, Esq., Deputy Commissary General, died on Sept. 30 at his residence, 29, Scarsdale Villas, Kensington, after a few days' illness, in his eighty-fourth year. He was son of Peter Bowers, Esq., private and confidential secretary to Warren Hastings, when Governor-General of India, and nephew of the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, M.P., for Oxford. He held his Commission for nearly seventy years. He received the war medal with the St. Sebastian clasp for the Peninsula; served in Canada during the war with America of 1813, and was with the army of occupation in Paris after Waterloo. He subsequently had charge of the Commissariat in the Bahamas, Bermuda, Gibraltar, Barbadoes, and Cape of Good Hope.

LIEUTENANT KINLOCH.

Francis Garden Kinloch, of the Bengal Staff Corps, a young officer of great promise and ability, was murdered by Orakzai marauders on his way to join his regiment at Khushi. He was second son of Colonel John Grant-Kinloch, of Kilrie and Logie, Forfarshire, by Agnes, his first wife, daughter of Francis Garden Campbell, Esq., of Troup and Glenlyon, and was descended from the senior line of Kinloch of Kinloch. He entered the 92nd Gordon Highlanders in 1874, and in two years after joined the 5th Bengal Cavalry as a probationer for the Bengal Staff Corps. He then became officiating Adjutant of the regiment, but resigned his post in order to see active service. He gained an extra first-class certificate at the School of Musketry at Hythe, and at the garrison course in India was specially mentioned for proficiency in military law, surveying, and fortifications.

The deaths have also been announced of—

The Earl of Clanwilliam, G.C.H., at 32, Belgrave-square, on the 7th inst., aged eighty-four. A memoir of his Lordship is reserved for next week.

Lieutenant-General Charles Hind, late of the 45th Regiment, at Bath, on the 29th ult., aged seventythree.

Robert Wynne Price, J.P., late Captain 15th Regiment, at his residence, Llanrhaiadr Hall, Denbigh, on the 27th ult., in his forty-ninth year. He was eldest surviving son of the late John Price, Esq., of Llanrhaiadr Hall, by Harriet, his wife, daughter of John Wynne Griffiths, Esq., of Garn, and was married to Laura Fitzroy, of Nizells House, Kent.

James Kennedy Blair, Esq., formerly of Wheatfield, and late Judge of the Liverpool County Court, on the 1st inst., in his seventy-second year. He was eldest son of James Blair, Esq., of Belfast; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1835, and soon obtained considerable practice on the Northern Circuit and in the local courts of Liverpool and Manchester.

The Right Hon. Lucy, Lady Truro, wife of the present Lord Truro, on the 5th inst., at Falconwood, Shooter's Hill. Her Ladyship was the daughter of Robert Ray, Esq., and was married, in 1838, to Charles, Lord Truro, who succeeded his father, Thomas, first Lord Truro, Lord High Chancellor, in 1855. Lady Truro had no children.

Charles Leslie, Esq., J.P., of Merrion-square, Dublin, and of Corruic-na-Greine, Dalkey, much esteemed and respected, on the 4th inst., at his marine residence. His sister, Sarah, married Major Thomas Goodricke Peacocke, Esq., of Fort Etna, in the county of Limerick, a distinguished Peninsular officer, the first to enter the breach at the siege of Badajoz.

Robert Alexander Fisher, Judge of the Bristol County Court, at his residence, Pembroke-road, Clifton. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1850, was some time Deputy Judge of the City of London Court, and was Secretary of the Judicature Commission from 1872 to its close. He was appointed Judge of the Bristol County Court in 1874. He contributed to legal literature the well-known work, "Fisher's Digest."

Colonel Willam Lyons, in command of the Brigade Depôt at Ashton-under-Lyne, one of the very few field officers of our Army who have risen from the ranks. Colonel Lyons enlisted as a boy in 1828, and was gazetted to a commission in 1841. He was afterwards appointed Adjutant of the 5th Fusiliers, served with that regiment at the Mauritius, and was promoted Major in 1857. He was afterwards gazetted Lieutenant-Colonel of the 5th West India Regiment, and on its disbandment was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General in Canada, where he served during the Fenian disturbances. Colonel Lyons served as Superintendent of the London Recruiting District for several years, and was appointed to command the Ashton Dépôt in 1876. He obtained his colonelcy in 1871.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

W L (Swanmore).—See also 1. R to K 7th. The position appears to be incurable, so do not waste time over it.

J M F (Dublin).—Only correct solutions are acknowledged.

ALFYN (Plymouth).—The capture of a Pawn en passant on the first move of the solution of a problem is objectionable, because the solver cannot know that the Pawn captured was played upon the preceding move; but the objection does not apply to the manœuvre when, as in the case of Problem No. 1855, the solver sees the Pawn moved, and should know that he can capture it, according to the laws of the game.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Kt 3rd	Any move
2. Q or R mates accordingly.

By HENRY THOMAS YOUNG.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game in which the Rev. G. A. MACDONNELL yields the odds of the Q Kt to another AMATEUR.

(Remove White's Q Kt from the board.—Muzio Gambit)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. B to B 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Castles	P takes Kt
6. Q takes P	Q to B 3rd
7. P to Q 3rd

The usual move, when the game is played on even terms is 7. P to K 5th, and it is better than the move in the text when, as here, odds are given.

7.	B to R 3rd
8. B to Q 2nd	Kt to Q B 3rd
9. P to K 5th	Kt takes P
10. Q R to K sq	Kt to K 2nd
11. Q to K 4th	P to Q 4th

11. P to Q 3rd followed by 12. B to B 4th seems the best line of play at this juncture.

12. B takes Q P	Kt to Kt 5th
13. B to B 3rd	B to B 4th

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
Black's last two moves are very weak: the exchange of Queens must now cost him a piece at least.
14 Q to R 4th (ch)	B to Q 2nd
15 B takes Q	B takes Q
16. B takes R	K to K 2nd
17. B takes B P

The right move. If Black answers with 17. R takes B, then follows—18. B to K 6th (ch), and 19. B takes Kt

17.	Kt to K 6th
18. B to B 6th	R to K B sq
19. B to R 5th	R takes B
20. R takes Kt	R to B 4th
21. R to K 4th	B takes P

Better to have exchanged the pieces.

22. B to Kt 4th	K to Q 3rd
23. K R to K sq	B to B sq
24. R to K 6th (ch)	K to Q 2nd
25. R takes Kt (ch)	B takes R
26. B takes R (ch)	K to Q sq
27. B takes P, and wins.

One of ten Games played simultaneously by Mr. BLACKBURNE sans voir at the Town all, Huntingdon, on the 19th ult Mr. Blackburne won seven and drew the remaining three games.

(King's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Amateur).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
4. B to B 4th	B to B 4th

This mode of conducting the gambit shows that Black is not learned in the bookish theoric of the game.

5. P to Q 4th	B to Kt 3rd
6. Q B takes P	P to Q 3rd
7. Castles	B to Kt 5th

And this move indicates that his practice has not been more extensive than his study of theory.

8. B takes P (ch)	K to Q 2nd
9. P to B 3rd	Kt to B 3rd
10. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q to K 2nd
11. B to Q 5th	B takes Kt

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Amateur).
12. Q takes B	Kt takes B
13. P takes Kt	Kt to K 4th
14 B takes Kt	P takes B
15. Kt to B 4th	P takes P
16. Q R to K sq	Q to Kt 4th
17. Q to B 7th (ch)	K to Q sq
18. Kt to K 5th	P takes P (dis. ch)
19. K to R sq	K to B sq

This is very accommodating, enabling Black to finish the game with the mate known as "Philidor's legacy," although it is much older than its name would denote

20. Q to K 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq
21. Kt to Q 7th (ch)	K to B sq
22. Kt takes B (dbl. ch)	K to Kt sq
23. Q to B 8th (ch)	R takes Q
24. Kt to Q 7th. Mate.

Our old contributor Delta sends us another instalment of his reminiscences as follows:—"My first chess encounter out of Scotland was with a Frenchman, going down the Thames in April, 1837, bound for Havre. He asked me if I could play chess, I answered, 'Oui, un peu;' he replied, 'Je suis un joueur bien fort!' 'In that case,' said I, 'I need not play, as I am but a beginner.' We then sat down, and I won about five or six parties of my friend, who, I found, to my amazement and delight, was far weaker than myself. My French friend got very excited as he lost game after game, and at last, with an exclamation that sounded like 'mille tonnerres,' he capsized the board and men and rushed frantically upon deck, and it was a long time before he subsided into equanimity again. I found players of a very different sort of metal when I visited the Café de la Régence, where I sustained a host of defeats. It then began to dawn upon me that my weakness at the game was something marvellous, and I tried to dispel it by studying carefully the play of La Bourdonnais and the minor athletes. When playing one day in 1837, at the Café de la Régence, before I played with La Bourdonnais, I heard, first, a fusillade of musketry and then the boom of great guns. We were in the thick of an interesting position, and my vis-à-vis was so engrossed with it that he did not hear the guns at all! There is no mental exercise, indeed, more absorbing or abstracting than chess. After his attention had been directed to the ominous sounds of civil war, which came to us from the quarter of St. Antoine, he smiled, and said, 'Oh, there is a small revolution going on là bas.' That émeute was quenched in blood; and had it not been stamped out as soon as it began it might have hurled the Citizen King from his unstable throne. I had not visited the Edinburgh Chess Club at this period. I played very little indeed from 1838 to 1842, and was ignorant of the openings until I bought and studied Lewis's Book on Chess in 1844."

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Dec. 27, 1871) with three codicils (dated Dec. 28, 1871; Aug. 20, 1873; and Dec. 29, 1876) of Sir Thomas Charles Style, Bart., late of No. 102, Sydney-place, Bath, who died July 23 last, was proved on the 25th ult. by Samuel Courthope Bosanquet, Digby Cayley, jun., and George Dunbar Whatman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The will of Charles Radclyffe Hall, M.D., late of Torquay, who died on March 21 last, has been proved at the Exeter district registry by Radclyffe Radclyffe Hall, the son, and John Fielder Hall, the brother, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Esther Hall, who is otherwise amply provided for, all the cash at his bankers to the extent of £500, and his residence, with the furniture and effects. There are bequests to his brothers, sister, and others, and a devise of all his real estate to his said son; the residue of the personalty is to be held upon trust for his son for life, and then for his children, as he shall by deed or will appoint.

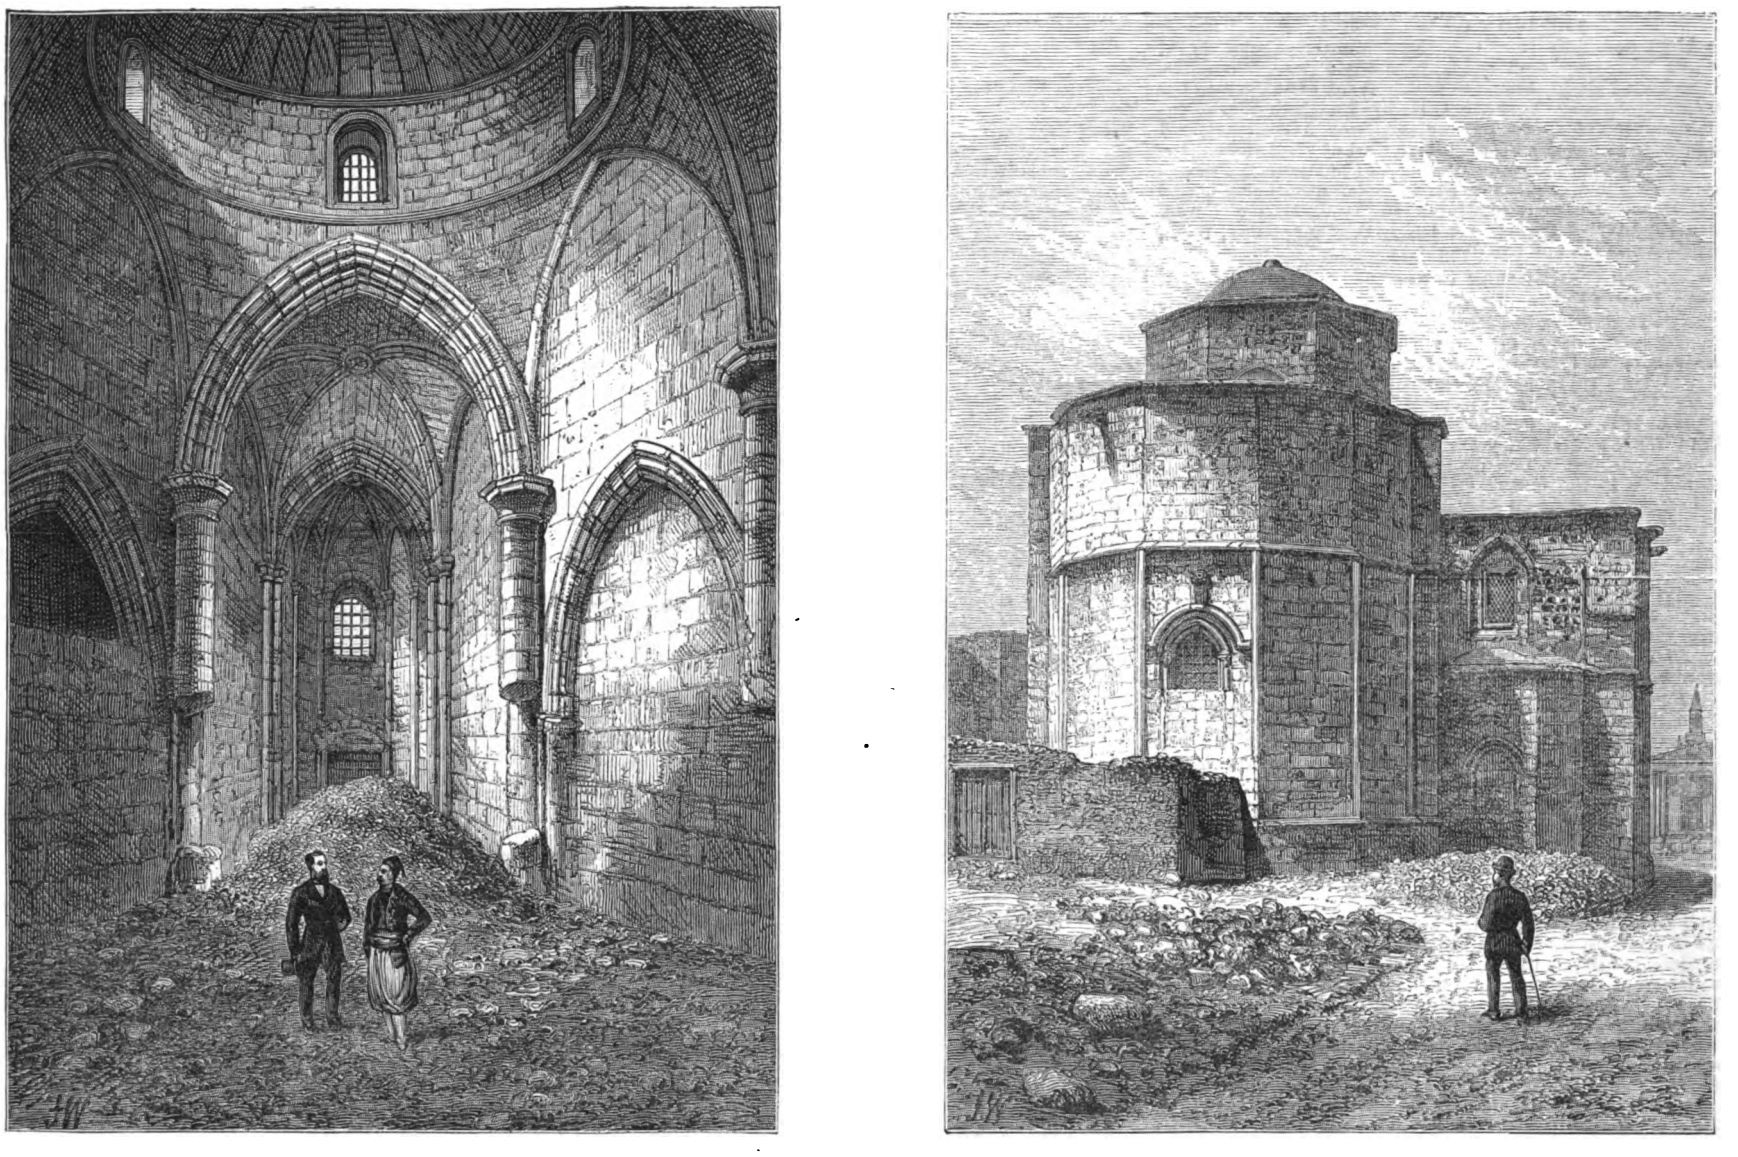
The will (dated Feb. 13, 1879) of Mr. Samuel Norris, late of Beacon Downes, Pinhoe, Devon, and of No. 6, Summerland-place, Exeter, who died on March 2 last, has been proved at the district registry, Exeter, by Horace Charles Lloyd and Joseph Harding, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths £100 each to the Devon and Exeter Hospital and the Exeter Dispensary; £50 each to the Institution for the Instruction and Employment of the Blind, St. David's-hill, Exeter, and the Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, St. Leonard's, Exeter. To his wife, Mrs. Anna Philippa Norris, in addition to other special bequests, he leaves his residence at Beacon Downes, with the furniture and effects, and £1500 per annum for life; at her death the property at Beacon Downes is to go to his son, Richard Kendall Norris, to whom he also gives his property in High-street, Exeter; to his daughter Mabel £12,000; and legacies to relatives and servants; he also leaves legacies ranging from 19 guineas to £350 each, to the accountants, assistants, clerks, apprentices, and porters in the employ of his firm. The residue of his property is to be divided among his children.

The will (dated Aug. 1, 1877) of Mr. Henry William Litler, formerly of Oldham, Lancashire, but late of Wallerscote, near Leamington, Warwickshire, who died on Aug. 2 last, was proved on the 29th ult. by Mrs. Mary Gatley Litler, the widow, and John Rowntree, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator gives to his wife £1000; the residue of his real and personal estate is to go as she shall appoint, and in default of appointment such residue is to be held upon trust for her for life; then, after payment of annuities to two of her relatives, the ultimate residue is to be divided between his nephew, the Rev. Joseph Bellot Litler, and his nieces, Miss Letitia B. Litler and Miss Emma O. Litler.



The will (dated Oct. 16, 1863) with two codicils (dated April 25, 1867, and Aug. 1, 1871) of Lieutenant-General Sir William Bates Ingilby, R.A., K.C.B., late of No. 9, Roland-gardens, South Kensington, who died on Aug. 6 last, was proved on the 25th ult. by Sir Henry Day Ingilby, Bart., the nephew, the surviving executor, the personal estate being sworn under £10,000.

The will and codicil (both dated Aug. 11, 1874) of Mrs. Felicia Jane Gosling, late of Bath, who died on the 1st ult. at Cologne, were proved on the 29th ult. by William Clarke Francis Gosling, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £10,000.

The will (dated Feb. 25, 1878) of Mr. James Whitaker, formerly of Bramham Lodge, but late of Thorp Arch Hall, Yorkshire, who died on May 11 last, has been proved at the district registry, York, by Captain George Thomas Whitaker, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £6000.

The will of the late Mr. Lionel Lawson, of 2, Brook-street, Hanover-square, was made on Aug. 4, 1875, by Mr. Alfred Cox, solicitor, 28, St. Swithin's-lane. Since that date the will has been in the possession of Mr. Cox, with the exception of whom no living person at the time of Mr. Lawson's death was aware whether he had or had not died intestate. Under this will the testator appoints his nephew, Edward L. Lawson, and George F. Phillips, of Newgate-street, his executors and trustees. He devises and bequeaths all his real and personal estate to the said trustees on trust. To his sister Caroline he bequeaths an annuity of £500 for her life; to her present husband, if he survive her, an annuity of £250. To his sister Sophia an annuity of £500, with the same conditions in regard to her husband; to his brother Benjamin an annuity of £250; to his sister Ellen a sum of 1000 gs.; to Mrs. Simpson an annuity of £500 for her life; to Reginald Turner, of whom he was guardian, an annuity of £100 for his life; to George Faudel Phillips, for his trouble as executor, a sum of 1000 gs. The residue of his real and personal property he divides into five portions, bequeathing it thus:—One portion to his son, Frank Lawson; one portion to his niece, Miss Emily Levy; one portion to his nephew, Edward L. Lawson; one portion to the children of his eldest brother other than the said Emily and Edward; one portion to Harry, eldest son of his nephew, Edward L. Lawson; and in case of his death before he attains his majority this portion to go to Willie, the second son of the said Edward L. Lawson. All gifts and benefits given to females, or that females may become entitled to, under this will are for their sole and separate use independent of their husbands. By this will the testator confirms all settlements made by him at any time, and these include those made on his daughter Louise on her marriage with Sir George Prescott, Bart., and on his nephew Edward, when he by Royal warrant assumed the name of the testator. The trustees and executors are appointed guardians of the said Frank Lawson. No person interested other than the executors and trustees has the power of requiring any of the testator's shares or interest in the Daily Telegraph, or freeholds and property connected therewith, to be sold or disposed of. It is stated that the personalty will be sworn under £900,000; but this does not include the testator's various freehold estates.—World.

SEPULCHRAL REMAINS IN CORNWALL.

Mr. W. C. Borlase, F.S.A., has recently been making some interesting discoveries in the parish of St. Just-in-Penwith, in Cornwall, one of the most fertile districts for pre-historic antiquities in England. Some of the tumuli have been found to contain very remarkable structural characteristics, such as one dome of dry masonry encasing another, as in the topes of Afghanistan. In one instance, two fine sepulchral chambers were discovered in a mound which had been surmounted by an ancient Christian oratory. The plan and section which our Engraving presents are those of a tumulus at Tregascal, in which the large sepulchral urn shown in the accompanying Illustration was found. The mound was oval, 36 ft. long and 32 ft. broad, with an extreme height of 9 ft. in the centre. It contained a massively constructed chamber, with walls and roof formed of unhewn blocks of granite, 11 ft. 9 in. long, 4 ft. wide, and 3 ft. 2 in. high. It lay in the direction of north-west to south-east; at the north-west end was a raised platform of stone. The floor of this chamber was strewn with a layer of calcined human bone, among which were ashes, flints, fragments of pottery, and a perforated sandstone implement, perhaps a charm (see fig. 1). At G was taken up the bottom of a small urn of reddish pottery. On the top of the central roofing-stone, at H, was a curious natural excrescence on the face of the granite, a peculiarity which had probably caused the stone to be selected. Outside the north-west wall of the chamber, and resting, mouth downwards, on the surface of a large flat rock, was the urn (see fig. 2), the largest perfect one yet found in Cornwall. It measures 21 in. in height, by 16 in. in diameter at the mouth. The whole of the upper rim is ornamented with a pattern arranged in zigzag form, made by the impression of some instrument, or by that of twisted grass, while the clay was wet. A band of ornamentation, in diamond form, runs round the vessel, on a level with the handles, which are likewise ornamented, and are no less than 5 in. wide. Owing to the roofing stone of the little cist, which had been built up round it, having fallen in, the bottom of the vessel was broken down into it; but this, on being taken out for restoration, was found to be adorned with a cross, champered and raised in bold relief, on the inside. The arms are of equal length, and do not extend to the edge of the vessel, which measures here only 6 in. in diameter. A few other instances of raised crosses on the inside of the bottoms of urns have occurred in Wilts and Dorset. A careful drawing has been made of this one, which is subjoined. The cist which contained the vessel was of very rude construction, and small stones had been set around to wedge it in. The pottery is half an inch thick, and coarsely made. The interior was filled with ashes and minute portions of calcined bone. The mound was surrounded by a ring of upright stones, forming a basement; and there were also traces of an inner wall on the west side. For the plan, section, and drawings we are indebted to Mr. J. W. Trounson, C.E., of Penzance.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1879.

The military "advance upon Cabul" has ended in the occupation of that City. A public entry of the British Troops was made on Sunday last at noon by General Roberts, accompanied by the Ameer Yakoob Khan. The British Standard, having been hoisted, was saluted by the Royal Horse Artillery. The Bala Hissar and the hill which commands it are in the possession of our troops. The Ghilzais, Kohistanis, Logaris, and other tribes who had assembled to fight them, have returned to their homes, and most of the influential men in the City of Cabul have hastened to pay their respects to General Roberts. A hundred and ten guns have been taken. Fugitives have been pursued for twenty miles beyond the city. No quarter has been given them when apprehended, but comparatively few were taken. The city is in the grip of an iron hand. What is to be done with it is yet problematical, or, as the Daily News' Correspondent at Allahabad telegraphed on Monday last, "the political situation shows no development." Further serious fighting, we should imagine, need not be looked for. In substance, the work of the Indian army has been done. Done with a gallantry worthy of warm recognition. When we have said this we have probably said all that is calculated to remove the uneasiness of the British public. What remains appertains not to the Army, but to the Government. The statesman will now step into the place of the soldier, and wise policy, it may be hoped, will take advantage of successful force.

It would be premature to speculate, with any degree of confidence, upon the precise shape which that policy should assume. We are not yet in possession of all the facts of the case. We know very little of the real temper of the people with which we have to deal. We are compelled by recent events to assume that the Treaty of Gundamuk, at least in its main provision, has been futile. Whether it should now be practically enforced; whether, if so, it would be of the least use to the Indian Government; or, if not, what other course it were best to adopt,—are questions which can only be even approximately settled in the light of fuller information. Having got into Cabul, are we to remain there? If our occupation of the City is not to be permanent, are we still to impose upon the Ameer a British Resident? or, having avenged Sir Louis Cavagnari, his companions and his escort, are we to retire within our own settled Frontiers, and leave the Afghans to reduce as they can anarchy to order? These are questions the settlement of which cannot be wisely effected without taking into account all the circumstances bearing upon them. They cannot be pronounced upon a priori. The expediency with which they are concerned will necessarily be governed by the facts out of which it is evolved. The statesmanship which can deal with it in the most promising manner must be cool, far-seeing, and, above all, patient, in making itself master of the situation, and in prescribing the policy best suited to it. But, while passion in any form and dogmatism of any kind in the process of solving so subtle and at the same time so vast a question of foreign policy must be deprecated, two or three rules may be laid down within which any decision, likely to be permanent as well as fruitful, ought, we think, to be obeyed.

In the first place, it will be expedient to use the utmost caution in giving its due place in any judgment we may form to British prestige. Prestige is not to be identified with infallibility. The Oriental nature, much as it may differ in particular features from that which characterises the Western Nations, is, nevertheless, it should be remembered, human nature. Mere persistency in a mistake once committed, more especially if that mistake be far-reaching in its influence, does not cover, even in the eyes of Eastern people, its original defect. To turn into a right road out of a wrong one does not necessarily, in any part of the world, beget contempt. On the hypothesis that our forcing a Resident upon the Ameer of Cabul was a step condemned by political foresight, it is not to be taken for granted that a reversal of it will more injuriously affect our reputation in the East than would a stubborn refusal to retract it. To go on merely because we have started, when events have already convinced us that the path we tread must lead to disaster, can be, only in very exceptional circumstances indeed, the dictate of political sagacity. Experience has taught thus much to all who choose to keep their eyes open. If, consequently, it be found, upon mature consideration, that a change in the policy lately initiated in India be desirable, it should surely be effected in the belief that, in the long run, wisdom will outlive unwisdom, even where the government of Orientals is concerned. Of course, what is done in this direction will require to be done with delicacy and caution. But there is no more fear to be entertained of a loss of prestige in a reversal of a novel policy than there was in a deviation from a settled and traditional one.

There is another rule for the guidance of our judgment at the present moment. It is that Patriotism should take precedence of Party. What is calculated to subserve the real interests of the country claims prior consideration to that which will only serve to maintain or to promote Party ascendancy. In a matter so serious as that which is before us—a matter the settlement of which, this way or that, may possibly, and appreciably, colour the future not of England only, but of India and of the World—it would be unjustifiable, we may almost say unpardonable, to employ as a Party weapon, or to take advantage of for Party ends, a crisis in the affairs of the Empire, the issues of which will be felt for good or for evil many generations to come. On this subject, perhaps, it is now useless to dwell. Electoral passions already exercise a potent influence upon the public judgment. But we cannot forbear an expression of opinion that, at so critical a moment as the present, men of intelligence at least, and of conscience in their treatment of public affairs, should strive to their utmost to look at the matter under consideration in its broader and more comprehensive rather than in its narrower aspects.

One word more. There is still some tendency to deal with the Afghan question as one in which we have an embryo quarrel with Russia. If this be so, would it not be better to deal directly with Russian Diplomacy? How long is the world to be disturbed by remote apprehensions of what this Northern Power will do, or will fail to do, in Asia, some century hence. Once it was France that we were taught to distrust, to hate, and to dread. Now it is Russia, and, for aught we can tell, twenty years hence it may be Germany. But who can foresee the course which history will take? Who does not know that Foreign Policy is constantly modified by internal conditions? Let us keep our eyes open to what is occurring from day to day; but do not let us be thrown into a perpetual worry about eventualities that can only be possible in some far distant future—eventualities which a thousand accidents may intervene to make utterly impracticable. The question of what is to be done with Afghanistan may, perhaps, be most wisely disposed of in the absence of all anxiety with regard to Muscovite aspirations and proclivities.

The directors of the Royal Caledonian Asylum have received twenty guineas in aid of the funds of the institution from the Master and Wardens of the Clothworkers' Company.

The Lord Chancellor and Colonel Farquharson of Invercauld and Miss Farquharson dined with the Queen. Her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice, the Grand Duke of Hesse, Prince Leopold, and the Hereditary Grand Duke, drove to Loch Callater on Saturday last. Major Chard, R.E., V.C., arrived at the castle, and, with the Hon. Blanche Pitt and the Lord Chancellor, dined with the Queen. On Sunday her Majesty and the members of the Royal family attended Divine service, performed at the castle by the Rev. Dr. Lee, of St. Giles's, Edinburgh. The Queen and Princess Beatrice drove to Abergeldie in the afternoon, and visited the Empress Eugénie. Tea was served in the castle gardens. Her Majesty's dinner party included the Lord Chancellor, Dr. Lee, Major von Derff, and Major Chard. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and the other members of the Royal family, has made her customary daily excursions to the various picturesque localities of the neighbourhood. Sir Henry Elliot, G.C.B., has been on a visit to her Majesty at Balmoral. The Marchioness Dowager of Ely has left the castle. Lady Churchill has succeeded Lady Southampton as Lady in Waiting to the Queen, and the Hon. Mary Pitt has arrived at the castle.

By desire of the Queen Lord Cranbrook has addressed a letter to the father of Lieutenant Hamilton, who was killed in the massacre at Cabul, informing him that the Queen had signed the warrant for the deceased Lieutenant's Victoria Cross, and expressing the regret of her Majesty that she could not bestow it with her own hand. As that was impossible, the Queen intimated her strong sense of Lieutenant Hamilton's heroic gallantry both in the action by which he won the honour and in the undaunted courage with which he faced inevitable death.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their daughters, who closed their visit to the King and Queen of Denmark on Wednesday, have enjoyed to the utmost their sojourn at Copenhagen, and, the weather having been exceptionally fine, daily excursions either by land or by water have been made. In the evenings the Royal family have usually attended the theatre, where, on alternate nights, Signora Ristori has performed some of the masterpieces of the great tragic poets. The Prince and the Czarewitch were present at the launch of the King's new yacht the Dannebrog. The King of Sweden visited the Danish and English Royal families last week. His Majesty landed at Bellevue, where he was received by the King of Denmark, the Prince, the Czarewitch, the Crown Prince of Denmark, and Prince Hans of Glücksborg. The Kings and the Princes drove to Bernsdorff Castle, where a déjeûner dinatoire was served, after which the Royal party walked in the grounds, where the private band of the Czarewitch, consisting of some forty musicians, played. The King of Sweden, accompanied by the King of Denmark and the Princes, returned to Bellevue, where he received a deputation from the Swedes living in Copenhagen, and afterwards embarked on board his vessel and returned to Helsingborg. The officers of the Osborne entertained large parties of Russians and of Danish officers on board while the yacht was lying off Copenhagen. The Prince and Princess purpose passing his Royal Highness's birthday at Sandringham.

THE DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

he Duchess of Edinburgh was prematurely confined of a stillborn child on Monday morning at Eastwell Park. The bulletin issued the same day by Dr. Wilson Fox and Dr. George Wilks announced that her Royal Highness had slept well during the day, and was progressing most favourably. The condition of the Duchess is so satisfactory that no further bulletins will be issued.

The Duke of Edinburgh and the Duchess, after passing several weeks with the Empress of Russia at Jugenheim, returned to Eastwell Park on the 9th inst. from Paris on their route from Germany. Prince Alfred and the Princesses of Edinburgh had arrived some weeks previously at Eastwell from the Isle of Wight.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught witnessed the performance of the "Iron Chest" at the Lyceum on Saturday. On the same day the Duke honoured the establishment of Messrs. Craker and Abbott, of Oxford-street, with a visit to inspect a carriage built by them for the Duchess.

The Prince and Princess Christian have returned to Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Great Park.

The Empress Eugénie attended Divine worship in the Roman Catholic chapel at Glengairn on Sunday. The Empress drove from Abergeldie down the south side of the Dee, and, crossing at Ballater, proceeded up the glen to the secluded nook where the chapel stands. The return journey was made by the north side of the Dee, crossing the Queen's Bridge at Balmoral. Her Majesty and the Queen frequently exchange visits.

His Excellency the German Ambassador has arrived at the German Embassy, Carlton House-terrace, from visiting the Earl and Countess of Derby at Knowsley. His Excellency Count Schouvaloff has arrived at the Russian Embassy, Chesham-place, from St. Petersburg, to resume his diplomatic duties at the Court of St. James's. Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Hope have left England for India, where they intend to spend the winter.

The marriage of Viscount Lewisham, M.P., and Lady Mary Coke, daughter of the Earl of Leicester, will not take place till towards the end of December.

Lord Carnarvon being ill, the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the public buildings in Reading, intended for Tuesday last, has been postponed.

A lady residing at Brighton has given to the National Life-Boat Institution £750 for the purpose of placing a life-boat on the coast. It appears that a mutual promise was made by the husband and wife that the survivor should give during lifetime or by will a life-boat to the institution. The husband having died, the widow has now carried out the agreement.

THE CHURCH.

The foundation-stone of a new Episcopal church was laid last week at Duddo by the Marchioness of Waterford.

The large west window of Clevedon church, Somerset, has been filled with stained glass (designed and executed by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne). The subjects illustrated are "The Transfiguration of Our Lord" and "The Last Supper."

Sir George Stucley has presented to the parish church of Bideford, in memory of his wife, who was a daughter of the Marquis of Thomond, a handsome window, from the studio of Mr. W. G. Taylor, of Berners-street.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided yesterday week at the opening of a new Christian Institute in Glasgow. The building has cost a large sum, and his Lordship said he was glad to see that it would be used to provide additional means of counteracting the pernicious influences which beset dwellers in large cities.

The New Testament Company of Revisers assembled on Tuesday in the Jerusalem Chamber for their ninety-second session. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided. The company proceeded to review their second revision of the Epistles to the Corinthians and the Galatians.

The Rev. Edward Champneys Irwine, M.A., Vicar of Hinton Admiral, Hants, and hon. sec. of the C.M.S., has accepted the Chaplaincy of the English-speaking residents at Yokohama, Japan. The stipend is £360 per annum, with a good house and garden.

The Bishop of Lichfield commenced his primary visitation of his diocese on Monday morning in the cathedral at Lichfield. The visitation is to be held at more than twenty centres throughout the diocese, and will extend over six weeks. The charge will not be delivered until the beginning of March, after all the results of the visitation inquiries have been obtained and considered.

Mr. Cross, the Home Secretary, when laying the stone of a church at Widnes, said the National Church, leaving all religious bodies to do their own work, was bound to provide accommodation for all, so that everyone might attend her services. The Church of England belonged to the people, but the iniquitous pew system, against which he had ever waged war, had driven the poor away from the parish churches. This system was, however, rapidly dying out.

The Church of Ampney St. Peter, Gloucestershire, has been restored, and, indeed, almost rebuilt, at a cost of about £1600. Of this £830 has been furnished by a sum of £500 which the late Rector, the Rev. E. B. Daubeny, had put aside to accumulate some years ago. At the luncheon Bishop Ellicott said that he had been present at the reopening of 175 restored churches, and had consecrated twenty-five, since he had been in Gloucestershire.

The ancient church of Petrockstowe, which has been rebuilt with the exception of the tower, was reconsecrated by the Bishop of Exeter on Monday last. At the luncheon Archdeacon Woollcombe mentioned that the diocesan voluntary contributions last year for schools and churches, for societies and the poor, which one person had estimated at £3000, were really £99,000, and that the amount at which they would be reported to the coming diocesan conference was no less than £120,000.

At the Church Congress at Swansea on the 9th inst. papers were read by the Bishop and the Dean of Bangor upon the Church in Wales. The Dean said the strength of the Church in the Principality now mainly survived among the upper and upper middle classes; but, although five sixths of the million of Welsh-speaking people were lost to the Church by past neglect, he did not despair of the future. He warned the Church, however, that if she would regain her former position it would only be by securing the services of able and cultivated men who could speak to the hearts of the people in their own language. A meeting held to discuss the best means of promoting internal unity in the Church was largely attended. Among the speakers were Canon Ryle, Canon Garbett, Canon Ashwell, Mr. Knox Little, and the Bishop of Winchester. At other meetings the subjects of Science and Revelation, Clergy Discipline, and Lay Work in the Church, were discussed. Two meetings for working men were held in the evening, one for Welsh and the other for English speaking working men. At the latter meeting the Bishop of St. David's presided, and the Bishops of Winchester and Oxford, Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., Earl Nelson, and Canon Ryle were among the speakers.—The congress came to a close yesterday week. No sectional meetings were held in the morning, but the congress met to consider the Epistle to the Ephesians in its relation to the practical life of the Christian. In the afternoon there were discussions on the supply and training of ministers and on the Church press and literature of Wales; and in the evening the Rev. T. Helmore read a paper on Church music.

The Baptist Union meetings at Glasgow were resumed on the 9th inst. Several papers on religious subjects were read, and there was a large public attendance in the St. Andrew Hall in the evening, the autumnal session thus closing. A resolution was unanimously passed asserting that the policy of the Government had been the cause of endless wars, had involved the nation in grave financial difficulties, and had failed to ameliorate by domestic legislation the social and moral evils under which the country suffers. The meeting therefore urged upon all members of the union the duty of active and united efforts to return members to Parliament pledged to oppose that policy.

The autumnal session of the Congregational Union of England and Wales at Cardiff, which began on Tuesday, was preceded on Monday evening by a sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Mellor. The subject was the neglect of the law of God in the social and political life of the present day. On Tuesday the president, the Rev. W. Cuthbertson, gave the annual address, which dealt with the position of Congregationalism in regard to other ecclesiastical bodies. Subsequently papers were read on college reform, which, it was urged, was a necessity of the times, as secular education had extended greatly of recent years, and as, without a very superior education, the ministers could not hope to cope with the difficulties with which they were surrounded—difficulties which were increased by prejudice against them. Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., gave an address, in which he criticised the speeches at the Church Congress held at Swansea. On Wednesday a resolution was passed condemning the policy of the Government in reference to Afghanistan. Speeches were delivered on the subject by Mr. H. Richard, M.P., and Mr. T. R. Hill, M.P., who urged Nonconformists to unite politically in order to effect a change of Government. A reception of delegates from other religious bodies took place, after which a resolution was passed in favour of a Sunday Closing Bill for Wales. A paper was read on the position and prospects of Welsh Congregationalism.

The foundation-stone of a second Wesleyan Chapel at Weston-super-Mare was laid on Tuesday, in the presence of a large concourse of people. The building, which is of Gothic design, to accommodate about 500 persons, will cost about £2500.

The Rev Canon Barry, Principal of King's College, yesterday week delivered the opening lecture to ladies in connection with the winter session of that institution. The lecture was devoted to a comparison of two great educational revivals—those of the sixteenth and the nineteenth centuries.

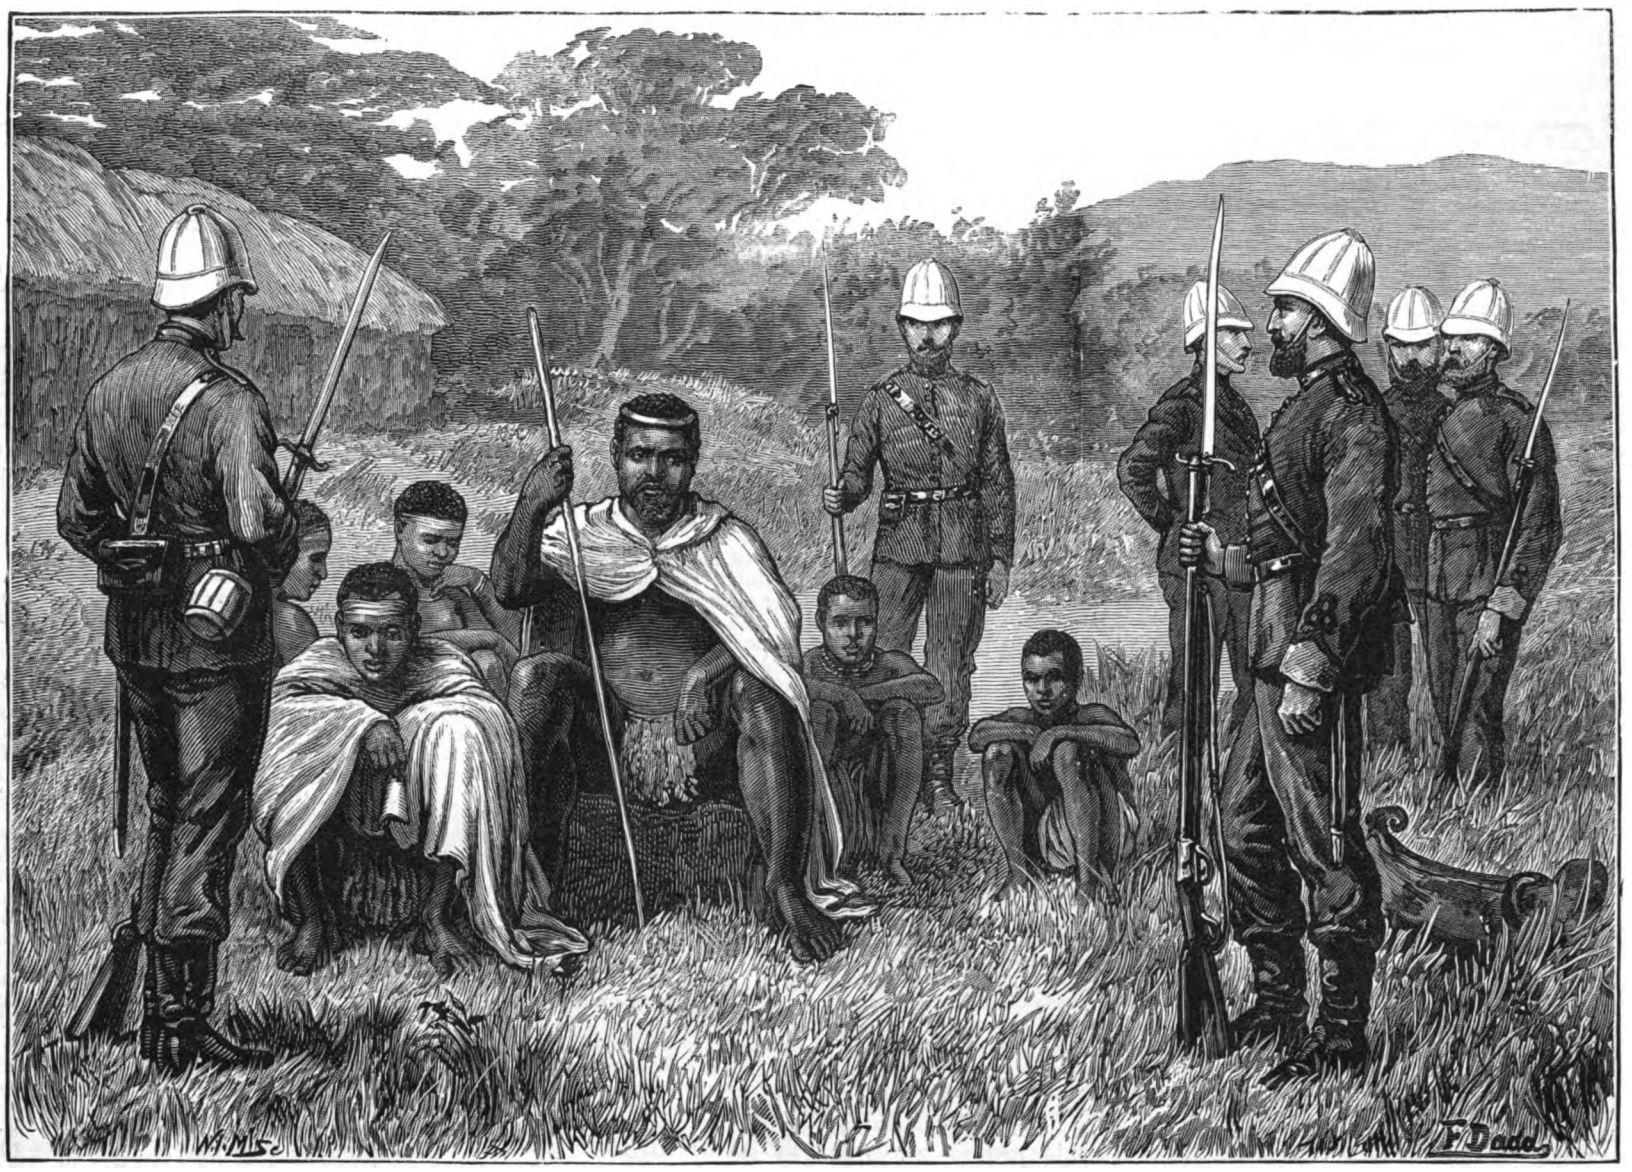
At the distribution of prizes last Saturday to the pupils of the Ladies' Collegiate School, Belfast, Mr. James P. Corry, M.P., who presided, and who is one of the Honorary Commissioners under the Intermediate Education Act (Ireland), spoke in high terms of the operations of that Act in the first year of its existence, referring specially to its success in connection with the education of young ladies.

The Bishop of Bedford gave the opening address to the City of London College Evening Classes for Young Men on Monday evening at the Sussex Hall, Leadenhall-street.

The session of 1879-80 at Trinity College, Weymouth-street, W., which is devoted to music and the arts, was formally opened on Monday night, the Warden (Rev. H. Hunt) giving an address on True Enthusiasm in Study, and the diplomas and certificates awarded at the Midsummer higher examinations were distributed.

Lord George Hamilton laid the foundation-stone last Saturday of the new Hampton Grammar School, and made a speech on education.

Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, M.A., F.C.S., of Merton College, Oxford, Second Master of Chardstock College, has been elected to the head mastership of the Prisca Coborn's Foundation Schools.



The Rev. J. Percival, M.A., LL.D., for seventeen years the energetic and popular first Head Master of Clifton College, and now President of Trinity College, Oxford, was presented at St. Vincent's Hall, Clifton, last week by the Earl of Ducie, on behalf of the citizens of Bristol, with a handsome Grecian table-service, worth £700.

The Marquis of Ripon distributed on Saturday the prizes to the successful competitors at the quarterly examinations held by the Ripon and District Pupil Teachers' Prize Scheme Association. In the course of an address the Marquis expressed the necessity of pupil teachers giving themselves heartily to their early training, for upon that depended in a great measure the reputation of their profession and the real value of their work.

THE CAPTURE OF CABUL.

The victory of General Sir F. Roberts, on Monday, the 6th inst., over the hostile Afghan troops holding the hills south of Cabul, was reported in his despatch published by us last week. It was followed up, as we then anticipated it would be, in the next two or three days, by his advance to capture the city. General Baker's brigade, consisting of the 72nd Regiment, a wing of the 5th Goorkhas, a company of the 5th Punjaub Infantry, 500 of the 23rd Pioneers, four mountain guns and two Gatlings, was again directed to attack the enemy on the evening of Wednesday, the 8th inst. The darkness coming on prevented this operation from being carried out; but during the night, while Baker's force was joined by General Macpherson with the 67th Regiment, the 28th Native Infantry, and four guns on elephants before daybreak, the enemy had once more fled from their position, leaving behind twelve more of their guns. They fled southward along the road towards Ghuzni, and were pursued twenty miles by Generals Dunham Massy and Hugh Gough, with the cavalry; but only a few small parties were overtaken. Meantime, General Sir F. Roberts had advanced his head-quarters from Charasiab, seven or eight miles south of Cabul, to the hill-range of Siah Sung, which rises directly opposite the eastern gate of the city, and is within 1300 yards direct range of the Bala Hissar, the fortified precinct in Cabul. Having now got possession of all the enemy's field artillery, which had been abandoned in their positions on the neighbouring hills, it would have been easy to pour an overwhelming fire into the city and its fortress. The commanding position of the Siah Sung heights was shown very conspicuously in the Sketch Plan of Cabul and its environs, drawn by Mr. W. Simpson, which appeared in our last week's publication. The city was virtually captured, even if the Afghan garrison had stayed further to act for its defence, as soon as the British Army had forced the passage of the defile from Charasiab, and gained the Siah Sung, which directly overlooks the entrance by the Lahore gate.

On Saturday, after receiving the formal submission of most of the influential persons in the city, General Roberts went into Cabul and visited the Bala Hissar. His formal entry, accompanied by the Ameer Yakoob Khan, took place at noon on Sunday. The road from the camp, through the city gates and streets, was lined with British troops of all arms; the British flag was hoisted there, with a salute fired by the Royal Horse Artillery. The Bala Hissar and the hill above it are now occupied by the 67th Regiment and the 5th Goorkhas. General Roberts had issued a proclamation to the people of Cabul warning them not to resist the entry of the British force, and assuring "all well-disposed persons, who have taken no part in the dastardly murder of the British Embassy, or in the plunder of the Residency," that they should not suffer, while full retribution should be exacted from the guilty offenders.

The Ghilzai tribes near the road by which our army reached Cabul have dispersed without attempting hostilities. The route is precisely indicated and set forth in the small map we have this week engraved, for which we are indebted to the Intelligence Department of the War Office. It shows the entire line of road from Kasim Khel, at the foot of the Shutargardan, down the western declivity of that Pass, and from Khushi to Zarghun Shahr, to Zahidabad, and to Charasiab, along the Loghur or Logar valley.

The number of men killed on our side in the battle of Monday week is stated at twenty-four, and fifty-seven wounded; the losses of the enemy are not known. Seventy-eight of their guns were found by Brigadier-General Massy left on the hill. It is expected that there will be more fighting in the direction of Ghuzni.

Our Illustrations comprise also that of the march of General Roberts's army through the Hazaradakht defile, between Ali Kheyl and the Shutargardan, where the hill tribes attacked a convoy on the 22nd ult., capturing laden mules and killing some of the escort. The figures of one of the Ameer's Highland guard, who were placed at the gate of the Residency in Cabul, and a trooper of the Ameer's cavalry, are represented in two of our Engravings in this Number.

The latest news, at the time of this writing, is by a telegram of Wednesday from Simla. The base of General Roberts's line of advance at Ali Kheyl, between the Peiwar and the Shutargardan, is harassed by marauding tribes. They attacked the Brigadier's camp on Tuesday, but were repulsed by the 29th and 8th Regiments. A counter-attack was then made on the enemy, with complete success. The British loss was five wounded, none killed.

Sir William Harcourt, M.P., and Mr. Hall, M.P., were present on Wednesday evening at a dinner given by the Mayor of Oxford to the members of the Corporation and the representatives of the city. The banquet was given in the Townhall, and more than one hundred guests were present. Both the members for the city spoke, but the proceedings were private

An obelisk erected on the spot where Thomas Clarkson, the philanthropist, resolved to devote his life to bringing about the abolition of the slave trade, was unveiled on the 9th inst. by Miss Merivale, daughter of the Dean of Ely, in the presence of a numerous company. The obelisk stands on the roadside near Wadesmill, between Buntingford and Ware, where Clarkson rested while on a horseback journey from Cambridge to London in 1785. It has been erected by Mr. Arthur Giles Puller, of Youngsbury, and bears an inscription recording the resolve Clarkson formed on the spot.

Lord Shaftesbury opened yesterday week the Glasgow Christian Institute, built for the reception of three of the great philanthropic societies of that city. His Lordship said he once remonstrated with Lord Palmerston when he was Prime Minister that he gave too many interviews to people. Lord Palmerston replied, "It may be so, but half a dozen of sentences by word of mouth spare you an infinity of letters." In like manner this institution would be useful for the interchange of information, and enable the members to fix upon a common principle of operation. Our commercial system is absorbing into the towns a large portion of the youth and strength of the country. This will continue if people dislike agricultural work, and prefer handling the quill to the plough. Mr. Cobbett told him many years ago that we should live to see the time when there would be few peasants in England who would be able and willing to do an effective day's labour. The thing, as matters stood, was inevitable, and we must adapt ourselves to the altered circumstances. We must do something to supply the homes they have left, provide counter-attractions to the temptations that surround them, give them facility for mental recreation, and offer them opportunities of forming safe and happy friendships. He was not quite sure that the sudden and wide extension of education among all classes had not added considerably to the national difficulty. We owed to the great increase of educated persons, both readers and writers, the vast amount of sensational and impure literature that was devastating society like a flood, and which would defy every breakwater to check it, and every law but that of vigorous public opinion to put it down.

THE CAPTIVITY OF CETEWAYO.

We are already enabled, by a number of original sketches and photographs just received from several of our correspondents in South Africa, to present a complete series of Illustrations of the captivity of the deposed Zulu King; his removal from Zululand, by sea, on board the steam transport-vessel Natal; the arrangements for his safe custody and personal accommodation, with his wives and other native attendants; his arrival and landing at Capetown, and his present abode in the Castle there. These subjects occupy eight of the Engravings given in our publication of this week. They form an interesting sequel to the abundant Sketches of the Zulu War furnished during the past six months by our Special Artist. The termination of that extraordinary contest, in a military point of view, though its political results are by no means clear, has been formally announced by Sir Garnet Wolseley in despatches to her Majesty's Government. Our attention may now be turned for a brief space to the remarkable situation and character of the fallen native Sovereign, who now finds himself (to compare small affairs with great) in a position similar to that of Napoleon III. at Wilhelmshöhe, after the battle of Sedan; a prisoner of war, and likely to be kept a prisoner of State, while the country over which he lately reigned is undergoing a total change of government.

There has been much difference of opinion concerning the personal merits or faults of King Cetewayo. Before the late declaration of war against him the only direct testimonies we had from Europeans holding responsible offices, who had actually met and conversed with him, were rather favourable. Sir Theophilus Shepstone, the long-experienced Natal Secretary for Native Affairs, who assisted at his coronation in 1873, says that "he is a man of considerable ability, much force of character, and has a dignified manner. In all my conversations with him he was remarkably frank and straightforward, and he ranks, in every respect, far above any Native Chief I have ever had to do with. I do not think his disposition is very warlike." Mr. Rudolph, the Landdrost of Utrecht, who was confidentially employed by the British as well as by the former Dutch Government of the Transvaal, bears witness to the same effect. "I have met the Zulu King," says he, "four or five times, and know him well. He is a very straightforward man, and says out what he thinks. He is not like most of his people. He is very acute, and sees the meaning of anything very quickly. I have never believed in his attacking Natal." These estimates of Cetewayo's character are fully borne out, in our judgment, by a perusal of all the official reports, from 1875 to 1878 inclusive, of messages that passed between him and the Natal Government. His behaviour was invariably straightforward; and it was friendly and even submissive, except upon one occasion, that of his alleged refusal, in October, 1876, to listen to the native messengers sent to remonstrate against the supposed killing of women and girls. There is every reason to believe that he then neither understood the charge brought against him, nor got the language of his answer fairly reported to Sir Henry Bulwer. In every other instance, before and afterwards, he showed a willing docility to the English Government, and especially a childlike confidence and reverence towards the person whom he called "my father Somtseu," which was not lost till that person had become the advocate of wrongful Dutch encroachments in Zululand. There are no reports of an authentic and well accredited kind showing the real state of the case with regard to Cetewayo's acts in the administration of his rule over his own people. The statements of the Rev. R. Robertson and other missionaries exhibit a list of incidental and local outrages, such as might be collected anywhere in Turkey, nowise proved to have been done by the King's order. In the opinion of the Bishop of Natal, who has long been in constant, intimate communication with the Zulus of various ranks and tribes, Cetewayo's government was not so monstrous. The Bishop published, in Macmillan's Magazine of June, 1877, the report of a credible informant whom he had commissioned to visit the Zulu capital, to inspect the condition of the people, and to make particular inquiries of the King. No such trouble was taken to get at the truth by direct investigations in Zululand before Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Brownlee drew up their indictment against Cetewayo, the former having but recently arrived in Natal, and the other gentleman belonging to the Cape Colony. There is much ground for the belief that Cetewayo, like his father Panda, was always averse to bloodshed, and that he inflicted death only on those who were regarded as heinous criminals by Zulu law. The dreadful superstition of witchcraft and sorcery, under which name, however, the real crime of poisoning was frequently punished, seems to account for a large number of these cases.

Cetewayo's domestic habits, while at home in his own country, were those of other Zulu and Kaffir chiefs. He had many wives, and a multitude of male and female slaves, collected in the Royal kraal or inclosure of huts, and his wealth consisted of great herds of oxen and milch cows. He was, notwithstanding his corpulence, a man of active pursuits, fond of riding, shooting, and fishing; a plentiful eater of beef and native porridge, and drinker of Zulu beer. He never drank stronger liquors, and has not been accused of intoxication. His temper was sanguine, jovial, cheerful, and boastful, somewhat haughty, but not prone to fits of violent rage. He was quite illiterate, and had never travelled out of Zululand, but was shrewd in his questions about foreign affairs. He believed profoundly in the religious and political traditions of the Zulu nation; he venerated the memory of his deified ancestors, the heroes and conquerors of the former Zulu empire; he consulted the oracles of Zulu priesthood, the famous rain-makers, the necromancers and witch-doctors of that heathen country. It was for the imagined beneficent power of Langalibalele as a conjuror of rain that Cetewayo sought to procure his release from the British Government. And he was at one time persuaded to forego his purposed attack on the Swazies, because they possess a noted local shrine at which prayers for rain should be offered, and the Zulu agriculturists wanted rain. Such was King Cetewayo, who inherited, unhappily for himself, the sceptre of a realm endowed by his predecessors, forty or fifty years ago, with a rigid military constitution. The details of this system, and his administration of it, are fully explained in Captain T. J. Lucas's instructive book, "The Zulus and the British Frontiers," which also describes his coronation, and relates the origin of his dispute with his colonial neighbours. It need not here be stated how the formidable standing army of the Zulu Kingdom became an obstacle to the secure settlement of South Africa under the British High Commissioner, till the late war, commenced in January, and practically ended in July, broke up that native State, driving its King into the forest a hunted fugitive.

The capture of Cetewayo was effected by a patrol under command of Major Marter, of the Queen's Dragoon Guards, on Aug. 28, in a kraal at the edge of the Ngome forest. He had been pursued for a fortnight incessantly by Captain Lord Gifford, under the orders of Major Barrow, through the wild region north of the Black Umvolosi river. He was immediately brought, with his companions, to Brigadier-General Clarke's encampment on the banks of that river, stopping at the Ndaza Royal kraal on the way. One of the sketches we have engraved shows the outside of the hut there in which the King slept on the night of Aug. 29, with three officers, Major Marter and Captain Astley Terry, and Lieutenant Hutton, of the 60th Rifles, reposing on the ground, and with the sentinels on guard. Another Sketch, by Lieutenant H. C. Harford, is that of the King under guard at the encampment on the Black Umvolosi. He left that place in a waggon sent to convey the Royal prisoner to Sir Garnet Wolseley's head-quarters at Ulundi. He did not, however, choose to ride much in the waggon, as he complained of its shaking him, and preferred to walk. The soldiers were not allowed to approach within thirty yards of the King. He arrived at Ulundi on the morning of Aug. 31, having slept the night before about four miles from that place. Three wives, a female servant, and a daughter were with him, besides one Chief, Umkosana, and three other men, five of his servants having escaped, or having been shot in attempting to escape. A Correspondent thus describes the arrival at Ulundi:—"In front of the King's escort came some of the Dragoons and the men of Lonsdale's Horse who were present at the capture, clearing a broad path of some eighty yards wide, along the centre of which marched first some Dragoons, then a portion of the Native Contingent (Barton's), a company of the 3-60th, then two Dragoons, between whom stalked Cetewayo, very upright and dignified, glancing keenly from side to side, but expressing neither astonishment nor fear at his novel and humiliating position; indeed, the constant expression of his face seems one of quiet and kindly repose, and there is certainly nothing cruel or even harsh in the expression of his features. He was wearing a bright-coloured damask table-cloth and the usual head-ring worn by all married Zulus. Directly following him came another dragoon, then some of the Native Contingent, followed by some 60th men. He was conducted straight to a tent, which he occupied by himself, while the women and men occupied respectively two others. Orders having been previously given that an escort was to be ready at two p.m. to accompany the King to Pietermaritzburg, Cetewayo, having had some food and a rest, undisturbed, was placed, together with the four women, in one of the ambulances with Umkosana, who rode on the hind seat, while his followers were placed on another mule-waggon, which came immediately behind the ambulance. It must have been a pretty tight squeeze, as the women, like their liege, were decidedly not of a slender make. However, Cetewayo took his seat very quietly, and at ten minutes past two the party started, under the command of Captain Poole, R.A., staff officer; the escort consisting of twenty men of the Natal Horse and twenty of Lonsdale's, under Captain de Burgh, of the Natal Horse. They had, however, proceeded no further than Fort Victoria—about ten miles from Ulundi—when an officer overtook them with orders to proceed as quickly as possible to Port Durnford, where the Natal would be in readiness to convey Cetewayo to Capetown."

We are indebted to Commander Crawford Caffin, R.N., for a sketch of the embarking of Cetewayo and his party, on Sept. 4, at Port Durnford, on the seacoast of Zululand. The prisoners were brought down to the seashore in a waggon drawn by ten mules, escorted by a squadron of Bettington's Horse, all in charge of Captain Ruscombe Poole, R.A. A company of the 91st Regiment was drawn up on the spot, forming line opposite to the escort, below the signal station, which had its flag flying. The waggon stood in the square between the two lines of military, with the beach at the third side, and with a surf-boat, under Commander Caffin's orders, ready to receive the distinguished voyagers. They got out of the waggon, the King, the four women and one girl, the Induna or Councillor of State, and three men-servants. It was two o'clock in the afternoon. They were rowed in the surf-boat to H.M.S. Natal, steam-transport, which lay off shore with H.M.S. Forester, gun-boat, and another transport, the Galatea. At five in the afternoon, the Natal sailed for Simon's Bay, with Commander Caffin on board in charge of her; Captain Poole, R.A., being still in charge of the prisoners on board. A sort of tent, constructed of tarpaulins upon a timber framework, had been erected on the poop of the vessel. In this were placed several mattrasses, one for the King, in the centre, others for his wives and the little girl. They all suffered from sea-sickness in the surf-boat, and were apparently much frightened while crossing the surf. A bridge or gangway was let down from the side of the steamer to help them to get on board. The Natal arrived at Simon's Bay, the naval harbour eastward of the Cape promontory, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 9, but was detained there till the next Sunday evening, to await the High Commissioner's warrant for Cetewayo's reception at Capetown. During these few days, Cetewayo recovered his spirits, which had been somewhat depressed on the voyage; he had again suffered from sea-sickness, one rough night at sea, and had felt considerable alarm when out of sight of land. Captain Poole and Mr. Longcast, the experienced interpreter from the Natal frontier of Zululand, did all they could to please and amuse him. He took to catching fish by lines cast over the ship's side in Simon's Bay, which incident is shown in our front-page Engraving, from a Sketch by Mr. W. Schröder. The other person shown in this sketch was Captain (now Major) Poole, R.A., who took care of Cetewayo. The Commodore sent him a suit of clothes, tweed coat, waistcoat, and trousers, with an ordinary black hat. These he was glad to put on, understanding that such apparel was necessary for him to make a respectable figure among Europeans. He asked for a box to keep his clothes in, and was supplied with a metal travelling trunk, in which he laid them up neatly folded at night; he also got a hat-brush and clothes-brush. The red and green table-cloth was worn as a shawl. The women were supplied with shirts, but were not always so particular about wearing them. The King made a very tolerable figure in his English dress; he is a tall, big man, nearly six feet in height, and extremely stout, measuring about sixty inches round the chest, but not unwieldy; his thighs are very large and his knees swollen, from a disease of long standing. He is fifty-four years of age, but looks not above forty, the hair of his head being only a little grizzled. His hair at top is moulded into the stiff ring, which all married men wear among the Zulus. He has a round face, the expression of which is good natured, humorous, and smiling; he has a slight moustache, but not much beard. His colour is a light ashy brown, not like that of a negro. The wives are lively young women, about twenty years of age, one of them rather handsome; the daughter is a girl of fourteen. The chief or induna, Umkosana, in whose kraal the Zulu King was taken, and who has voluntarily shared his captivity, is a finely-grown man, above six feet tall, well shaped and muscular. Cetewayo accepted cigarettes and a pipe, and was fond of smoking with Captain Poole. He was taken on board H.M.S. Boadicea, where he saw the seamen and marines at their drill, and the great guns, to his evident admiration. "I am a child," he said, "I was only born yesterday; I know nothing." His behaviour, in general, was sociable and agreeable. The only dispute he had with Captain Poole was upon the demand he first made to have an ox killed and roasted every day for his dinner, which is the customary etiquette in the Zulu Royal household; but it was soon explained to him that this would not do in an English kitchen. He did not like the company of civilians, perhaps associating them with Sir T. Shepstone and Mr. Dunn, whom he now regards as his enemies; but officers, naval or military, he was always inclined to meet. No person was allowed to come near him without special permission. He consented to let his photograph be taken in several postures, though he seemed to fear that there was some baneful art-magic in the use of the lens and camera; a sketch of him was also drawn while at Simon's Bay. The portraits of the women likewise were taken.

On Monday morning, the 15th ult., the two vessels Natal and Forester having come round from Simon's Bay to Table Bay, Cetewayo and his party were landed in the Capetown Docks. They were handed ashore by Commander Caffin; our Illustration, from one of the sketches by Mr. Schröder, of Capetown, gives a view of this interesting scene. The landing was effected early in the morning, so as to save the prisoner from the intrusion of a crowd; but even at that time large numbers assembled eager to get a sight of the Zulu monarch. Accompanied by Captain Poole, the King stepped ashore dressed in European clothing, followed by four women, one little girl, and four followers. Lieutenant Shepherd, 4th King's Own, had the party conveyed in carriages, escorted by a troop of Lancers under Lieutenant Moreland, through the city to the Castle gate, where they were received by Colonel Hassard, C.B., Royal Engineers, Commandant of the Forces. Here they were at once taken to the rooms fitted up for their use, which open on to the ramparts of the castle, where the King can have daily exercise.

At noon of the same day the ex-King was visited by Sir Bartle Frere, attended by the Hon. Mr. Littleton, his private secretary; Captain Hallam Parr, military secretary; and Lieutenant Dalrymple, A.D.C. Later in the day the Premier, Mr. Gordon Sprigg, and Mr. Miller, Treasurer-General, visited the Royal captive's quarters to see if the arrangements for his accommodation were satisfactory. During the course of the Premier's interview Cetewayo, through Mr. Longeast, the interpreter, talked with apparent frankness of many incidents of the war. In the accounts his people had given him it seems they greatly exaggerated the English losses and magnified the Zulu successes in all the engagements which occurred. He acknowledged, however, he had done wrong in allowing his people to fight with us. "Chaka," he said, "was a child of the British Government. I was also a child and subject. My father, the Government, came to chastise me for my wrong-doing. I caught the stick with which he wished to beat me, and broke it. I did wrong to fight with him, and am punished. I am no longer a King; but the English, I find, are a great people; they do not kill those who have fought with them. I am satisfied to be in their hands. I hope the great Queen will pardon me, and allow me to return to my country, and give me a place to build myself a kraal where I may live. I am sorry I did not follow the advice of my father, Panda, on his death-bed; he told me to live at peace with the English and never make war with them." When informed it was the wish of our Government to treat him with every consideration and supply him with all necessary comforts, he expressed his thanks, and asked that some of his favourite wives, naming ten, might be sent for to be with him, in addition to those already here. His mind was anxious about them, he said, for they had nobody to look after them now, and he felt lonely without their companionship. He further begged that his case might be put before the great Queen in as favourable a light as possible, and asked how many days it would take to send a message and receive a reply from England. He was told that two months might elapse before her Majesty's pleasure regarding him could be known. He again thanked the Premier for visiting him and the interest he had shown regarding him, and said, after what he had heard, he would sleep happier than he had hitherto done.

The so-called Castle, erected by the Dutch about 1667, is a pentagonal fort; and we give a view of his ex-Majesty's present quarters, adjoining those of Colonel Hassard. The house on the left-hand side is the lodging of Cetewayo. We have also received a sketch of the castle gate, and a photograph of the exterior, taken by Messrs. Bernard, of Adderly-street, Cape Town. It gives a view of the ramparts, where Cetewayo may enjoy the sea breeze from Table Bay, and contemplate the busy and picturesque streets of Cape Town.

It will be for her Majesty's Government here to determine what shall be done with this remarkable State prisoner. He cannot be permitted to return to Zululand. That country has now by right of conquest fallen under the charge of the British authorities, who are responsible for its peaceable settlement, and it is their duty to exclude a person whose further presence there might encourage some future disturbances. But there is no law of nations by which the deposed Zulu King, who was neither a subject nor a vassal of our Government, could be indicted as a criminal; and there is no evidence, so far as we have been informed, that would convict him of any crime. The Bishop of Natal, in a long epistle dated Aug. 31, pleading the cause of Cetewayo as earnestly as he did that of Langalibalele in 1874, precisely sets forth a long series of instances, before and since the outbreak of the late war, to prove that Cetewayo was extremely anxious for peace; that he voluntarily forbore to invade Natal after the British defeat at Isandhlwana, and that he repeatedly sent pacific messages, while preparing to comply, so far as he could, with the British demands. These representations will, no doubt, have their due weight in the counsels of her Majesty's Ministers, and they will not be disposed to order a harsh or vindictive treatment of the fallen South African monarch, whose fate is watched in England with no slight degree of interest.

Captain Arthur Elibank Havelock (late president of the Island of Nevis) has been appointed Chief Civil Commissioner for the Seychelles Islands. The Victoria Cross has been conferred upon Captain (now Commandant) Cecil D'Arcy and Sergeant Edmund O'Toole, of the Frontier Light Horse, for acts of valour before Ulundi. Mr. Thomas Thompson, formerly of Cyprus, has been appointed her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Delagoa Bay. This gentleman was instrumental in rendering the colony of Natal good service, having succeeded in inducing the King of Amatonga to refuse Cetewayo a loophole of escape through his territory, or even the opportunity of finding temporary refuge there.

FRANCE.

M. Jules Grévy on Tuesday presented the Cardinal's birretta to Monsignor Meglia, the late Papal Nuncio at Paris, with the usual ceremony, at the Elysée Palace. The new Cardinal expressed his firm conviction that this solemn act would prove a public testimony to the union and excellent relations existing between the Holy See and the Government of the Republic.

Two declarations prolonging the Treaties of Commerce between England and France were signed yesterday week at Paris by M. Waddington and by Mr. Adams, in the absence of Lord Lyons.

The Academy has decided that the reception of M. Henri Martin, the successor of M. Thiers, shall take place on Nov. 13, and that of M. Taine, the successor of M. de Lomenie, on Dec. 18.

After the hundredth performance of "Notre Dame de Paris" at the Théâtre des Nations on Tuesday, a banquet was given at the Grand Hotel by the author of the romance from which the play has been adapted. M. Victor Hugo had invited the whole company that had just acted, and many representatives of the Paris press, and altogether over a hundred persons sat down to supper. M. Victor Hugo spoke a few words thanking his guests. He declared that literature made nations great. By Homer and Æschylus Athens existed; by Tacitus and Juvenal Rome held sway; by Rabelais, Molière, and Voltaire France ruled. All Italy might be expressed by one word—Dante; the whole of England by Shakspeare. He drank to French Literature, and he wished its influence might be felt away from religious discussions and political hatred.

The election on Sunday of a member to represent the ward of Javel in the Municipal Council of Paris resulted in the return of M. Humbert, an amnestied Communist, who was in 1871 a leader-writer for the Père Duchêne, and who has just arrived in France from New Caledonia. He polled 684 votes against 610 given to M. Depasse, who was in favour of a plenary amnesty, but supported it as an act of clemency, while M. Humbert demanded it as a right. Upwards of 630 electors in the ward abstained from voting. The Government have instituted a prosecution against M. Humbert and the Marseillaise for vilifying the tribunals and justifying acts declared crimes by the law.

Throughout the discussion no expression was used hostile to the Government. The first signature appended to the programme is that of Cardinal Kutschker.

The President of the Upper House, M. Liebe, called for cheers for the King, which were taken up with more than usual heartiness.

Reinforcements are going forward under General Crook, who will soon have 1500 men at the scene of operations. General Merritt, with reinforcements, has arrived at the White River Agency. The buildings had been burned by the Indians, and the bodies of the Agent and twelve of his employés were found in the ruins. The whereabouts of the women and children whose lives were spared is at present unknown. The Indians, numbering 600, are retreating in a southerly direction, and they are expected either to disperse or surrender, as the Southern Utes are believed to be disinclined to join them.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Did I possess such an article as an alarum clock I should not last week have disappointed the readers of the "Echoes" by omitting to furnish my weekly supply of gossip. But the case was this: I write the "Echoes" on Wednesday. Last Tuesday, the seventh October, I had an exceptionally hard day's work to do, and went to bed at midnight, leaving strict written injunctions that I was to be called at six on the following morning. It is the cook who calls me, and she herself is punctually called by a white Pomeranian dog of mine. Who calls Bismarck (the Pomeranian in question) I do not know. Conscience, perhaps. At the appointed hour on Wednesday the cook faithfully hammered at my door. It was the old, old story. The hammering at once led me to dream that I was living next door to a cooper or an undertaker, or that I was assisting at a sale by auction at Christie's. At all events, I slept very comfortably until a quarter past eight, when I awoke, in horror and remorse, and with the grim consciousness that it was now physically impossible to write the "Echoes."

Why? The whole day was before me. Aye; but at ten minutes past ten a.m. I was bound to catch the express from Euston to Liverpool. I did catch it; and I thought, as I gloomily took my ticket at the booking-office, how I should "catch" it next week from my readers in this Journal. I reached the City of the Mersey at three fifteen p.m.; drove in a hansom (the Liverpudlian hansoms are excellently well-appointed vehicles) to the Adelphi Hotel; dressed; went to a public dinner; made a speech; attended a conversazione; looked in at the Amphitheatre to see an act of "Forget me not," with Miss Geneviève Ward in the principal character; and "caught" the ten forty p.m. up train for London, arriving at St. Pancras at five o'clock in the morning. But I was too late for the "Echoes." They had haunted me all day and all night. There was a vacant chair on my left at the public dinner. The chair should have been occupied by a distinguished F.S.A.; but it was filled instead by Banquo, otherwise the "Echoes;" and when, in the confusion of guiltiness, I stammered "thou canst not say I did it," the inky phantom replied, "You certainly have not done them this week, and more shame to you." An Irish Echo, perchance.

I really am sincerely sorry for my sin of omission; but the truth is that I was bound on Wednesday se'nnight to fulfil a long-standing engagement to attend a banquet given at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in honour of Mr. Picton, a venerable gentleman, who must be close upon eighty years of age, and who, his long, blameless, and useful life through, has devoted his time and his talents to the intellectual and artistic advancement of Liverpool. A new reading-room, emulating in size, splendour, and commodiousness the golden dome in Great Russell-street, was formally opened in connection with the Liverpool Free Library on the morning of the 8th, and will be henceforth known as the "Picton" Reading-Room. Add to this the library built by Sir William Brown and the art-gallery erected by the munificence of Sir Andrew Walker, and Liverpool may boast herself the proud possessor of an institute, structurally as well as morally linked together, such as few English cities can equal, and which none can surpass.

There were eight hundred ladies and gentlemen at the Picton Banquet, and St. George's Hall presented a superb spectacle. The Earl of Derby was in the chair, and the speeches which he was called to make were all marked by his wonted sagacity and luminous common-sense. I very rarely touch upon politics in this column, for the reason that I am a violent partisan, and this is not a place wherein it would be decorous to show violence of partisanship; still I venture to hope that I may, without impropriety, touch on a single expression dropped by Lord Derby, and which very forcibly struck me. His Lordship, in the course of one of his addresses, remarked that his present attitude with regard to politics was one of "temporary neutrality." I should say that Conservatives as well as Liberals would rejoice if Lord Derby made his "temporary neutrality" as brief as ever it were possible to make it. He is eminently a clear-headed statesman; and the amount of sheer stupidity sitting just now in the high places is something positively appalling. The blockheads make you "stand prostrate with astonishment," as Lord Castlereagh said; and the Cleverest Statesman in England is waxing old and feeble.

Talking of public dinners, as I was looking this morning at Punch, and laughing over one of the merriest and gracefullest drawings that ever came from Mr. George Du Maurier's facile pencil, my mind went straight back to a grand banquet given by poor Alexis Soyer, the chef at Gore House, Kensington, then known as "Soyer's Symposium" (it has been long since demolished, and The Albert Hall stands on its site) in the Great Exhibition year, 1851. After dinner Soyer made a speech, which I had the honour (I was his secretary, art-adviser, and all kind of things) of putting into English for him. Turning to the printed report of this oration, I came upon the following passage—

> Allow me to thank you for your kindness and intreat you to believe that to whatever length Providence may extend my span of life this day will always be engraven on my heart and its remembrance will always prompt me to fresh endeavours and stimulate me to greater perseverance in what I may term a great social reform movement—the amelioration of the gastronomic art, and the establishment of a National School of Scientific and Economic Domestic Cookery. To accomplish this has always been the dearest wish of my heart; for such an accomplishment would render the true principles of cookery applicable and beneficial to all classes of the community—would render them as acceptable to the peer as to the peasant, and as welcome in the palace as in the cottage. I may add that it is my intention when the Symposium is firmly established, and its resources fully developed, to establish within its walls a model school of cookery for the purposes to which I have alluded.

Poor Soyer's dream was never realised; but it strikes me that to him really belongs the credit which has since been claimed by others in the matter of suggesting a National School of Cookery. Of the Training School of Cookery now established at South Kensington, and of the culinary Koran as propounded by Mr. Buckmaster, I am not by any means an enthusiastic admirer. Still, the school is young, and may turn out practical some of these days. Meanwhile go and look at Mr. Du Maurier's merrily-wise picture in Punch. "The School-Room as it Ought to Be." M. le Professeur Bouillabaisse has just arrived, say, at Mrs. Sheepshank's establishment to give the young ladies, little and big, a lesson in practical cookery. Herr Klein, the music master, departs in disgust. The girls are to be taught how to make "soupe à l'oignon," "omelette aux fines herbes," "raie au beurre noir," "œufs à la neige," and other pretty tiny kickshaws.

The wisdom of the drawing consists (to my mind) in this. Cookery is an essentially domestic art; and it is wellnigh impossible to teach it practically at "centres" or in lecture-rooms. An intelligent young woman can learn to become an excellent cook if she can afford to pay a premium as an "improver" to a chef at a first-rate club, because, with the exception of sleeping out, she is in the kitchen early and late, and makes the club virtually her home. A well-conducted boarding-school for young ladies is also a home, and often a very comfortable and refined one. Why should not a model kitchen be one of the recognised class-rooms in the establishment? Let Professor Bouillabaisse give his practical lesson once or twice a week; but during certain hours on every day in the week let his fair pupils exercise themselves in making soups, entrées, pastry, and so forth, the dishes prepared by them being served at their own meals. It is all very well to extol the virtues of "plain" cookery, oatmeal porridge, stewed lentils, and the like. "Plain" cookery is only another name for Savage cookery; and an unbroken continuity of farinaceous and pulse diet means a whole category of skin diseases. Vegetarianism is quite another thing (as a change after a meat diet it is most beneficial); but the Vegetarian cookery-books are full of the nicest imaginable entrées. Girls ought to be taught how to cook appetising and elaborate entrées. They are the art-needlework of cookery. When cleverly arranged entrées come in at the door matrimonial jars fly out at the window. Cold mutton is cruelty, and ought to be taken cognisance of in Sir James Hannen's court.

I was at Brighton last Saturday for a few hours, returning to town the same evening, and I was enabled to avail myself of a valuable boon which the authorities of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway have just bestowed on the travelling public. Hitherto the two nocturnal up-trains have been one at eight forty and another at ten thirty-five p.m. Now, the first of these trains to town was usually found to start too early. It barely gave you time to smoke a cigar, or to look in at the Promenade Concert at the Aquarium, after you had dined at the Old Ship or at Reichardt's. The last train at ten thirty-five, which did not arrive at London Bridge until five minutes past midnight, was as unanimously voted too late. Now, last Saturday the Company ran the first of a series of Saturday trains, leaving Brighton at nine fifty-five p.m., and landing you at Victoria at eleven fifteen, in time to go to your club, in time to fetch Mrs. Benedick from the play or an evening party, in time to do a hundred social things to which the fatal stroke of midnight puts a bar. A Pullman car is attached to this capitally-timed nine fifty-five train from Brighton, which is virtually an express.

POLITICAL.

The Home Secretary has in his turn had to defend the Ministry. On Saturday, Mr. Cross opened a new Conservative Club at Leigh; and the vivacity of the interruptions the right hon. gentleman met with at the afternoon meeting in Matherlane Mill may be accepted as a sign that party feeling will run high in Lancashire at the next General Election, which the Home Secretary, however, did not think "is likely to take place just at present." Cheers greeted Mr. Cross on his arrival, and encouraged him during his speech; but loud cries of "Gladstone" and "Bright" were also raised; and when the right hon. gentleman, after referring with regret to the prevailing depression, pointed to "cheaper food, cheaper clothing, and cheaper fuel" as the bright side of the picture, a voice was heard to answer, "And 25 per cent lower wages!" The Home Secretary had not sufficient linguistic dexterity to parry this home-thrust effectively. Touching on the Afghan question, Mr. Cross deplored the loss of the Cabul Mission, but said the Government had no desire to meddle with the internal affairs of Afghanistan, the Ministry's one desire being to insure that "the English Government shall rule and predominate so far as the foreign policy of Afghanistan is concerned." No one abhorred the bad government of Turkey more than Mr. Cross did; no one could be more anxious to see reforms carried out by the Porte. Taking up the domestic legislation of the Administration, Mr. Cross stoutly defended his Act for the provision of new abodes for the poor, and declared that "dwellings have been erected in London at a cost of more than a million sterling, while more than a million and a quarter has been expended in Birmingham, and a million more throughout the rest of the country." The Home Secretary can, at least, claim the merit of being audible, which was more than could be said of the speech of Colonel Blackburne, M.P. Mr. Cross reserved his principal address for the inevitable banquet in the new club. He alluded then to Sir William Harcourt's speeches; but, it is needless to add, the Home Secretary made no pretension to answer the racy rhetoric and pungent arguments of the hon. and learned member for Oxford. It was in the plainest of prose that Mr. Cross maintained that neither Mr. Gladstone nor the Marquis of Hartington, neither Mr. Grant-Duff nor Sir W. Harcourt, had good grounds for attacking the Ministry, and recounted the familiar argument that the Eastern policy of the Government kept the Russians from Constantinople, and saved England from going to war. As for the Berlin Treaty, that was a satisfactory revision of the Treaty of San Stefano. To Russian intrigue was England's interference in Afghanistan attributed. Finally, Mr. Cross argued that the present Administration was infinitely to be preferred to a Liberal Ministry, which would be ruled by Mr. Chamberlain and the tail of the Radical Party. To which the Home Secretary said ditto on Tuesday at a large Conservative meeting in the Clitheroe Townhall when responding to a resolution of confidence in the Government.

Manchester is all agog to know what the Marquis of Salisbury will say at the close of the week at the series of Conservative demonstrations in the Free Trade Hall and at the Pomona Gardens.

The Liberal chiefs are, meanwhile, in active training. Mr. Bright has been girding up his loins as the guest of the Earl of Aberdeen. Mr. Gladstone, who on Tuesday reached Paris on his homeward journey from Venice, is said to be in excellent health, and well fit for his electioneering campaign in Midlothian. Of the minor luminaries of the Opposition, Mr. Hibbert shone with accustomed steadiness at the Chadderton Working Men's Liberal Association on Saturday, but may be said to have glared forth for a moment when he supported a resolution declaring our foreign policy to be "dishonouring and disastrous;" Sir Wilfrid Lawson glittered on Monday at the East Cumberland Liberal Association, giving "organisation" as the Liberal watchword; and on Tuesday those irreconcilable Radicals, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., Dr. Cameron, M.P., and Mr. Anderson, M.P., with Mr. Tennant, M.P., Mr. Holms, M.P., and Mr. Farley Leith, M.P., delighted a meeting in the Glasgow City Hall with their radiance. The last-named meeting succeeded a Conference of Liberals in the morning, when, at the instigation of Mr. Tennant, it was resolved to "unfurl the old banner of 'Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform.'" There was noticeable in Mr. Chamberlain's speech an effort to compete with Sir William Harcourt in the art of letting off epigrammatic fireworks; but pyrotechny is not Mr. Chamberlain's forte. The junior member for Birmingham was more in his element when he said the time had arrived for continuing the work of Cobden and Bright: free trade in land should succeed free trade in corn.

Mr. Parnell, M.P., will, it is said, visit the United States after his tour in England, and the object of his visit probably will be to canvass for support for the "Irish National Land Movement," an appeal for the furtherance of which has already been addressed to the Irish in America. This is the pith of the address:—

> In formulating a demand for ownership of the soil by the occupiers in substitution for that of the landlords, the people of Ireland neither contemplate nor ask for the confiscation of those proprietorial rights which existing laws must necessarily recognise and protect, but that for the transfer of those rights to an industrial ownership a fair compensation may be given to those who shall be called upon to agree to such transfer for the settlement of the agrarian strife of the country and the supreme good of its people.

Continuing his rent-reduction agitation in Ireland, Mr. Parnell last Sunday repeated at Navan the arguments to which the public has grown accustomed; and the same meeting was addressed in a similar key by Mr. Sullivan, M.P., Mr. O'Connor Power, M.P., and Mr. O'Sullivan, M.P. Meantime, great reductions in rent are being made by various Irish landlords voluntarily; but it is earnestly to be hoped that the heated language of excited speakers may not lead to the necessary employment of the troops, whose movements are daily reported to suppress by force the hostile actions of the peasantry. Ere we leave the Irish land question, it should be mentioned that Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, in addressing his constituents at Reading on the 8th inst., implied that the Government were to be blamed for the existing agitation, inasmuch as nothing had been done to remedy the failure of the Irish Land Act.

Less burning questions have publicly occupied the Prime Minister and a few other members of the Ministry and of the Opposition. The Earl of Beaconsfield and Mr. W. H. Smith, for example, quietly attended the Bucks Quarter Sessions at Aylesbury on Monday and set their faces against the Rev. G. Phillimore's endeavour to oppose the proposed extension of the borough of Chipping Wycombe. The noble Earl and the First Lord of the Admiralty voted in favour of Mr. Cripps's amendment for a magisterial committee to inquire into the question. Mr. W. E. Forster, eschewing foreign politics, gave vent to some wise saws and modern instances in praise of the Edution Act at Bradford on the 10th inst., when he submitted this consolation to groaning ratepayers that, if the school rate in Bradford was 3¾d. in the pound, and in London 4½d. in the pound, the general education rate throughout the country was not higher than 3d.

The butchers' annual festival was held on Tuesday night in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and was attended by about 7000 persons. Under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, a special Common Council meeting was held on Monday to discuss certain irregularities alleged to exist in connection with payments of commissions and gratuities to clerks in the employ of the Corporation. The report of the committee on the subject was read, and a resolution and amendment condemnatory of the practice were proposed, but the Court adjourned without any decision, on the understanding that a copy of the report and evidence be forwarded to Mr. Corrie (late Remembrancer), and that he be asked whether he had any explanation to give respecting the payments said to have been made to his clerks.

There were 2675 births and 1366 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 265, whereas the deaths were 51 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 30·26 in. The mean temperature was 51·5 deg., and 1·0 deg. below the average in the corresponding week of twenty years. The mean showed an excess on the first three days, while it was below the average on each of the last four days of the week.

Mr. Charles Dickens has completed an exhaustive "Dictionary of the Thames," on which he has been at work for some months. The plan of the book embraces—in addition to the usual handbook information, which is treated in the unconventional manner adopted in the "Dictionary of London," and full details as to fishing, rowing, and yachting matters—articles by well-known specialists on the geology, ornithology, botany, art and literature of the river. The business details of the port of London have also received a fair share of attention, and the book, which will be published forthwith, contains no fewer than nineteen maps and plans.

On the subject of the obstruction of 150 of the leading thoroughfares of the metropolis by means of bars and gates maintained by the owners of the local property, a conference of delegates from the vestries and district boards of London took place yesterday week in the St. Pancras Vestry Hall. Special reference was made to the obstructions on the Bedford estate, by which communication with Holborn and the great railway termini on the north side of London is interrupted and diverted. It was finally resolved that a deputation should memorialise the Metropolitan Board of Works to give the subject their urgent consideration.

The memorial-stone of new premises for the Royal General Dispensary was laid on the 9th inst. on the site of the old building, Bartholomew-close, near St. Bartholomew's Hospital, by the Earl of Dartmouth, president, in the presence of the Sheriffs and a large number of spectators. This institution was founded 110 years ago. Since that time local dispensaries have been established in nearly every district of the country. A noteworthy rule, which has with a great degree of success, met two of the difficulties felt by most medical charities, is followed at the General Dispensary. For every supply of medicine twopence is charged, the result being, not only to prevent the patients from feeling pauperised, but also to deter them from wasting the medicine.

We are requested to announce that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings intend to distribute this autumn, among the working classes and the poor inhabitants of London the surplus bedding-out plants in Battersea, Hyde, Regent's, and Victoria Parks, and in the Royal Gardens, Kew, and the Pleasure-Gardens, Hampton Court. If the clergy, school committees, and others interested will make application to the superintendent of the park nearest to their respective parishes, or the director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, or the superintendent of Hampton Court Gardens, in the cases of persons residing in those neighbourhoods, they will receive early intimation of the number of plants that can be allotted to each applicant, and the time and manner of their distribution.

The monthly meeting of the Fellows and members of the Royal Horticultural Society took place on Tuesday at South Kensington. The show was notable for the display of fruit, roses, pot vines, and an exhibition of winter bedding plants. Messrs. Paul and Son had, late as it is, a magnificent collection of roses; and they also took the society's bronze medal for an exhibition of fruit, showing one hundred distinct varieties of apples and pears. The society's gold medal was awarded to Messrs. Lane and Sons for a show of grapes, sixteen varieties, some of the bunches weighing several pounds. A silver medal was awarded to Messrs. Veitch for a collection of nearly 150 varieties of apples and pears. Mr. Goodacre exhibited a fine assortment of black and white grapes, and gained for them the silver medal of the society. A like compliment was paid to Mr. Wildsmith for some clean-grown pines. The great feature of the show, however, was the arrangement of entrance with hardy shrubs by Messrs. Lee and Son. These took the form of the now celebrated carpet bedding.

Mr. St. Barbe, British Resident at Mandalay, reached the Burmese frontier on the 10th inst. A large number of persons have left Mandalay.

At the general annual meeting of the Dutch Geographical Society last Saturday M. Serba Pinto, the African traveller, and Lord Houghton were elected hon. members.

An order has been issued by the Duke of Cambridge expressing his general satisfaction at the result of his recent inspections of the troops quartered at Chatham, Canterbury, Dover, and Shorncliffe; and desiring commanding officers to make this known to the troops under their command.

Final arrangements were made on Tuesday for the sale of the Margate waterworks company's property to the town for £59,000. It was decided that, after apportioning a certain amount to the shareholders, the six directors should receive £2000 and the secretary £1000 as compensation.

The thanks of her Majesty's Government have, according to the Standard, been conveyed to the Government of the United States of America for the assistance rendered to her Majesty's ship Iron Duke by the war-ships Monocy and Palos, when the Iron Duke grounded in the Woosung river.

It is announced in the Gazette that Major Richard James Coombe Marter, 1st Dragoon Guards, has been promoted to the brevet rank of "Lieutenant-Colonel, "in recognition of the service performed by him in having effected the capture of Cetewayo, the Zulu King, in the Ngome Forest." The vacancy in the colonelcy of the 52nd Foot, caused by the death of Field-Marshal Sir William Rowan, has been filled up by the transfer of General Dennis from the 51st Foot. General Dennis is succeeded in the colonelcy of the 51st by General Errington, who is transferred from the 85th Foot, and Lieutenant-General Percy Hill, C.B., has been appointed Colonel of the latter regiment.

Sir George Elliot, M.P. for North Durham, has signified his intention to dedicate a piece of land on his estate, West Cliff, Whitby, to the public, and erect thereon a monument to Captain Cook, the circumnavigator. Captain Cook spent several years of his early life at the fishing village of Staithes, a few miles to the north of the port of Whitby. In later years he sailed from the harbour of Whitby; and it is an historical fact that in undertaking his adventurous voyages round the world he preferred the vessels which were built at Whitby by Whitby men. The site chosen by Sir George Elliot for the erection of a monument to the illustrious circumnavigator is one of the most prominent on the hon. Baronet's estate. It commands an uninterrupted view of the German Ocean, of the coast scenery both north and south, of the romantic abbey ruins on the opposite of the harbour, and of the vale of the Esk.

NEW BOOKS.

A treasure of amusing descriptions and observations by one of the cleverest writers of the day, upon the liveliest topic in the world, fills two volumes of Paris Herself Again (Remington and Co.). Mr G. A. Sala, as most Londoners will remember, was in Paris from July to November of last year, sending to the Daily Telegraph a copious stream of such delightful familiar gossip as he alone can produce, in the present dearth of ready wit for literary small change. He shows as much vivacity of humour as in the freshness of this vein, opened in Household Words a quarter of a century ago. His letters from Paris have now been collected, and have by occasional new touches been fitted to bear the company of 400 illustrations, which are reprinted from several French journals, and many of these, drawn by Cham, Bertall, Pelcoq, and other well-known artists, are highly characteristic original designs. The manners and habits of Parisian social life, both that of French people and that of their foreign visitors, have never been portrayed with a more intense appreciation of their diverting aspect, and seldom, by any English author, with more precise and abundant knowledge. Mr. Sala tells us that he lived in Paris as a schoolboy nearly forty years ago; and he has since constantly watched its various changes, structural and moral or political, with a shrewd perception of their effects in the present, and with a perfect recollection of the past. His memory of all sorts of minute details of external appearance has been surpassed by none of his contemporaries except the late Charles Dickens; and he has not less faculty of rendering such details, as they actually existed, visible to the reader's eye. It need scarcely be remarked that the imaginative powers, the humour and highest qualities of genius possessed by Dickens, are not within this comparison. But Mr. Sala's talents of observation and portraiture, with a humorous relish of all that is odd and queer in the ways of mankind, a predilection for the comparative study of modern city life, and an ingenious curiosity with regard to skilled trades and manufactures, are manifested in his recent work. The Paris International Exhibition of 1878, as well as "Paris herself again" affords a great variety of novel and curious objects to attract Mr. Sala's notice; and he has not spared pains to inquire concerning their technicalities and industrial or commercial statistics, in those instances which might seem likely to be of interest to the general newspaper reader. Articles of ladies' dress and jewellery, decorative furniture, and luxuries of a recherché kind for the table, sauces and preserves and choice wines or liqueurs, obtain particular attention in his passing review of the contents of the Exhibition. But his account of more serious works of art, while free from the pedantry of æsthetic criticism, is guided by sound knowledge The total result is a palatable mixture of grave and gay, the utile with the dulce, and with a spice of pungent satire, or esprit de moquerie, which in Paris, and probably in every other modern capital except London, comes so readily to the man of the world as he contemplates what we nowadays call civilisation. Though not a professed moralist, this experienced observer of men and cities has a vein of sober thoughtfulness underlying his prodigality of quips and cranks and hits of ridicule; and his frequent reflections on the past vicissitudes of public and private life among the Parisians, of which he has been a spectator upon the most exciting occasions, are not without profit. The contents of these two volumes, in short, are for the most part extremely diverting, in which respect they are fitly accompanied by the drawings of several droll French caricaturists. Other chapters present a fair report of the lighter portion of that grand parade of Arts and Manufactures last year, and of the attendant social pomps and pleasures. To read Mr. Sala's book now quietly at home is a tolerable compensation for not having been at Vanity Fair on the Seine a twelvemonth since. This publication is dedicated to Lady Combermere, with a graceful and grateful remembrance of her kindness to the author's mother a great many years ago.

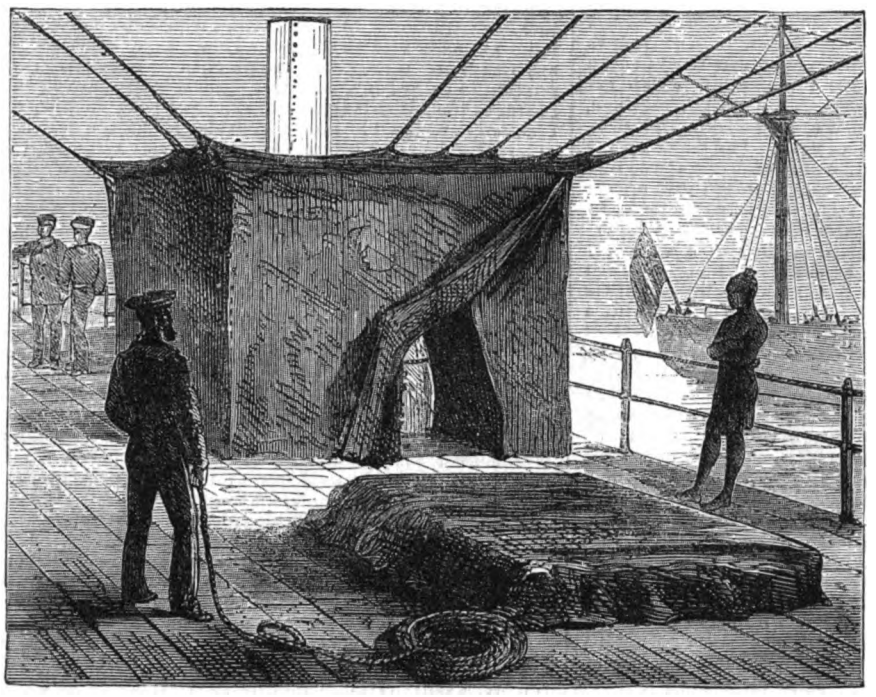
The domestic life of the present estimable Archbishop of Canterbury is well known to have suffered beyond the ordinary measure of family bereavement from premature and unexpected death. It is, however, less on this account than for the sake of a beautiful example of womanly and Christian character, in a lady whose station afforded her great opportunities of social usefulness, that a volume of memoirs has been published with her husband's approval. Catharine and Craufurd Tait is the title of this volume, edited by the Rev. W. Benham, Vicar of Margate, and issued by Messrs. Macmillan, which contains a series of simple and unaffected narrative papers, relating to the Archbishop's wife and son. A biography was hardly required for the latter, who had a brief and uneventful career. The Rev. Craufurd Tait, after his education at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, held a curacy in Kent, became his father's domestic chaplain at Lambeth and Addington, and was just appointed to the district church of St. John's, Notting-hill, when death removed him from among us. He was an amiable, diligent, and dutiful young clergyman, but had not given any sign of powers that would have raised him to high public eminence. His mother, the late Mrs. Tait, who died a few months later, at the age of fifty-nine, was a truly remarkable and admirable example of the English gentlewoman. She will long be remembered by a very large circle of friends, including hundreds of the clergy and their families in the neighbourhood of London, and by those who witnessed or experienced her beneficent activity in various charitable institutions. She was the youngest daughter of the Ven. W. Spooner, Archdeacon of Coventry and Rector of Elmdon, Warwickshire. Married to Dr. Tait in 1843, when he was Head Master of Rugby School, she accompanied him in 1849 to the Deanery of Carlisle, and there, in 1856, endured the severe affliction of losing five sweet little children, all girls, within five or six weeks, by the epidemic of scarlet fever. Mrs. Tait's own narrative of this sorrowful visitation, written a short time afterwards, is one of the most touching and naturally pathetic little histories that were ever printed. We seem to see all her lost darlings, "Chatty" and "Catty," Susan, Frances, and little May, with their one little brother Craufurd, first playing together and delighting their fond parents, but soon rapidly carried off by the fatal disease which attacked them without any previous warning. It is to be hoped that this portion of the volume may at some future time, be republished separately in a cheaper form, and so placed within the reach of the poorest class of wives and mothers all over England, for nothing could be more interesting or more likely to do them good. The Archbishop himself contributes a memoir both of his wife and of his son, which is, as might be expected, just what it ought to be, tenderly quiet and settled in its tone of feeling and style of expression, but full of subdued personal feeling, only chastened by devout and manly resignation to the Divine will. It is a book which is sure to win the heartfelt sympathy of many readers, and which should confirm the faith of those who look to the truths of religion for comfort in the saddest trials of our mortal condition.

Reminiscences of a former very pleasant and instructive book published about a year ago by the same author start up at sight of The Happy Valley, by W. Wakefield, M.D. (Sampson Low and Co.), and excite a desire to fall upon it promptly, especially when a sub-title explains that "the happy valley" is but a fanciful name for "Kashmir and the Kashmiris," a country and people about which and whom the author, to judge from his antecedents, would in all probability have a charming tale to tell. And, undoubtedly, the volume is interesting and useful withal, having map, index, and instructive appendices; handsome too externally, and embellished within with coloured illustrations. It is but a record, however, of a very brief visit; and the supplementary information derived from printed authorities is perhaps in undesirably large proportion to the personally acquired experience. At any rate there seems to be a dearth of those interesting details, relating to private life, which, if memory serve, gave a peculiar charm to the author's former work. Not that, on the present occasion, unpalatable fare is provided; but the fare is of a different, equally beneficial, but more common, sort. Kashmir, or the Vale of Kashmir, the scene of Moore's "Lalla Rookh," is pronounced to be "a theme well worthy of the poet;" for "nowhere in Asia, nor even perhaps in the remaining quarters of the globe, can the parallel be found of such an earthly paradise." And, indeed, there is a good deal of what may be called "introduction" before we find our author and his wife fairly started. They took with them, it is pleasing to know, the incomparable Esau, "whose name will be familiar to those who have read 'Our Life and Travels in India,' and who on this trip took the general direction of affairs." Esau, it may be mentioned for the satisfaction of any curious bodies who did not read the former work, is the name of a "native," an invaluable servant, whose love was not reciprocated by a certain English maid, with a preference for the European complexion and a red coat. Kashmir appears to be a rare place for fleas and mosquitoes; but there are places in Europe which might confidently be matched against it without going many miles from Marseilles, if you only choose your time and abode. In snakes Kashmir has the advantage, or disadvantage, of both Iceland and Ireland; for "snakes indeed are not unknown in the Valley," and "there is a very poisonous reptile found on rocky places on the eastern side of the Valley, about a yard long, with a very thick body, and an appearance altogether repulsive;" but, as a general rule, one of the great charms of the country is that you "can grope about amidst fallen trees, leaves, and rocks" without "coming upon a cobra or some other lively snake," a chance which always "accompanies any such acts in India." No subject of Queen Victoria can be ignorant of the fact that shawls come from Kashmir; but in this book there is something else to be learned about them and their manufacture. Indeed, the number of subjects upon which the author affords information, from invasions of India by way of Kashmir to games of polo, may be set down as legion; and the information may be very agreeably acquired at no great expenditure of time.

AGRICULTURE.

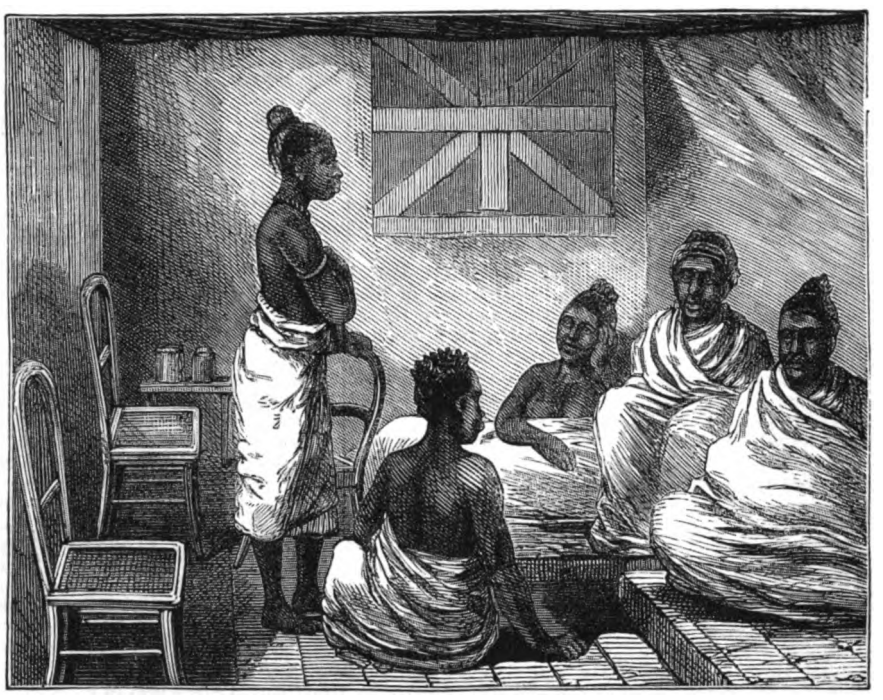
The Duke of Devonshire has informed his tenants in Derbyshire that, on account of the adverse circumstances of the present season, he has thought it right to assist them to contend with the difficulties of the times, and adds that he has decided to return 10 per cent of the rent payable at the next audit; the sister of Mr. Arthur Court Moore, M.P. for Clonmel, has made a reduction of 20 per cent in the rents of the tenants of Ballycohey, near Tipperary; the Berwick Town Council has agreed to grant a reduction of 10 per cent in the rents of the tenants who farm their lands, deciding also that the tenants should be allowed time to get some of this year's crops threshed in order to enable them to pay their rents; the Earl of Ellesmere, at his Brackley rent audit on Tuesday, allowed his Northamptonshire tenants a reduction of 20 per cent on their rents; Mrs. Bacon has reduced her rents on the Rich Hill estate, Portadown, 10 per cent; and Mr. Atkinson, son of the late Mr. Charles Atkinson, of Dublin, has proposed to reduce his rents 15 per cent.

The annual meeting of the Royal South Bucks Agricultural Association was held last week. The Prince Consort's Prize, a silver cup, valued at twenty guineas, was awarded to Messrs. H. S. and G. Cantrell, for the best root crops; Mr. G. Botham, of Wexham and Stoke, taking the ten-guinea silver goblet, given by Mr. N. G. Lambert, M.P., as a second prize in the same class. The Duke of Buccleuch, of Hams Farm, Ditton, won a silver cup, value £5, presented by Sir C. J. Palmer, for the best five acres of swedes; Mr. B. Slocock, of Upton Court Farm, being awarded a similar prize for the best five acres of turnips. Mr. J. Rayner, of Colnbrook, took the five-guinea prize for the best five acres of mangold wurtzel; other prizes, given by Messrs. Sutton and Sons and Messrs. Carter and Co., being won by Messrs. Cantrell, Rayner, King, Nash, Pullen, and Hales.



The Duke of Manchester, speaking at Huntingdon Quarter Sessions last Monday on the question of a new basis for the county rate, said he was of opinion that the present system of assessment was wrong. It should be levied on incomes, and not on the real property of counties. It pressed extremely hard upon the agricultural interest; he might say unjustly so. The principle should be entirely altered. It was a matter for the Legislature to deal with.

There was a great exodus of farmers on the 9th inst., when the steamer Teutonia, of the Dominion Line, left Liverpool, with 267 farmers and their families, bound for Texas. The party has been collected by Dr. Kingsbury, emigration agent for Texas, and have either bought or rented land on the lines of the Galveston, Harrisburg, and San Antonio Railway. Some of the party had previously been out to Texas upon a tour of inspection, and had returned home to report to their friends upon prospects in that country. Amongst the emigrants were several women whose husbands had preceded them some months before. The majority of the farmers have been drawn from Durham and Yorkshire; the rest being made up from Lancashire, Cumberland, Lincolnshire, Gloucestershire, and other places.



Sir Massey Lopes, speaking on Wednesday at a gathering of Devonshire farmers at Kingsbridge, said he would sum up the causes of the agricultural depression in four words, "bad seasons, foreign competition." Respecting the latter, he was in favour of reciprocity to this extent, that when any country sent a commodity to us they should take some commodity from us without putting on prohibitory tariffs, and this remark was especially applicable to our colonies. If the English farmers could not get reciprocity he should, however, press for equality. The foreigner had a better soil, better climate, less rent, and no taxes, and therefore the agriculturist in this country should be allowed a chance of competing with his formidable rival, by being granted a further remission of local taxation. Elementary education was one cause of this burden of taxation, because it was being carried too far.

Dr. Herbert Tibbits writes to the Times from 30, New Cavendish-street, that, having advertised in that paper for "a gentlewoman as lady housekeeper," and offered "a liberal honorarium and a comfortable home," he received more than 1100 answers.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Quality was by no means as well represented as usual in the Middle Park Plate this year. Certainly no fully penalised animal has ever yet won; indeed, Achievement, Sunshine, and Couronne de Fer are the only ones that have ever struggled into a place under the fatal 7 lb. extra. Still we should have liked to have seen Bend Or and Océanie, the acknowledged cracks of the year, essaying the hitherto unaccomplished feat, while Robert the Devil could ill be spared, and Mask might have run well. As it was, the eighteen, with the exception of Beaudesert, Grace Cup, and Brother to Ersilia, were a very mixed lot, for Evasion was wonderfully lucky to win the Champagne Stakes, Glen Ronald is a musician, and Prestonpans, though a rare stayer, is scarcely in the first class. In the face of his wretched display at Doncaster, it was curious that people were glad to take something under 7 to 4 about Beaudesert before the fall of the flag, yet they proved quite right, for he and Grace Cup had the race to themselves a long way from home; and as the filly, who, we fear, is not quite sound in her wind, tired to nothing in the last few strides, Lord Anglesey's horse won very cleverly by half a length, and enabled Fordham to score his first Middle Park Plate. Beaudesert, who is by Sterling—Seagull, cost 1600 guineas as a yearling, and, since his victory, has been sold to Sir Frederick Johnstone and Lord Alington for £7000, at which price he is by no means dear, as the opposition to him in the Two Thousand is very weak, Mask and Brother to Ersilia being about the best of those engaged. The latter, by-the-way, ran more than respectably in the Middle Park, as he gave weight to everything in the race, and was placed fourth. In the Select Stakes, Discord, in receipt of 5 lb from Rayon d'Or, was only beaten a head; but, though the finish appeared a very severe one, we cannot help thinking that Goater must have had something in hand; however, if Rayon d'Or was really ridden right out, the Cambridgeshire should be a very good thing for Discord.

The card for the Thursday, which two or three years ago was quite an "off" day, contained two or three very interesting items. In the Maiden Plate Mr. Sandford introduced us to Mirth, a two-year-old filly with a genuine Yankee pedigree, who came out with a high reputation, which she confirmed by beating a dozen opponents in a canter. Now that Wheel of Fortune has, unhappily, run her last race, the three-year-old fillies of the present season are a miserable lot, and Whirlwind had no trouble in disposing of Adventure and six others and placing the Newmarket Oaks to the credit of Lord Falmouth, who was fortunate in finding a capable substitute for his One Thousand and Oaks winner. The close race that Discord had made with Rayon d'Or on the previous day ensured a strong opposition to the St Leger winner in the Champion Stakes, and his seven opponents included Exeter, Lansdown, and Palmbearer, among those of his own age, while Placida, Belphœbe, and Lord Clive represented the older division. Under these circumstances, slight odds could always be obtained against the French colt; but his gallop of the previous day seemed to have worked wonders for him, and he came sailing home alone, Placida beating all the rest, though a mile and a quarter is a little further than she can travel comfortably. The Autumn Handicap was an exact repetition of the Great Eastern Handicap, as far as the first and second—Lucetta (7 st. 2 lb.) and Typhoon (7 st. 8 lb.)—were concerned, and a 10 lb. pull in the weights did not enable Typhoon to change positions with Prince Soltykoff's filly. Praxidice, an own sister to Placida, had a very easy task in the Bretby Stakes.

Taken as a whole, the programme on the last day was about the strongest of the week, and a very large company remained to the close. Since his entire stud were advertised for sale Lord Anglesey has done nothing but win races; and proceedings commenced by Early Morn (8 st. 7 lb.) securing a Juvenile Handicap over the Rous Course from a strong field, which included good winners like Geraldine (8 st. 6 lb.)—whose defeat of Brother to Ersilia must have been a fluke—and Valentino (9 st.). Chippendale had five opponents in the Amalgamated Queen's Plate of 300 gs., which has proved such a success, and the style in which he cut down Bay Archer and Jannette thoroughly confirmed his Cesarewitch victory. The Great Challenge Stakes, over the Bretby Stakes Course, was generally regarded as a good thing for Phénix; but at the last moment the stable determined not to run him, but to pull out Rayon d'Or for the third time during the week. He met Lollypop at level weights, each carrying 9 st., and the latter was naturally made a very strong favourite, the field only having a slight call of him. The Duke of Hamilton's horse got off well and made all the running until Rayon d'Or caught him in the dip, and, holding him safe for the rest of the way, won cleverly by half a length. Comparatively little has been said of this performance; but, to our mind, it is one of the very best that has been accomplished in the history of the turf. It almost passes belief that a three-year-old, who has been hard at work since the beginning of the year without the least rest, who has been trained exclusively for long races, and who had run five times within about sixteen days, should beat the crack T.Y.C. horse of the season, a six-year-old, at his own game. Then look at the names, ages, and weights of those that could not get near the pair—Placida, 5 years, 8 st 11 lb; Discord, 3 years, 8 st. 7 lb.; Clementine, 4 years, 8 st. 11 lb.; and Parole, 6 years, 9 st.! No amount of victories will ever make the French crack any approach to a good-looking horse; but he must be made of cast-iron, and his marvellous performance in the Great Challenge Stakes convinces us more than ever that a race horse is never so good as towards the close of his third year. Despite his very moderate display in the Middle Park Plate, Poulet started favourite for the Prendergast Stakes; but though he managed to reverse positions with his stable companion, Dora, the pair easily succumbed to Strathardle. So much was thought of the form of the placed horses in the Cesarewitch, that in the face of an opposition which included Lancastrian, Zut, and Ruperra, odds of 2 to 1 were freely laid on Westbourne, and though he swerved a little towards the finish, his backers had no real anxiety at any part of the race. Since then he has been scratched for the Cambridgeshire, and if Falmouth or Harbinger are really better at the weights, the Isonomy coup may be repeated.

Coursing men have hardly settled down to their work as yet, owing to the amount of corn that is still out, but there was some fine sport at Wigtownshire (Stranraer) Meeting last week, where the Earl of Haddington won the Culhorn Cup with Honeywood, by Cavalier—Humming Bird, who performed brilliantly throughout; and his Lordship also divided the Castle Kennedy Stakes, by the aid of Herminia, a very useful puppy by Fugitive—Honeydew. The other divider, Mr. Jardine's Fleur de Lis, by Enterprise—Black Lily, is also a very useful greyhound. Mr. Hedley judged as well as ever, and Wilkinson could not have slipped better.

Mr. H. L. Cortis and John Keen, who may be regarded as the best exponents of bicycling, among amateurs and professionals respectively, rode a twenty-mile race at the Molineux Grounds, Wolverhampton, on Monday last. The amateur led all the way, and won a good race by two yards, in 1h. 4 min. 42 4-5th sec. This (Saturday) afternoon they will ride a one-mile and a five-mile race at Stamford-bridge Grounds, Chelsea, and the winner of two out of the three events is to receive a silver cup of the value of £25.

THE DAIRY SHOW.

The fourth annual show of the British Dairy Farmers' Association has been held this week at the Agricultural Hall, and, whether as regards the number or quality of the articles shown, it is the best which has yet been got together. For all practical purposes the show may be divided into two categories—the live stock and the dairy produce and utensils; for though there is a very large exhibition of goats and of poultry they can only be described as indirectly connected with the dairy. The live stock proper is represented by sixteen classes, with 247 entries for Shorthorns, Jersey, Guernsey, Ayshire, Kerry, and other breeds, and the exhibitors comprise the Queen, Mr. J. Walter, M.P., Mr. Richard Stratton, Messrs. E. and A. Stanford, and other names familiar to the visitors at the principal agricultural shows throughout the country. Her Majesty takes first prize in Class 10, with a shorthorn heifer, bred at the Shaw Farm; but the four other animals entered in the Queen's name have been unsuccessful. There are only five entries in this class, but in the two first classes, for shorthorn cows with pure pedigrees and with a stain in them, there are thirty-two exhibits, including some very fine types of dairy stock. But the great feature of the show, so far as the live-stock classes go, are the Jerseys, of which there are ninety in three classes, and the chief honours of the day are secured by Mr. George Simpson, of Reigate, who takes first prize in each class. There is a fairly good muster of Ayrshire cows, and though Guernseys are nothing like so numerous as Jerseys, the quality is good throughout. The miscellaneous stock, whether coming under the head of pure or crossed breeds, has nothing remarkable about it. In the bull classes the principal winner is the Marquis of Exeter, who takes first and second prizes in the shorthorn class. Among the winners of the prizes given for dairy utensils, cowhouse fittings, models, and drawings, is the Aylesbury Dairy Company, which exhibits a very useful butter-making apparatus in Class 54, and a milk-can in Class 57. This milk-can is the same which has already received a gold medal from the Society of Arts, and a first prize at the Manchester and Liverpool Show. There are many other ingenious inventions. The German butter and the French cheese enable the foreigners to assert themselves, though the provisions of the Contagious Diseases (Cattle) Act keep away several head of Dutch cattle which had been entered in one of the live-stock classes.

The following awards have also been made:—To Mr. E. C. Tisdall, of Holland Park Farm, Kensington, the silver medal for the heifer yielding the largest quantity of milk, she being the shorthorn Shinyface, which took the second prize in her class. To the Marquis of Exeter the silver medal for the best bull in the show, his Telemachus VI, who has had a similar honour accorded to him on former occasions. To Stephen Dickens, of 5, Hornsey-street, Holloway-road, the silver medal for the goat yielding the largest quantity of milk; and to Mr. Edwin Dormer, of 74, Grosvenor-mews, New Bond-street, the silver medal for the best kid of either sex in the show. The fortunate kid is a female named Bess, one year and seven months old, which also took the silver medal champion prize. The gold medal for the best cow, bull, and their offspring in the show was necessarily withheld, there being no complete family competing.

THE LATE MR. LIONEL LAWSON.

The death of this gentleman, which took place at his residence in London on the 20th ult., has already been noticed in our Journal with a due expression of the regret it has occasioned in a wide circle of personal acquaintance. The well-known writer of our "Echoes of the Week," Mr. G. A. Sala, was prompted by a long-standing friendship to bring his tribute of esteem, and to bear witness to Mr. Lionel Lawson's virtues, in the column usually filled by that familiar contribution. We now present an Engraving of his Portrait, from the photograph by M. Walery, of the Rue de Londres, Paris, which will be recognised as the best likeness of the deceased, and will doubtless be acceptable to his numerous friends. He died at the age of fifty-six, after an active and busy life, in which, however, he did not frequently assume a conspicuous place before the public view, so that few events of his career demand to be here mentioned. In youth he received his education in Germany, but his home was in London. Starting with an ample fortune left him by his father, he engaged in business pursuits from choice; and soon, learning that the French typographers wanted a better supply of printing-ink, went over to Paris, there investigated the subject, and established a great manufactory of that article at St. Ouen, with an office in the Rue Mazagran. He was a man of extraordinary personal industry, and was wont to be fully employed in his business at seven o'clock in the morning, which is perhaps the habit of more Frenchmen than of our own countrymen. After working for some years at this business, and having realised another fortune by it, he parted with it and returned to London, when he purchased a large share in the Daily Telegraph. During his residence in Paris he had cultivated the best French society; and often received, at his handsome suite of rooms on a premier étage in the Rue Lepelletier, a large company of men of distinction, besides the great French printers and publishers, Messrs. Plon, Lévy, Firmin Didot, and others, and the newspaper proprietors, authors, and journalists of the day. In London he led a quiet and unostentatious life, but found leisure to do "innumerable acts of private kindness to all sorts of people," and took great interest in everything that was going on. He was a competent linguist, and was generally well informed of affairs at home and abroad.

ZULU WAR TESTIMONIALS.

Major-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., C.B., was presented by many inhabitants of the county of Essex, at a meeting held last Tuesday at the Shirehall, Chelmsford, with a sword of honour, purchased by public subscription, to commemorate his recent services in the Zulu War. This sword, of which we give an Illustration, was designed and manufactured by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, of New Bond-street, whose object appears to have been to typify modern honours by classical allusions. The scabbard is of silver decorated with repoussé plaques; the one at the point represents Apollo destroying the python. Above this is a trophy of African weapons, such as assegais, crossed by a ribbon bearing the names Kafirland, Kambula, Ulundi. A boldly executed figure of Britannia is next in succession. Between this and the guard of the hilt is a shield bearing the arms of the county of Essex, of which Sir Evelyn Wood is a native. The guard is ornamented with branches of laurel. Where it is joined by the richly carved ivory handle, the Victoria Cross is prominently displayed. The reverse side is decorated with equal richness. It exhibits panels corresponding with those above described. The subjects are Hercules and the Hydra, a trophy of English arms traversed by a scroll with the names Crimea, India, Ashantee, a figure of Minerva, the arms of Sir Evelyn Wood, and the star of a K.C.B. Sir Evelyn Wood's initials, in monogram, are introduced as an ornament on the back of the hilt. On the blade, which is of the finest tempered steel, is etched the following inscription:—"Presented to Major-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., by the county of Essex, in recognition of the eminent services rendered by him to his country during the recent arduous campaign in Zululand, and the conspicuous zeal, energy, and gallantry which have distinguished his entire military career. Oct. 14, 1879." The ceremony of presentation was made a scene of great public festivity in the town of Chelmsford. Sir Evelyn Wood came from the Episcopal Palace at Danbury with the Bishop of St. Albans, in a coach-and-four, escorted by the Essex Volunteers. A platform, with trophies, had been erected in front of the Shirehall. Sir Charles Du Cane, with many of the county gentlemen, stood there to receive Sir Evelyn Wood. An address was delivered by Sir Charles, to which the General replied. He was afterwards entertained at a banquet in the Royal Exchange, when he made another speech.

It was mentioned last week that Brigadier-General C. K. Pearson, C.B., had received a similar compliment, the gift of a sword, from the town of Yeovil, in Somerset. The county of Devon has subscribed for a piece of plate, a silver centrepiece, to be given to Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B. A sum of money was also subscribed by the officers and troopers of a colonial force lately under the command of Colonel Buller in Zululand; and he was desired to choose for himself some ornamental article, on which the subscribers wished to have engraved the following inscription:—"Presented to Lieutenant-Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B., by Commandant J. Baker, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and troopers of Baker's Horse, as a token of their regard and esteem for the valour and ability which he displayed while in command of the Mounted Corps Flying Column (of which they formed part) during the Zulu War of 1879." Colonel Buller selected a dining-room clock and a pair of vases, of which the following is a description:—The base of the clock is 24 in. by 18 in., and consists of black marble, with bronze ornaments in pure antique Greek style and bas-reliefs, copies taken from the Parthenon. The clock is surmounted by a splendid bronze figure of Orestes, on the base of which is engraved the inscription. The whole is 39 in. high. The vases are of the same style: the bases marble, with bas-reliefs from the same source, and the vases proper of bronze; the whole 24 in. high. We give an illustration of these articles. They were manufactured by Le Roy et fils, of 211 and 213, Regent-street, watch and clock makers to her Majesty.

Major Chard, R.E., V.C., and Major Bromhead, V.C., have been invited to visit the Queen at Balmoral. The officer who captured Cetewayo, Major Marter, is promoted to be a Lieutenant-Colonel.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet, since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—

"DOWN TO THE RIVER."

It need not be said that this picture by Mr. L. Alma-Tadema, R.A., was one of the attractions of the Great Room in the last exhibition of the Royal Academy; and—at least as regards size—the artist's principal contribution. Nor need we say that it is a very characteristic example of the painter; of his archæological learning; of his very rare feeling for artistic hues, and effects of light; and his, so to speak, realistic imagination. It is true that the composition, as we observed in our critical column, has a peculiarity unusual in the artist's works. Seldom, if ever, before has he contented himself with giving merely the heads or little more of his figures, or a half-head only. Moreover, painters in general rarely assume the foreground figures to be so near the spectator as, it is evident from their large scale, they were here intended to be represented. As a natural consequence the eye does not immediately realise the apparent "suddenness" of the perspective from these large heads to the diminished scale of the bridge. Better this, however, than large spaces of canvas "to let." But a reason (if not an entirely valid one, abstractly) may be given for this treatment. The reason is that by this novel arrangement, by this bold inventive artifice, the illusion is flashed on the mind that this is actually a veracious rendering of a scene and incident, witnessed accidentally by the artist himself, caught by him à l'imprévu, and placed before us just as he saw it. For a moment we are tempted to say to ourselves the painter must have positively seen this particular subject or he would have "made it up" more in conformity with the ordinary principles of composition. It is to the large element of apparent accident in the artist's works that they owe their extraordinary air of realistic truth, combined, of course, with the minute acquaintance with ancient life and remains which they evince. Mr. Alma-Tadema has given us well-informed representations of life in ancient Egypt and Greece, and in the Middle Ages, but he lives in ancient Rome, and so much is he a Roman citizen, so much is he identified with the people, that he concerns himself much less frequently with illustrating historic events or pointing a moral than with the aspects of everyday life. Just as a Londoner might see a young lady descending the side steps of Waterloo Bridge to take a boat "down the river" (if that were a customary thing), so the eminent Dutch artist naturalised among us meets—but with what difference of golden sunlight and intense blue sky, and artistic character in everything!—a young Roman matron, with her little girl and attendants, descending steps, the balustrade of which consists of variegated marbles, to the Tiber, and assailed by the importunities of servile rival watermen, Roman and Nubian. The air of unsought, unexpected fact disarms the classical archæologist, who might perhaps take exception to some details, as, for instance, the design of the bridge, with its heavy cornice and pedimented niches, containing bronze statues, for which authority could hardly be found—certainly no precedent still existing on the Tiber. One only thinks of the verisimilitude of the whole scene, with the lady and boatmen in the foreground, the pleasure-galley or biremis gliding through a central arch, the idler leaning over the parapet, his toga drawn over his head to protect him from the sun; the currus coming along the bridge between the two great bronzes, with an umbrella outspread overhead; the triumphal arch beyond, the shafts of its columns of "cipolino," like those at Posilipo, and the pediment of the temple that closes the view in the distance.

SUMMER ENCAMPMENT IN CYPRUS.

In order to avoid the intense heat in the plains of Cyprus, his Excellency Major-General Robert Biddulph, C.B., has been for two months encamped within 400 ft. of the summit of Mount Troodos, the ancient Olympus. The ground is a mass of rough rocks and stones covered with stunted pines; and, amongst these, tents were pitched for the High Commissioner of the Island, and his personal staff, consisting of Lieutenant Walter H. Holbech, 60th Rifles, private secretary, and Lieutenant F. Hammersley, 20th Regiment, A.D.C. Even at this altitude, 6000 ft. above the sea-level, the heat of the sun at midday was excessive, and the thermometer in the tents frequently reached 90 deg., but sitting outside in the shade was pleasant enough, and the evenings were almost too chilly after the sun set. Within a hundred yards of this camp the officers and men of the 20th Foot had stretched their canvas on a plateau, from which magnificent views are obtained looking northwards. On the other side, the Royal Engineers had set up their tents on a ridge overlooking a deep ravine which runs away eastwards. The scenery is certainly magnificent, and the health of the troops has been excellent, with the exception of a few men who have suffered from eating too much fruit and not wearing sufficient clothing after sunset. Our Illustrations are supplied by a set of photographs which were sent to us on the 16th ult. The photographic artist employed was Mr. Helios, a Greek name which seems highly appropriate to his profession, as we should say "Mr. Sun."

OUR SPECIAL ARTIST IN ZULULAND.

One page of Engravings in this week's Number of our Journal contains the Sketches by which our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, has sought to commemorate his own personal experiences during the campaign against King Cetewayo. Travelling on horseback over that rough country, where the holes of burrowing ant-bears, and other insidious ground traps, sometimes leave but an unsafe footing beneath the ragged herbage of the wilderness, he more than once got an awkward tumble. The first time he was thrown clear over the horse's head, which is not so bad for a light-weight rider, as he has then a fair chance of coming down upon his outstretched hands and feet. But on the second occasion, when horse and man fell together, the Special Artist lying undermost while his kicking steed rolled over upon him, it was a case of greater peril. The real injury, fortunately, did not amount to more than a painful complication of bruises, which were soothed by proper surgery and lapse of time. His friends of the 17th Lancers showed him much kindness when enduring this temporary affliction. Our Artist is an old campaigner, though still comparatively young in years, and his previous experiences in Bulgaria and Bosnia, and in the Ashantee War, had made him tolerably indifferent to the danger of being under an enemy's fire. This degree of self-possession in "sketching under difficulties" was more than some of the combatant officers and soldiery had expected to find in a pacific civilian with a portfolio and case of lead-pencils. A friendly Zulu warrior of the Native Contingent would therefore be sent to warn him that fighting was already commenced on the neighbouring hill-side, of which Mr. Prior was probably quite aware, but too much intent on his drawing to mind the whiz of a stray bullet now and then above his head. The performance of an incendiary act, doubtless by orders of the General in command, at one of the enemy's kraals or villages, might perhaps have been left to the hands of soldiers; but it was thought expedient, in this instance, that the Europeans present should set an example to the native troops. African warfare is not very nice; and there is a saying we have heard, among officers who have served at the Cape, that "a Kaffir war is the snob of all wars." However needful it may be, the burning of huts and driving away cattle, to inflict distress on a hostile population, cannot be regarded as the most elegant and dignified style of civilised military operations in the present age.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 27, 1876) with two codicils (dated Jan. 18, 1878, and Jan. 15, 1879) of the Right Hon. Sir John Arthur Douglas, Baron Bloomfield, P.C., G.C.B., late of No. 16, Holland Park, Notting-hill, who died on Aug. 17 last at his seat, Ciamaltha, Newport, Tipperary, was proved on the 4th inst. by Georgiana, Baroness Bloomfield, the widow, and Colonel Robert Nigel Fitzhardinge Kingscote, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £500 and the furniture, household effects, horses and carriages at his London residence; his house in Holland Park he also leaves as she shall appoint; the furniture and effects in his house at Ciamaltha he leaves to his sister the Hon. The testator provides that, if he has not done so in his lifetime, land to the extent of twelve Irish plantation acres is to be set apart for the purpose of building thereon a glebe house for the Incumbent of the parish of Killoscurry, Tipperary, and he authorises his executors to expend a sum not exceeding £1000 in the erection of such glebe house. The Ciamaltha estate the testator devises to the use of his sister the Hon. Mrs. Kingscote for life, with remainder to her son Fitzhardinge Kingscote, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, subject to defeasance in the event of any of them succeeding to the Kingscote property in Gloucestershire. The Redwood estate, charged with a jointure of £600 per annum to his wife, is devised to the use of his sister the Hon. Mrs. Trench for life, with remainder to her second son. The deceased was formerly British Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Austria.

The will (dated Dec. 5, 1878) with a codicil (dated July 9, 1879) of Sir Bourchier Palk Wrey, Bart., late of Tawstock, Devon, who died on the 11th ult. at Ilfracombe, was proved on the 6th inst. by Henry Smith, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator leaves to his brother and successor in the baronetcy, the Rev. Henry Bourchier Wrey, all the pictures, furniture, and effects at the family house, Tawstock Court; to his servant, John Sergeant, £200; to the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, the Roman Catholic Bishop at Plymouth, £2000, £1000 to be applied at his discretion towards the maintenance of a Roman Catholic priest at Barnstaple, and £1000 towards the maintenance of a Roman Catholic priest at Ilfracombe; to the Rector and Churchwardens of the parish of Tawstock £1000, upon trust to apply the dividends for ever to the most deserving parishioners not receiving parochial relief, and without distinction of religion, the charity to be called "Lady Eliza Wrey's Donation." There are special legacies to his executor, Mr. Smith, and to Mrs. Matilda Prime, and he bequeaths to them the residue of his personal estate.

The will and codicil (both dated Aug. 8, 1879) of Mr. Thomas Southey, late of Balmore, Caversham (near Reading), Oxfordshire, who died on the 11th ult., were proved on the 4th inst. by Arthur Howard Southey, the son, Ernest Alers Hankey and Henry Blunt Howard, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £500,000. The testator bequeaths £100 each to the British Orphan Asylum, Slough, the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots, the London Hospital, Whitechapel, and the Royal Berkshire Hospital, Reading; £50 to the Clapham Dispensary; to his wife, Mrs. Ann Maria Southey, £1000, all his plate and plated articles, certain furniture, effects, horses and carriages, and £2500 per annum for life, in addition to settlement; the remainder of his furniture and effects, horses, carriages, live and dead stock he gives to his son; to his daughter Adeline £7000; to his brother, Alfred Payne Southey, an annuity of £500; and legacies to his sisters, nephews, nieces, and other relatives, executors, and servants. The residue of his real and personal property is to be divided between his children in the proportions of three sixths to his son Arthur Howard Southey, and one sixth to each of his three daughters, Mrs. Henrietta Maria Hankey, Mrs. Ellen Howard, and Miss Adeline Southey.

Charles Myers, formerly of Liverpool, and late of Botley, in the county of Hants, Esq., died on Sept. 26, 1879. By his will (dated March 1, 1875) the testator appoints his wife, Henrietta Myers, and his sons, William Henry Myers and Charles Myers, his trustees and executors. His real and leasehold estates are devised to his son, William Henry Myers; and the residue of his personal estate is bequeathed in trust for all his sons who shall attain the age of twenty-three years or die under that age leaving issue. The will also contains provisions for the testator's wife and the other members of his family. The personal estate will be sworn under £400,000.

The will (dated March 18, 1870) of Mr. John Benjamin Smith, J.P., formerly M.P. for Stockport, late of No. 105, Westbourne-terrace, and of King's-ride, Ascot, who died on the 15th ult., was proved on the 6th inst. by William Thornely and William Arthur Smith, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £350,000. The testator leaves £100 to each of his executors, £100 to be divided between his servants according to length of service, some specific bequests to his wife, an annuity to his sister, and £500 per annum to each of his two daughters during their mother's lifetime. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife, Mrs. Jemima Smith, for life, and then for his two daughters, Miss Jemima Durning Smith and Miss Edith Jane Smith.

The will (dated Aug. 7, 1863) of Mr. James Maclaren, late of Constable Burton, Bedale, Yorkshire, and of Primly-hill, Paignton, Devon, who died on July 24 last, has been proved by James Joseph Maclaren and Ambrose Maclaren, the sons, the acting executors, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £160,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Caroline Maclaren, his furniture, plate, wines, horses, carriages, and £500 absolutely, and for life, if she shall so long remain unmarried, the income of five ninths of the rest of his property. The residue of his property, of whatever description, he leaves to his said two sons.

The will and codicil of Mr. Henry Harris, late of Leadenhall-street, and of Sussex Villa, Streatham, who died on Aug. 7 last, were proved on the 29th ult. by Theophilus Goodwin, Peter Paget, and Charles Holbrook, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under 45,000. The testator leaves numerous legacies to relatives, executors, his partner, a late clerk, warehousemen, and servants, and the following charitable bequests, to be paid on the death of his wife—viz., £1000 to the London City Mission; £1000 to the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, to be appropriated for the establishment of a life-boat on the coast of Sussex to be called the "Henry Harris, of Lewes;" and £500 each to the Church Missionary Society, the Religious Tract Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, the Idiots' Asylum, Earlswood, the Asylum for Fatherless Children, Reedham, the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountain and Cattle-Trough Association, and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The residue of his property he gives to his wife, Mrs. Frances Harris.

The will (dated Feb. 19, 1879) with a codicil thereto (dated Feb. 24 in the same year) of Captain the Honourable Edmund Verney Wyatt Edgell, of the 17th Lancers, and late of Stanford Hall, near Rugby, who was killed in the battle of Ulundi on July 4 last, was proved on Oct. 14, 1879, by William Melmoth Walters, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, and James Lambert, Esq., of the 17th Lancers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator devises one half of his fourth share of the Stanford Hall estates to the use of his mother, the Baroness Braye, for life, and, subject thereto, devises (in the events which have happened) the whole of his one fourth share of the same estates to the use of his brother, the Honourable Alfred Thomas Townshend Wyatt Edgell, for life, with remainder to his first and every other son successively in tail. And, after giving legacies to his executors and several other specific and pecuniary bequests, the testator directs the residue of his personal estate to be applied in paying off any charges affecting his one fourth share of the Stanford Hall estates, or to be laid out in the purchase of land to go along with such share.

FINE ARTS.

The 500th anniversary of the foundation by William of Wykeham of New College, Oxford, was celebrated on Tuesday last, and the college chapel was reopened. This noble chapel has been renovated as nearly as possible to the form its founder intended it to bear, at a cost of £20,000. A high-pitched oak roof replaces the mean and discordant plaster ceiling added in the eighteenth century; and the reredos is restored to its original character, gilding and colour being added where any trace of their use remained.

The Academy states that Dr. Paul Richter has been carefully studying the MSS. of Lionardo da Vinci in the Royal Library at Windsor, and has at length mastered the difficulty of the stenographic handwriting. Some of the discoveries he has made are of considerable importance, and will be welcomed by all who are interested in the literature of art. The result of his investigations are to be given in his promised life of da Vinci in "Illustrated Biographies of Great Artists."

On Monday evening Mr. Brassey, M.P., delivered the prizes to the successful students at the Hastings and St. Leonard's School of Art. The distribution took place in the large exhibition room of the institute, which has been erected at the sole cost of Mr. Brassey. Additional interest was lent to the occasion by the exhibition of Mr. Brassey's collection of paintings.

A Society of Female Artists has been formed at Manchester, and propose shortly to open an exhibition.

Mr. Henry Dixon writes to us, in reference to our article last week on the Photographic Society's Exhibition, that neither the original nor the enlarged negative of his photograph of a lion and lioness in that exhibition has been "retouched."

Next year being the fiftieth anniversary of Belgian independence, fêtes on a scale of great magnificence are to be held in Brussels. One important part of the celebration will be the organisation of an exhibition to form a complete historical representation of Belgian art.

The splendid mausoleum of the Duke of Brunswick on the Place des Alps, Geneva, was on Tuesday handed over by the architect to the Municipality in the presence of the executor of the late Duke, several members of the Great Council and Council of State, and thrown open to the public. It will be remembered that the Duke of Brunswick at his death, in 1873, left his immense fortune of 32,000,000f. to the town of Geneva, with the exception of 3,000,000f., which was to be devoted to the erection of the monument now completed, and which is one of the most remarkable structures of its kind in Europe. The work, which partially resembles the monument at Verona, is about 90 ft. high, the materials are granite, the finest and rarest marbles, and bronze. On the platform at the base of the monument are six statues of ancestors of the Duke, in white marble, on red marble pillars. The centre forms a kind of chapel, hexagonal in plan, its roof resting on six pillars, through which is seen the sarcophagus bearing a recumbent statue of the Duke in white marble, with a lion reposing at his feet, and four angels at the angles. Bas-reliefs on the sarcophagus represent scenes from the history of the House of Brunswick. A large pyramid of red marble, with truncated summit, decorated with allegorical heads in medallion, forms a third story. On the summit of the pyramid are twelve niches with the twelve apostles, and surmounting all is an equestrian statue of the Duke Charles. This statue is by the distinguished sculptor, M. Cain, as also two colossal lions in red Verona marble, which decorate the steps to the principal façade, and two chimeras at the sides of the monument. The effect of the mausoleum is said to be extremely fine en face the lake and the magnificent panorama of Mont Blanc.

It is at length decided that the Trocadéro is to be utilised by the various departments of the Ministry of Public Instruction and Fine Arts being located there.

A new building, to be called the Museo Tibertino, is being constructed in the old Botanical Garden at Rome, to receive the objects of art discovered in the Tiber and on its banks, and which are rapidly accumulating from the present excavations and dredging. The conservatory of the garden has been converted into a gallery to receive the beautiful frescoes dug up from the border of the river in the Farnesina Gardens.

MUSIC.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Last Saturday's concert brought forward (for the first time in England) a characteristic symphony by Heinrich Hofmann, of whose pianoforte compositions we have several times had occasion to speak in terms of praise. The work now referred to is entitled "Frithjof," and is illustrative of the Icelandic legend on which the Swedish poet, Bishop Tegnér, has based his poem of "Frithjof's Saga." The symphony is divided into four portions, respectively entitled "Frithjof and Ingeborg" (illustrating the character of the hero and heroine); "Ingeborg's Lament" (expressive of her grief at the separation from her lover); "Elves and Giants" (an intermezzo reflecting the airy grace of the former and the heavy movements of the latter); and "Frithjof's Return" (embodying the mutual joy of the lovers at their final reunion). With many effective passages there is much redundancy and diffuseness of treatment, and an excessive reiteration of climaxes, which somewhat militate against the effect of the symphony as a whole. The portions most free from these objections are the second and third movements, which have much interest in subject and treatment, and are (like the entire work, indeed) very skilfully instrumented. The symphony was applauded after each movement; and would probably have pleased still more had it been more concise in form and development.

Another novelty at Saturday's concert was a set of eight variations, for two pianofortes, by M. Saint-Saëns, on the trio belonging to the minuet of Beethoven's pianoforte sonata in E flat, from op. 31. This is treated with great ingenuity, and such variety and contrast as to sustain the interest throughout. The theme, or suggestions thereof, in different measures and tempos, can be traced through every variation, the last being a spirited fugue. Each player is furnished with abundance of effective passages of display, written with thorough knowledge of the instrument, on which M. Saint-Saëns is himself so distinguished a performer. The executants on Saturday were Madame Montigny-Remaury and Miss Marie Wurm, and the work received from them an admirable interpretation. The first-named lady also played Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in C major (No. 1) with fine style and finished mechanism.

Mrs. Osgood sang, with much refinement, the "Ave Maria" which Gounod has so effectively based on the first of the preludes of Bach's "Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues." The pianoforte part and the added violin obbligato were well rendered, the first by Mr. R. Reed, the other by Mr. T. Watson. Mrs. Osgood also sang Sullivan's song, "My dearest heart."

The other items of the programme consisted of Gounod's exquisitely humorous "Funeral March of a Marionette" and Sterndale Bennett's "Fantasia Overture" entitled "Paradise and the Peri." Mr. Manns conducted, as usual.

THE BRISTOL TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL.

Having already given a summary of the arrangements for this celebration, we may now briefly record the opening thereof. The first performance on Tuesday morning consisted of Handel's "Samson;" an oratorio containing some of his finest choral writing, and this derived full effect from the excellent singing of the Bristol choir. The solo music was rendered by Madame Albani, Miss Emma Thursby, Madame Patey, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Hilton, and Mr. Santley. Among the several specialties in this respect was the brilliant delivery of "Let the bright seraphim," by Madame Albani (with trumpet obbligato by Mr. Jaeger); and the air "Return, O God of Hosts," expressively rendered by Madame Patey. Mr. Charles Hallé conducted with thorough efficiency, Mr. Riseley having presided at the organ. The evening concert included Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in E flat (played by Mr. Hallé and conducted by Mr. Hecht), Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor, and Mendelssohn's music to "The First Walpurgis Night."

"Elijah" was given on Wednesday morning, the second miscellaneous concert taking place in the evening, and including Brahms's "Rinaldo"—Thursday morning's programme having consisted of Mozart's "Requiem" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater;" the evening miscellaneous concert having included Beethoven's choral symphony, and the festival was to close yesterday (Friday) morning with "The Messiah."

Of the latter portions of the performances we must speak next week.

M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts at Covent-Garden Theatre are continuing to prove attractive. The constant change of programme secures a succession of varied features calculated to interest all tastes. On Monday Mdlle. Hamakers made her first appearance, and sang with much success in the air, with variations, from "The Crown Diamonds," and Dessauer's song, "Le Retour des Promis." On Tuesday the vocal performances included the refined singing of Miss Helene Greiffenhagen in Gounod's "Ave Maria" (based on Bach's prelude), and Ganz's song, "Sing, sweet bird."

This (Saturday) evening Mr. Mapleson's autumn season of Italian opera begins at Her Majesty's Theatre, with a performance of Verdi's "Aïda," in which Madame Marie Roze is to sustain the title-character, supported by Madame Trebelli as Amneris, Signor Frapolli as Rhadamès, Signor Pantaleoni as Amonasro, &c.

Mr. Walter Bache's eighth annual recital will take place at St. James's Hall next Wednesday afternoon, when his programme will include an interesting selection from Liszt's original pianoforte works and songs.

The Monday Popular Concerts will open their twenty-second season on Nov. 3, when the string quartet party will consist of Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti; Mdlle. Janotha being the solo pianist and Miss Lilian Bailey the vocalist. The Saturday morning performances will begin on Nov. 8.

On Tuesday the pile of buildings known as the Warrior-square Concert-Rooms were opened by Mr. and Mrs. Brassey, in the presence of a large company. Luncheon was afterwards served in the great hall, to which about 300 sat down, the chair being taken by Mr. Alderman Gausden, Mayor of Hastings and chairman of the company.

The Duchess of Marlborough received at Dublin Castle yesterday week a deputation from the operative silk-weavers of Dublin, to confer as to the means by which something may be done for the revival of the trade. Mr. M'Cormack, a member of the deputation, read a statement similar to that made some weeks ago by a deputation to Colonel Caulfield, Comptroller of the Viceregal Household. The Duchess, replying, said it principally lay in the hands of weavers to cause a revival in the trade, but she would do what she could to supplement their efforts. If the trade were to be successfully revived, their energy should be directed towards procuring new designs to compete with foreign goods of similar texture. Her Grace afterwards received a deputation of manufacturers, who exhibited patterns of newer and lighter material.

THEATRES.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

The reopening of the above theatre, after a long and apparently hopeless interregnum, is an event of importance to all interested in theatrical matters. The associations of the building extend as far back as the year 1763, the date, we believe, of its first erection. In this theatre the celebrated Joey Grimaldi, in 1781, made his first bow to the public, in the character of a monkey, the king of clowns and mimics being at that time but three years of age. Here was first produced the drama of "Black-Eyed Susan," in which the inimitable T. P. Cooke nightly moved the audiences to tears and rapturous demonstrations of approval. Passing through various vicissitudes of fortune, in the year 1844 it came under the management of Messrs. Phelps and Greenwood, which marks an important epoch in the history of the drama. When William Shakspeare, king of poets and dramatists, the glory of the days of good Queen Bess, nor the glory of that age only, but of all times and all generations—the crown and front of England's literary greatness—was, owing to the increasing decadence of the public taste, expelled from the West of London, he found a grateful if ignoble shelter in the little dusky region of Clerkenwell. We say ignoble, because coming within the sphere of our own earliest reminiscences are the objections of fastidious lovers of the bard, who declined to go to Islington to see his plays represented, assuming that the neighbourhood itself was a desecration. But in the course and process of time Sadler's Wells, under the able management of Messrs. Phelps and Greenwood, became the recognised home and school of the Shakspearean drama. For eighteen years of uninterrupted prosperity the popular tragedian held the reins of government in the little Thespian Temple, which his genius devoted to the noblest purposes of his art. After his retirement, and that of his successor, Miss Marriott, the theatre fell into disrepute, and old Sadler's Wells was fast approaching its final stage of dissolution, when lo! from its ashes, like the marvellous bird of which sages tell—in pristine splendour, eclipsing the external glories of the original—arises New Sadler's Wells, under the auspicious management of Mrs. Bateman.

On entering the stalls the visitor becomes aware of the extensive alterations. The theatre has been completely remodelled, and presents to the spectator an imposing interior. The form of the building has been preserved, no doubt to the delight of the Islingtonians, who would not have their memories of the old house entirely obliterated, and whose affections are fixed, we might say, on the bricks and mortar. The decorations are all in the newest style; and the theatre, as it stands, must be pronounced one of the handsomest and most commodious in the metropolis. A new act-drop by Mr. John O'Connor, representing Sadler's Wells in 1779, is exceedingly picturesque, and received the marked approbation of the audience. A poetic address, written by Tom Taylor, and spoken with extraordinary elocutionary skill by Miss Bateman, was the first item in the programme. Of this the salient points, especially the allusion to "brave old Phelps," were vociferously cheered, and at its conclusion Miss Bateman was recalled and received a floral tribute from her admirers. Following this came Pocock's drama of "Rob Roy," the merits and demerits of which are so well known as to require in this place but a passing comment. A faultily constructed, singularly erratic drama, it affords opportunities for singing and acting which have obtained for it a lasting acceptation from the public. It also affords scope for spectacular display. Mrs. Bateman has been lavish in expenditure, placing the piece upon the boards with a splendour that old Sadler's Wells has never seen surpassed. The national costumes have been reproduced with minute exactness, and effective business introduced following the traditions of the Theatre Royal Edinburgh. The scenery, comprising a series of Scotch landscapes by Messrs. O'Connor, Gordon, Harford, and others, is superb. A view of the Pass of Loch Ard, in the third act, down which is seen to flow a cascade of real water, is exceedingly picturesque, and drew from the audience unmistakable manifestations of approval. This scene is memorable for a Highland jig and sword dance, executed by Gilroy's troupe of dancers and pipers, as also a combat between Dougal and Captain Thornton, which obtained for the artists an immediate recall to the footlights. To the general performance considerable praise must be awarded. The honours of the evening, however, fell to the share of Mr. Walter Bentley and Miss Bateman in the respective characters of Rob Roy and Helen MacGregor. The lady's impersonation of the bold outlaw's wife is one of the finest we remember to have witnessed. She gave with masterly precision the varying phases of the character, exhibiting rage, grief, indignation, sense of injustice, retaliation, with a force and truthfulness that had an electrical effect upon the audience. In person and acting she appeared the beau ideal of Scott's celebrated chieftainess; a grander presentation of the weird Amazonian woman can scarcely be imagined. As Rob Roy, Mr. Walter Bentley showed histrionic abilities of a high order. In the scene of the outlaw's capture the actor reached the climax of his powers, and at the fall of the curtain he was enthusiastically summoned to the footlights. The Bailie Nicol Jarvie of Mr. Edmund Lyons was a meritorious performance, and the Dougal of Mr. R. Lyons was exceedingly clever and picturesque. The Rashleigh of Mr. N. Wheatcroft was also deserving of praise. Miss Maud Irvine essayed the character of Diana Vernon. The lady's voice is sweet and flexible, and in the popular song, "Robin Adair," she was loudly encored. Francis Osbaldistone was enacted by Mr. Richard Drummond. The National Anthem was sung at the close of the performance, when Mrs. Bateman appeared in the midst of her three children. The greeting she received testified the public appreciation of her efforts and the heartfelt wish of all present for the ultimate success of the experiment.

COURT.

A new and original one-act comedy, entitled "A Clerical Error," by H. A. Jones, has been produced at this theatre. The dialogue is not remarkable for wit and brilliancy; but the story is novel and interesting, and the situations are worked out with a degree of ingenuity that secures for the whole a successful issue. The plot may be briefly sketched. A country Vicar becomes enamoured of his young ward, who, being penniless, he has adopted into his home, and towards whom he consequently stands in the position of a benefactor. The discrepancy in their ages appears at the outset an insuperable barrier. The girl, moreover, is violently in love with the Vicar's nephew, one Richard Capel, who reciprocates her passion. A feeling of duty and obligation induces the lady to do violence to her feelings and consent to become the wife of her guardian. Ultimately the Vicar, discovering the secret of his ward's attachment, relinquishes his claim, and the curtain falls on the pronounced clerical benediction in favour of the happy couple. Mr. Wilson Barrett's assumption of the Vicar, whose unlucky penchant for his ward occasioned so much entanglement, was truly excellent, his exhibition of suppressed grief on discovering his error being natural and artistic. The same may be said of the honest, manly way in which, at the opening of the scene, he declared his passion. Mr. Arthur Dacre made the most of Dick Capel, and Mr. G. W. Anson's Jeremiah Perry was, in its way, an artistic study. The part of the heroine, Minnie Heritage, found a pleasing exponent in Miss Winifred Emery. In obedience to a summons, the artists appeared upon the stage at the fall of the curtain, and the author bowed his acknowledgments from a private box.

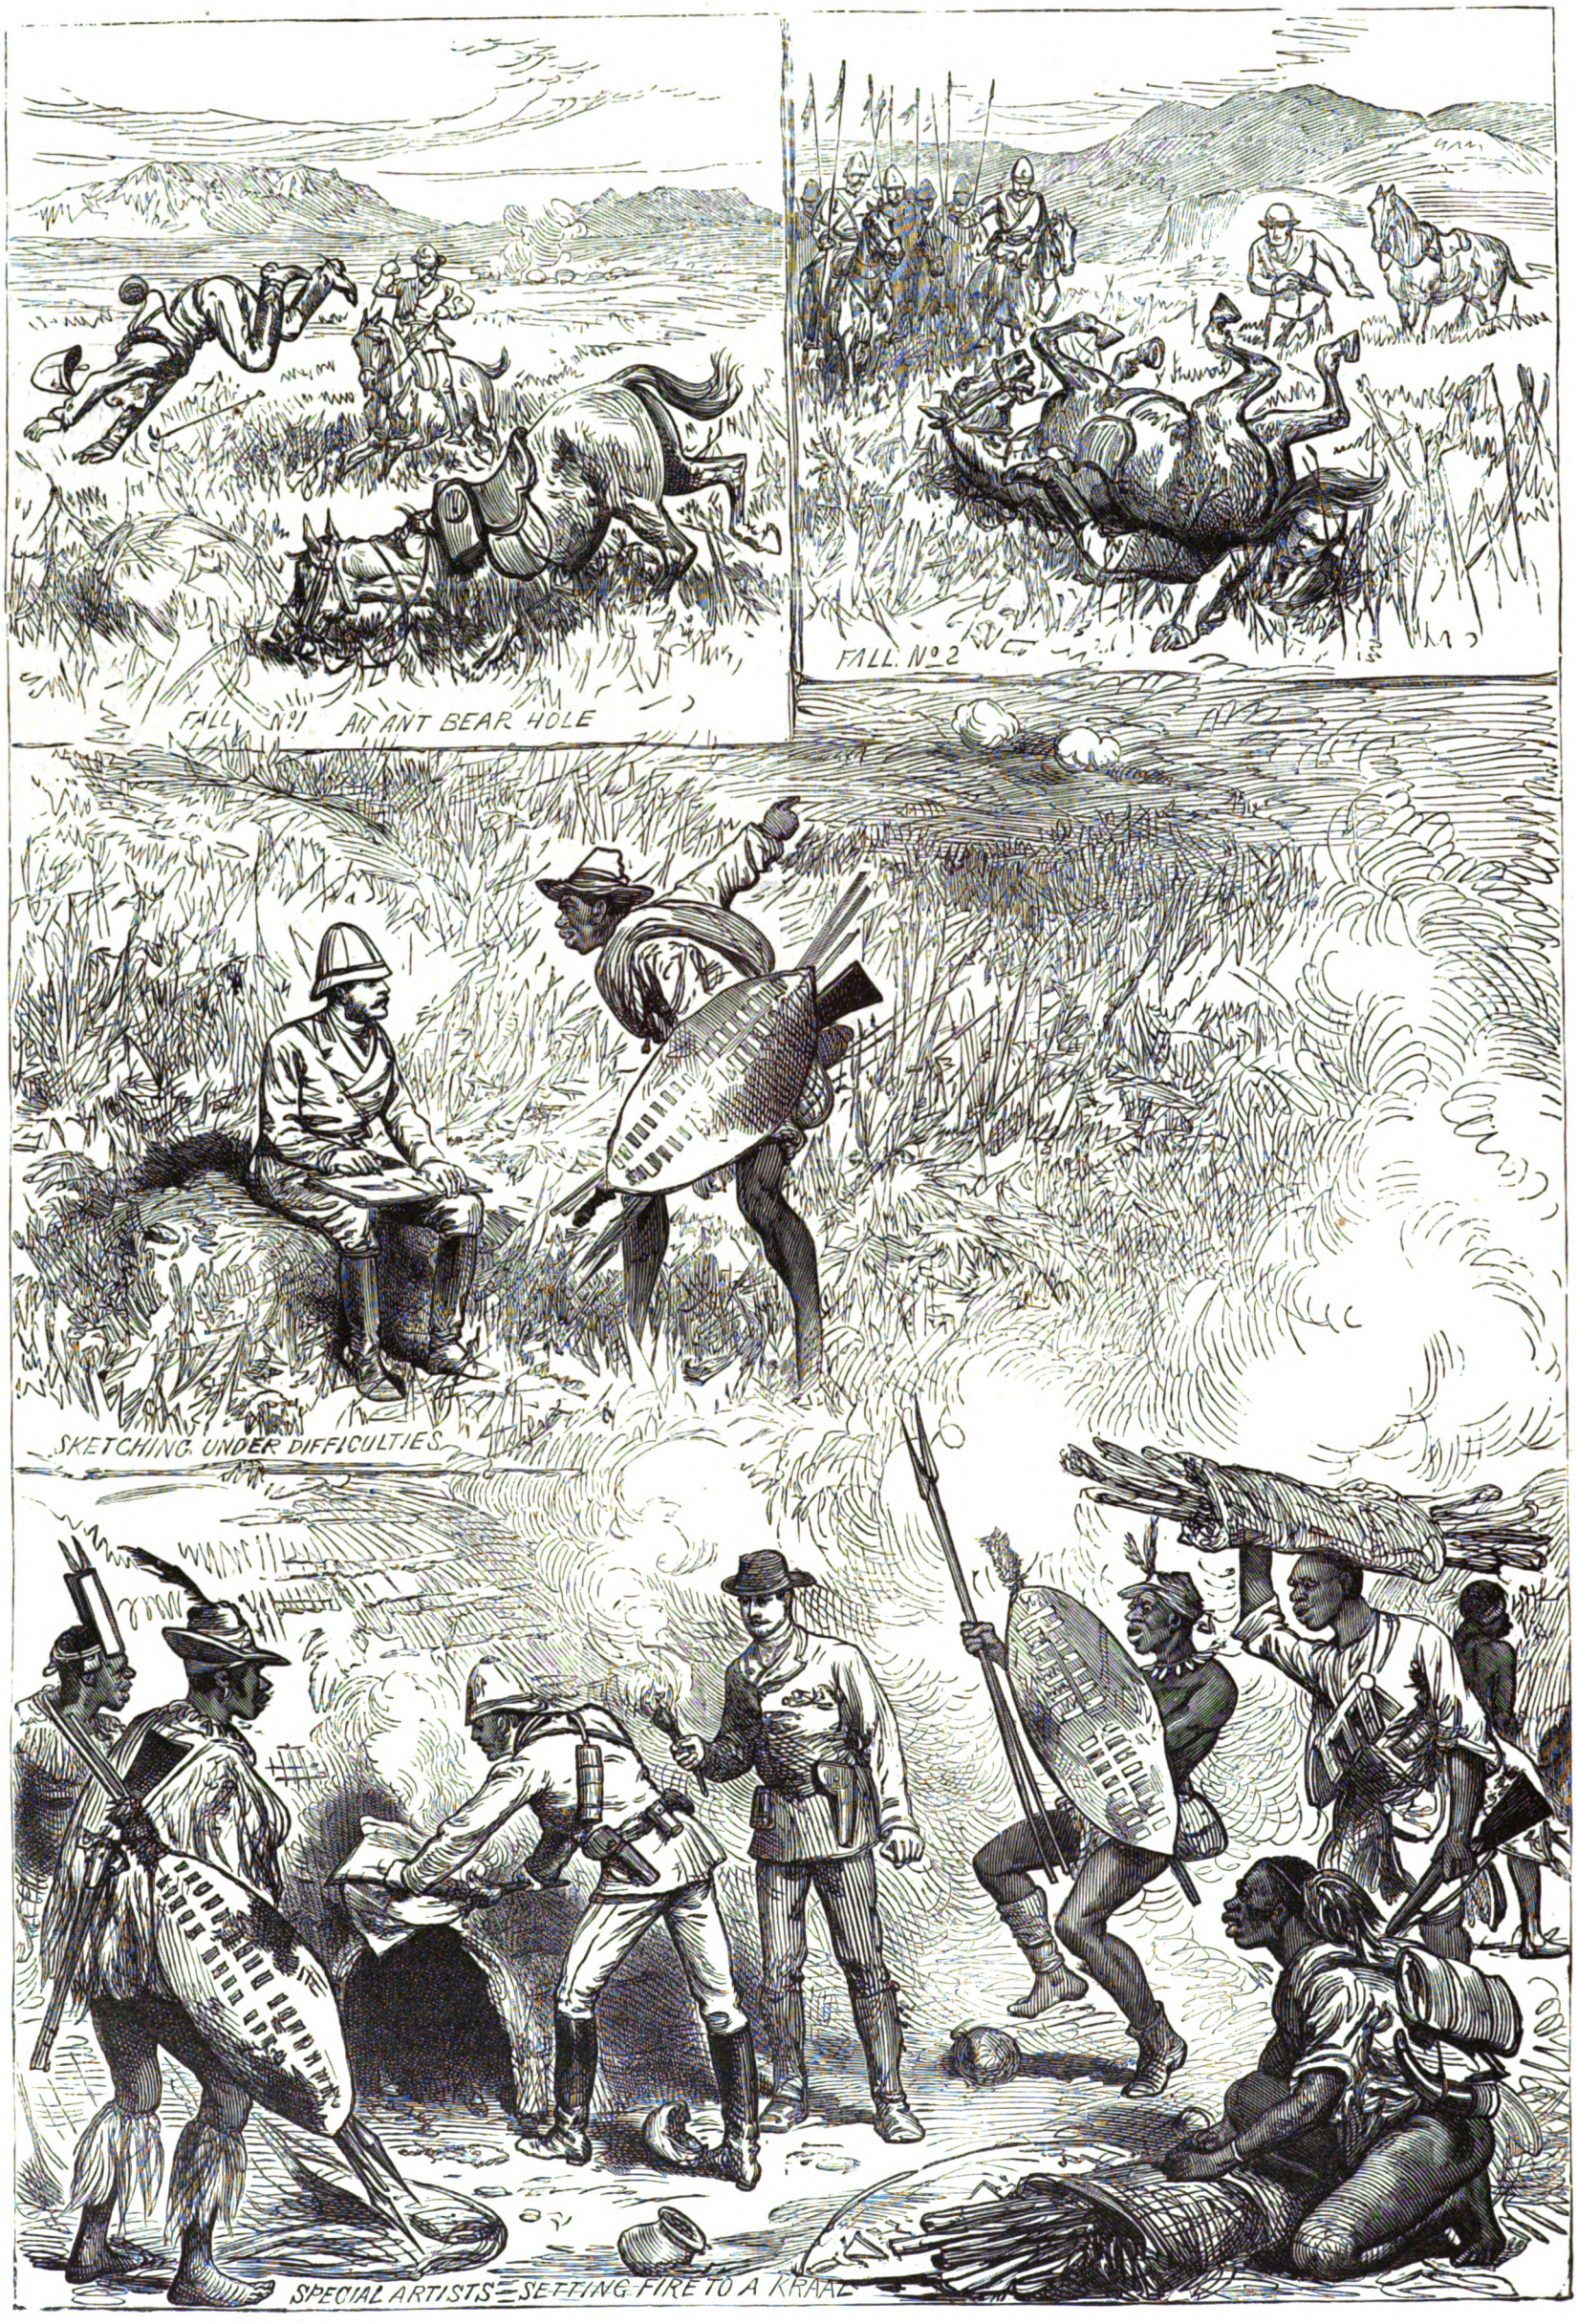
At Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment on Monday evening next, Oct. 20, Mr. Corney Grain will give for the first time his new Musical Sketch, entitled "A Quiet Visit;" and on Wednesday, Oct. 22, a New First Part will be produced, entitled "The Pirate's Home," written by Gilbert A'Beckett, music by Vivian Bligh.

A novel entertainment, entitled "Dreams of Assyria," is being given at the Egyptian Hall. It consists of six of the stories from the "Arabian Nights," illustrated by tableaux, introducing superb dresses and ornaments, excellent scenic effects, and characteristic music, both European and Oriental.

Mr. Toole laid the memorial-stone of the new Royalty Theatre in Glasgow last Saturday afternoon, in the presence of a numerous assemblage, among whom was Mr. Sims Reeves. The theatre, which is a handsome structure, capable of holding about 2000 persons, is already partly built, and is to be opened early in December.

AN ENDOWED THEATRE.

The question of a subsidised theatre has been brought into distinct prominence by the Times of last week. The shameful neglect of the poetical drama, and the spasmodic efforts occasionally made in its favour, have excited alternately no inconsiderable amount of indignation and contempt, until at last the attention of some intelligent persons has been turned to the subject. Among these is Madame Pfeiffer, who has written a long and eloquent letter to the leading journal, which, in return, has complimented her with a leading article in support of her application. The lady sees clearly that no dependence is to be placed on popular sympathy. The elements of a proper appreciation are not possessed by the crowd. She turns, therefore, to the select few, and to these she proposes to set a profitable example. She recognises the difficulty of obtaining help from the State for the establishment of a theatre devoted to the production of the poetic drama. But she thinks it not unreasonable to believe that there are a hundred persons in this land which we call England, "ready to back their belief in the high schooling power of art by coming forward with one thousand pounds each for the establishment of a fund for its advancement." There can be no reason "to show why the purchase and endowment of a house by private persons should be open to objection." "Such a temple of Art," she continues, "lifted above the thunders of the gods, and uninfluenced by their preference for folly and buffoonery, sustained by a committee of the best-disciplined taste of the time, and presided over by one having the breadth of intellectual training like that, let us say, of Prince Leopold, would become a meeting-ground and rallying-point of the nobility of mind, and a standard of excellence to all loyal aspirants." Such a theatre, the lady thinks, need not be large. "The theatre at Meiningen," she says, "in which such complete dramatic effects have been achieved, is a theatre no larger than the average of our own minor ones. If, on the other hand," she adds, "it should be objected that an undertaking on so small a scale would be out of proportion with the magnitude of our surroundings, let it be remembered that it would claim to be but a beginning—a new centre of dramatic life, which might be expected to expand with time, and to give rise to many an offshoot. . . . If the protection afforded to dramatic art by the establishment of an endowed theatre should be seen to fulfil the end in view, a notable addition to the confidence of its advocates would naturally result, and the new institution would be likely to become the parent of similar ones in various parts of the kingdom; each of our manufacturing centres being fully equal to fostering for itself an offshoot from the original stem."



In reference to the improbability of obtaining vulgar appreciation for refined art, Madame Pfeiffer reasonably doubts whether there exists even in the highest quarters an available nucleus of culture, possessing width of view and technical experience sufficient to guide a national theatre at once triumphantly on its way. Our highest circles are deficient in certain æsthetic qualities; they need themselves elocutionary training, and have to learn grace of manner. This consideration certainly adds to the difficulty. One thing is conceded, that the moment is clearly not unfavourable for a determined effort to supply an acknowledged defect in our national institutions. The Times points out that the fair advocate of the Endowed Theatre of the future does something more than merely advocate its institution; something more practically effective. She offers to contribute the sum of one thousand pounds towards the endowment of a theatre under suitable conditions. "If," adds the Times, her offer "should meet with a suitable response from other quarters, there is no reason why the experiment should not be tried, in a manner most in accordance with our national genius, of establishing a theatre in which something more elevated and elevating might be aimed at than the mere gratification of the popular tastes of the moment."

In accepting a proposition like this, which we do with earnestness and sincerity, it must be considered that money, after all, is the least element in the affair. When England's chief poet placed himself at the head of a theatre he possessed in his own person the qualifications of a manager and dramatist, and by their exercise obtained the means of carrying out his projects. A friend of the writer, recently deceased, the founder, builder, and proprietor of more than one theatre, and uniformly successful, as it were by instinct, had shortly before his death accepted a plan for a people's theatre at the West-End on a scale of magnitude and with a completeness of purpose that would have ensured success. He was also provided with manager, poet, and drama, leaving nothing to chance, and having to find nothing but the capital. This was already within his command. Any capitalist willing to adopt his ideas can receive full information from the present writer. Above all things, theatres require individuality for their successful conduct.

On Tuesday a conference of the Miners' Associations of the United Kingdom was opened at Leeds, and extended over several days. Mr. A. Macdonald, M.P., presided over the meeting, and delegates representing the mining interest in all parts of the kingdom were present.

The receipts on account of revenue from April 1, 1879, when there was a balance of £6,915,756, to Oct. 11, 1879, were £37,951,191, against £38,192,016 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £6,243,389. The net expenditure was £47,391,655, against £47,726,765 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balances on Oct. 11 amounted to £1,057,841, and at the same date in 1878 to £1,161,064.

He was afterwards for a short period in 1822 Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In that year he acted as Chef de Chancellerie to the Duke of Wellington's mission to the Congress at Verona, and from 1823 to 1828 he was Ambassador at Berlin. Mr. Harding, of Piccadilly, has invented and patented a useful little apparatus for ready letter writing, which he calls the Nelson Writing Tablet. It contains several sheets of note paper and adhesive envelopes combined. An indelible ink pencil in a solidified form is used instead of a pen, and when the note is written it is detached in an instant, folded, and ready for the post. By travellers and invalids the Nelson writing tablet will be regarded with especial favour.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

On the 1st and 2nd inst. Mr. Blackburne visited the Witney Athenæum Chess Club for the purpose of exhibiting his skill in "blindfold" and "simultaneous" games. On the first evening of his visit he played, seeing the boards, the Rev. Dr. Payne, the president of the club, Mr. J. H. Shayler, the vice-president, and ten other gentlemen simultaneously, winning eleven games and drawing one. The drawn game was that in which Mr. Blackburne was opposed by the president. On the following evening he contended against the same number of players sans voir, and won all the games.

The following is one of the latter series won against Mr. SHAYLER.

The winter season of the City Chess Club will be inaugurated on the 17th inst. by a general meeting of the members. Among the subjects for discussion is the appropriation of five guineas for a memorial of the late Herr Löwenthal, and the settlement of the handicap for the ensuing year.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Enoch and Sons have just issued an excellent Pianoforte Tutor, compiled by Mr. Franklin Taylor, whose special merits as an executant and as a teacher render him peculiarly qualified for the production of a work of this class. As pointed out in Mr. Taylor's preface, his Tutor differs from most others in its combination of the didactic with the practical, being divided into chapters, each containing a portion of theoretical instruction, followed by lessons for practice. Within the compass of less than a hundred pages, and at the price of five shillings, the Tutor comprises a large amount of well-arranged information, interspersed with technical exercises and a varied selection of short pianoforte pieces, altogether well suited to develop the pupil's executive powers and musical taste, in preparation for the study of the classical works of the great masters.

Messrs. Forsyth Brothers have published a cantata entitled "Watchfulness" ("The Parable of the Ten Virgins"), composed by Dr. Hiles. The text is compiled from the Holy Scriptures by Mr. W. A. Barrett, and the music is written for treble and contralto voices, sometimes solo, sometimes choral. A well contrasted accompaniment serves to set off the vocal effects, which are throughout pleasing, and appropriate to the sentiment of the words. The cantata will be welcome in choral societies and domestic circles. The same publishers also issue several effective songs by the same composer. These are "The Gallants of England" (a cavalier song), "Hark! the ripple of the Fountain" (ballad), and "May"—all lying within a moderate compass. Some pleasing, and not difficult, pianoforte pieces also come from Messrs. Forsyth, among them being—"Intermezzo," by Leo Kerbusch; "The Fairy of the Forest" (sketch); "Sweet Anne Page" (gavotte); and "La Bella Marguerite" (rondo élégante), by W. F. Taylor; "Parade March," by Felix Löwe; "Sarabande," by F. Stanislaus; and "Barcarolle," by F. Unger; a spirited "Tarantella" (preceded by a graceful "Andante") by L. Kerbusch, being for violin and pianoforte.

From Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. we have a very characteristic song, "I'll love my love for ever," by E. Oldham. This admits of some effective declamation, and is within the most ordinary vocal range. "Ah! se tu fossi meco" is a graceful romanza by Francesco Berger, written in a suave, melodious style, and requiring little more than the compass of an octave. This and "Amor et Graziella"—two lively polkas for the pianoforte by H. Stiehl—are also issued by Messrs. Duncan Davison.

Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.'s recent publications include a set of six songs from "Gwen," a drama in monologue by the author of "The Epic of Hades." The music is by Professor G. A. Macfarren. No. 1, "As on the clear hill-sides," is a smoothly written melody, which is well contrasted by occasional florid passages in the accompaniment; No. 2, "Oh vermeil rose and sweet," is very flowing and expressive, and is especially suitable to a contralto voice; No. 3, "What shall I do for my love," is of a somewhat brighter character; No. 4, "Oh, soft dove," having much gentle tenderness; No. 5, "Bring with you the last sweet rose," although extremely simple, is very expressive, and is available for any voice, being especially suitable for a tenor; No. 6, "When I walked careless on the hills," is somewhat of a declamatory character, with an effective change of tempo and of key (from minor to major) towards the close. All the songs being within the range of any voice, it is needless to specify the compass of each. The accompaniments are written with special taste and skill. The same publishers likewise issue an arrangement for the pianoforte, by Sir Julius Benedict, of "The World's Delight," the Chinese national air ("P'oo Teën Loh"). This curious melody (communicated to the arranger by the Chinese Minister) is constructed on a series of notes of the diatonic scale, omitting the supertonic, the fifth, and the seventh. The melody, as transcribed, has much more tunefulness and regularity of rhythm than are popularly ascribed to Chinese music, of which it is a very interesting specimen.

Messrs. Schott and Co. have brought out a series of very interesting arrangements for violin (with pianoforte accompaniment), by G. Haddock. These comprise the "Entr'acte" and "Ballet" from Schubert's charming music to the drama of "Rosamunde;" the "Air" and "Gavotta" from Bach's orchestral "Suite" in D; the "Canzonetta" from Mendelssohn's first string quartet; and the minuets (and trios) from Mozart's symphony in E flat, and his string quartet in D minor. The transcriptions are well done; but we do not see the necessity for change of key made in some instances. A very graceful "Barcarolle" for violin (with pianoforte accompaniment), by Carl Hause, and a well-written and characteristic "Ballabile" ("alla moda antiqua") for two performers on the pianoforte, by Mr. Lindsay Sloper, are also published by Messrs. Schott.

Messrs. Ashdown and Parry publish a pleasing song and an effective march, both composed by Juliana Wurtzburg. The song is entitled "She showed me roses in my morning dream." The melody, although simple, is taking; and the compass extends only from C sharp below the lines to F sharp on the fifth line. The other piece—"The March of the May-Queen"—is graceful and melodious, being contrasted with a vivacious intermediate "quick-step."

Mr. T. B. T. Hildyard, M.P., having resigned the chairmanship of the Notts Quarter Sessions, the Hon. Henry Strutt, son of Lord Belper, was on Monday elected in his stead.

The annual conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on the 28th inst. and following days.

The Bishop of Manchester, who last Saturday distributed the prizes of the successful students in connection with the art and science classes of the Bury District Co-operative Society, said there was nothing that argued more for the stability and well-being of society in general in England in times so critical as those through which we were passing than the extension of the system of co-operation among the great body of the working men. Referring to the subject of recreation, the Bishop said he did not think that one could listen to a play of Shakspeare's, such as "King Lear" or "Hamlet," or any good play by great actors, and worthily put upon the stage, without feeling benefited, and if all plays were of that kind he, as a minister, should have no hesitation in recommending the people to go to them. On the question of opening libraries, picture-galleries, and the like on Sundays, his sentiment might be in favour of opening such institutions, and yet he could not without fears and apprehensions as a Bishop say that he could thoroughly go in for it. He had been asked his opinion upon the proposal to open the Manchester Royal Institution on Sundays, and he had asked if they did open it not to do so during church services. He was glad to find that it had been decided not to open the institution during church hours, so that there would be three hours during which the people could go and see papers and pictures without being debarred from the proper observances of the Lord's Day.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article.
It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair, never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. Second—Its easy application without any previous preparation of the hair; without that sticky and disagreeable sulphur odour found and complained of in other preparations. It never stains the skin or linen. It retains the hair in any desired position, and is cooling and cleansing to the scalp.

FLORAL BELL, FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.
A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence a large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1879.

A slight revival of Trade throws a rather brighter and warmer tint over the prospects of the country than has been seen for a long time past. Whether it will be a continuous and growing change for the better cannot as yet be safely pronounced upon. It is a present good, at any rate. It checks further depression. It kindles hope. It wakens up from deathlike torpor commercial enterprise. Capital is watching its opportunities with an eagerness that is somewhat feverish and will need not a little self-restraint. We will not speculate upon the hereafter. It may suddenly disappoint us, or it may slowly develop elements of permanence. We have a trying winter before us. The sun has not shed upon this part of the world his usual amount of balmy and ripening influences. In some way or other, no doubt, we are destined to realise the evil consequences of so dominant a fact. A long swoon—for the state of trade may be fitly represented by such a figure—cannot be endured without a succession of painful, even if they prove to be recovering, experiences, and, for a considerable period yet to come, even at best, we shall walk staggeringly where we were wont to move erect.

There is some resuscitation, too, of political life. A last Parliamentary Session, as they approach it, stirs the blood of parties. We may be said already to have entered upon a season of electioneering, and public discussion, mainly conducted by the foremost Leaders of political thought and action, is actively at work, not within the precincts of Westminster Palace, but in the great provincial centres of industry and population. Speaker after speaker takes up the theme of debate, most of them treating it from a party point of view. The Press reports their rhetorical efforts, and the people read, from day to day, the pros and cons of a great national argument. There can be no objection to this. It is a useful preliminary to a General Election. It may evolve more heat and passion than is compatible with a calm judgment of the interests of the country, but, at least, it tends to enlighten as well as to stir men's minds, and, to some extent, to adjust the balance between the "ins" and the "outs." What will be the upshot of it all when the poll comes to be taken by Constitutional authority it is not for us to predict. But the process being applied by all political sections for the purpose of swaying the will of the majority is, unquestionably, spite of some drawbacks, a healthy and health-giving one.

The circumstances, economic and political, which now beset the Government of the United Kingdom can hardly be described as fortunate or flattering, though, as has been already intimated, they are a trifle less gloomy than they have been of late. The policy of the country in its relation to other States, or even to its own Colonies, shows nowhere any very decided marks of success. In such military contests as those in which we have taken part we have not been baffled. We are strong in all the moral qualities which give victory to armies. We equip with the best arms of precision those whom we call upon to fight our battles. We cheer them on to the encounter. We pay special honours to those who survive it. But a mere predominance of physical force, although it underlies, constitutes but a small part of the government of nations. Take Afghanistan as an instance. We have entered the City of Cabul triumphantly. We have occupied it with our forces. We have proclaimed martial law to be law for the inhabitants within a circuit of ten or a dozen miles. We may have to do the same thing at Candahar and Herat, and we may do it, perhaps, without much loss of life. But, whatever may be said of this, it is not the policy which the British Nation desires. Say it is forced upon us by necessity—by the abdication of Yakoob Khan—it still remains true that we are governed rather than that we govern. It is not of choice that we virtually annex Afghanistan, but we have put ourselves into a position in which the virtue becomes a necessity. We sit upon the safety-valve of the engine, not because we wish to do so, but because we must. But we know the danger to which we are exposed. Our weak point in India is that of Finance, and even before the occupation of Afghanistan Indian Finance was burdened up to the full scale of its capacity.

Take, again, South Africa. The power of Cetewayo is broken. The King himself is a prisoner in Cape Town Castle. Not a British soldier remains in Zululand. Sir Garnet Wolseley has devised and applied a new framework of settlement for the inhabitants of that region—one that we do not think less of because the Colonists object to it. But the problem which our South African possessions presented to us for solution is not solved. The soldier has done his work; but it cannot be pretended that the statesman has been equally successful. There is neither unity, nor, as far as can be seen, a germinant principle of unity, in the work which has been achieved. Haphazard aggressiveness seems to be the present temper of the colonial mind, in place of reverence for justice and conformity to law. Things are not so bad, perhaps, as they were twenty, or even ten years ago; but the march of improvement is extremely slow, and one cannot detect among the elements of practical policy in South Africa any that has within itself the power of fusing civilised and uncivilised populations into one living and coherent mass.

If now we turn our eyes to Continental Europe, they will rest upon a less perplexed, perhaps, but by no means a pleasing ensemble. Diplomacy is understood (possibly without sufficient reason) to be mining and countermining the interests of Peoples. Great armaments are being kept up, to the sad detriment of industrial pursuits, with the view of one day extending the sphere of political rule. Meanwhile, rumour takes advantage of the prevailing uncertainty to invent, or at any rate to spread abroad, statements which have but little foundation in facts. Germany and Austria are, it is given out, to become united in alliance; Russia and France are thereupon supposed to be approaching each other; and Great Britain, it is conjectured, will cast in her lot with the former, if only to save Turkey from expulsion from Europe. Such things are talked about in the high places of political conference and action. They scarcely ever come to much. They do but little to determine the conduct or the fortune of nations. Paper schemes are not very apt to accelerate, or to impede, the natural course of events—much less schemes that are merely imaginary. When these latter have served their purpose on the Stock Exchange they have done their worst. They have no influence upon the deep current of international affairs.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Czarewitch and Czarevna, arrived at the Northern Terminus at Paris by the Cologne express on Saturday last from Copenhagen. They were received by the Grand Duke Alexis, Prince Orloff, the Russian Ambassador in Paris, and Mr. F. O. Adams, First Secretary to the British Embassy. The King of Denmark had travelled with their Royal Highnesses to Frankfort-on-Maine, where he took leave of the Royal family, and proceeded to Gmünden, to join the Queen of Denmark on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland. Prince Leopold arrived at Sheffield on Saturday last from Balmoral. The Prince was received at the Victoria railway station by Mr. Mark Firth and by the Mayor and Corporation. An address was presented and gracefully responded to by his Royal Highness, after which he drove with his host, Mr. Firth, to Oak Brook, the local volunteers and yeomanry forming guard and escort. The Prince opened Firth College at Sheffield on Monday in the presence of a large assemblage of those interested in higher education. The college, which is to be a local home of University education, has been erected at a cost of £20,000, and is the gift of Mr. Mark Firth to the town. In addition to providing the college, he has also given £5000 towards an endowment fund, and this fund now reaches £15,000 towards the £25,000 required. Mr. Mark Firth presented the deed of gift to the Prince, who acknowledged it in an eloquent speech, after which he handed the trust deed of the college to Mr. T. Roberts, jun., who received it on behalf of the trustees. His Royal Highness, on behalf of the subscribers, then presented to Mr. Mark Firth a portrait, bust, and a cheque for £1500, as a testimonial in recognition of his benefactions. The £1500 will be devoted to the foundation of the Firth scholarships in connection with the college. The Prince, on leaving the college, went to the Cutlers' Hall, where the Cutlers' Company and the Town Trustees presented addresses to his Royal Highness, after which he was entertained at luncheon by the Mayor and Corporation in the hall, and afterwards visited Firth Park, opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales four years since. The day was kept as a general holiday, and the Prince was greeted by all with the utmost enthusiasm. Prince Leopold had a busy day on Tuesday, visiting the principal steel, cutlery, and electro-plating works at Sheffield, and witnessing the rolling of a steel plate for one of her Majesty's ships, and the Bessemer process of making steel. In the evening he attended a ball given by his host, Mr. Firth. On Wednesday the Prince visited the St. George's Museum, Walkley, founded by Mr. Ruskin.

The Queen presented to her godchild a massive gilt cup beautifully embossed, on which were engraved the names of the little girl and of her godmother, "Victoria R. and I."

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Mr. John Edward Gordon, son of Lord Gordon of Drumearn, was married to Elizabeth Anna, daughter of Mr. John Snowdon Henry, late M.P. for South-East Lancashire, on Saturday last, at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. George Prothero, assisted by the Rev. F. W. Farrar, D.D., Canons of Westminster. The church was crowded in every part by the children from Bethnal-green, Spitalfields, the Borough Home, the London Medical Mission, &c., who testified by various tokens their affection for the bride and bridegroom, who had for many years taken a warm interest in their welfare. The bride's dress was of ivory satin, trimmed with old point d'Alençon. The only ornaments were bouquets and tendrils of natural exotic flowers. The bridesmaids, Miss Morley and Miss Sybil Dyke, wore costumes of ivory plush and cashmere, plush caps trimmed with Mechlin lace, and white heather and ivy, the badge of the Clan Gordon. The gifts numbered nearly 200, and included many from the children of different schools and homes, and old servants of both families.

A marriage is arranged between Mr. Charles Stuart Wortley, younger son of the Right Hon. James Stuart Wortley, Q.C., formerly Recorder of London and Solicitor-General, and Miss Beatrice Trollope, daughter of Mr. T. Adolphus Trollope.

TORPEDO WARFARE DEMONSTRATIONS.

An interesting performance for the instruction of the naval and military services in the use of torpedoes and submarine mines took place on the night of Thursday, the 16th ult., in front of the shore to the west of Portsmouth harbour, below Haslar Hospital, where Fort Monckton and Fort Gilkicker command the roadstead of Spithead. These forts are supported by Southsea Castle on the eastern side of the entrance to Portsmouth, also by the Spit Fort and several other batteries, along the shores of a bay two miles wide by more than a mile in radius, which no hostile fleet could enter. The western shore, which is immediately opposite Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, is protected by a stone wall and causeway against the encroachments of the sea. At the harbour end is Blockhouse Fort, which commands the fairway; at the other end Fort Monckton defends the entrance from the west and prevents a landing at any part of the wall. The plan of the mimic warfare on Thursday week may now be explained. It was supposed that a fleet of the enemy's ironclads had forced the passage of the Needles and run the gauntlet of Hurst Castle, and was preparing to make a night attack upon the dockyard and ships. Before the fleet, however, was able to command the dockyard, it was necessary that a passage should be cleared through a channel defended by submarine mines, supplemented by various kinds of obstructions, floating and fixed. The fort at Gilkicker and all batteries on the shore were supposed to have been silenced by the fire of the enemy's ships. The only heavy artillery remaining for the defence of the mines was some of the guns of Fort Monckton. But these were supported by a battery of field artillery (the L battery of the fourth brigade, from Hillsea), and two battalions of infantry, represented by a couple of detachments of ninety men each, furnished by the 24th Regiment and the Royal Marines, under the command of Major Keough, of the 12th Foot. On the water the defenders had four guard-boats, manned by marines and bluejackets, under the command of Captain Dowding, of the Asia. At the moment of the attack the enemy was understood to have cleared a passage through the advanced mines 120 yards wide up to a point within range of the defenders' guns, and was about to dispatch boats forward to remove obstructions and to open by countermining, or by other means, a channel for his fleet through the remainder of the defended approach. Hence the contest which we are describing between the Royal Engineers and the navy, which latter force was represented by the Bloodhound, Vesuvius, and Lightning, and six launches from the Vernon and Hecla, the whole being under the command of Captain Gordon, R.N.

The channel, the possession of which was so obstinately contested, was bordered on one side by the sea-wall already mentioned the other side being an imaginary line, indicated by the Speedy and Medina, tenders, which were moored at wide intervals, and exhibited lanterns in their rigging. The defended area measured 1800 yards long and 800 yards broad. The attacking vessels were obliged to pass over it, breaking out from it either at the end or the sides. In contiguity with the farther or imaginary boundary line there was supposed to be a channel 150 yards wide for the use of friendly or neutral craft entering or leaving the port. The engineers were obliged to preserve the freedom of the channel, at the same time that they secured its defence. This they accomplished by sinking a number of "observation" mines, which would not explode by either mechanical or electrical contact, but only from connection with the shore after cross bearings had shown that the enemy had approached within the range of the submarine mines. While these conditions rendered them dangerous only to an enemy, the depth at which they were sunk enabled vessels to pass over without coming into collision with them. The remaining breadth of the channel was closed, and it was here that the most exciting part of the contest took place. Close in shore a number of mechanical mines had been dropped as a precaution against the passage of small "creeping" craft. These torpedoes exploded by mere percussion, automatically, and without any assistance from the shore. Nearer the middle of the locked channel, and a little farther removed from the point of entrance, three nests of buoyant torpedoes had been fixed. These were fired by electric contact the moment the enemy's boats completed the circuit by bumping against them. It may thus be imagined that the defences were of a very formidable character, especially as their whereabouts could only be determined by "creeping." This was accomplished by means of grapnels, dragged over the ground where the mines were supposed to be. As soon as the hook fastened upon the moorings of a torpedo or its cable, a small charge of gun-cotton, contained in a canister fixed inside the grapnel, would explode, and the torpedo would be rendered impotent by the fracture of its connections. The Royal Engineers had adopted the unusual precaution of placing a colossal boom, 600 yards long and ten inches square, across the closed channel, so that none of the electric cables could be approached until this unexpected barrier had been removed. It was at this point that the battle culminated. A brilliant ray of electric light was kept constantly playing upon the boom from a lantern worked by seventy Grove's cells and stationed onboard a boat moored at its shore extremity. The attacking small craft were supposed to be well peppered from the shore, the infantry, stationed on the right and left flanks of the fort, and also within the curtain, keeping up an imaginary fusillade, while the guns and field-pieces on the parapet directed an imaginary mitraille of case and shrapnel over the whole area. Colonel Shaw, R.E., was in chief command of the land defences; Captain John Ramsay, R.E. (the officer in command of the submarine miners), was in special charge of the torpedo arrangements.

In reality, it need not be said, the submarine mines and countermines were harmless. The charges in each case were supposed to represent 500 lb. of gun-cotton, and to be worth £50 each. As the explosion of torpedoes of this size would be not only extremely dangerous, but much too expensive, imagination was largely brought into play. Each mine and counter-mine was provided with a "blowing charge" consisting of a couple of pounds of powder, the exploding of which, either by concussion or electrical contact, being visible, was sufficient to show that the engine was operative and had accomplished its work. Every boat, therefore, which detonated a charge was supposed to have been blown to pieces, and every boat which was found to be within a radius of 30 feet of the explosion was obliged to retire from the contest in a disabled condition. The electric light was very largely employed. The lights afloat were on the Wilde principle, while two on the bastions of the fort were generated by a D Gramme and a Siemens machine. One of the guard-boats carried an M Gramme machine: the light at the boom was worked by a battery formed of Grove's cells.

The attacking flotilla, which had assembled at the harbour rendezvous at nine o'clock in the evening, began cautiously feeling their way into the protected waters from the south-west. The furnaces were screened as much as possible to prevent the glare of the fires being observed by the defenders, while the vibrations of their engines were so subdued as to make it difficult for the ear to detect their approach. The guard-boats carried white flags at the stern, while the steam-launches were distinguished from each other by boards being lashed across their funnels. Each hit was recorded by a prearranged code of signals, and it was not long before the whole of the six launches belonging to the enemy were signalled out of action. Before the whole flotilla, however, was placed hors de combat, one daring steam-launch was observed to tow a row-boat alongside the booms, to which the inmates succeeded in attaching a charge of dynamite. This was at once exploded, as soon as the hostile craft had retired to a safe distance. The injury was not immediately apparent, but it was subsequently demonstrated to have been sufficiently fractured to allow of the Bloodhound passing through the breach. The Bloodhound itself was the first to begin dropping a line of counter-mines in the midst of the defenders' torpedoes. This was one of a projected double line which was intended to sweep a channel 700 yards in length; but as she afforded a clear and comparatively bulky target for artillery, she was disabled and compelled to retire before she could explode them. The Lightning was equally unlucky, notwithstanding her enormous speed and low hull; the Vesuvius, however, was perfectly successful, and was enabled not only to drop the second line of counter-mines, but to explode them; but whether they fell within the fatal radius of 30 ft. remained to be determined by subsequent examination. At any rate, as the diameter of the destructive energy would only be 60 ft., this was not considered sufficient to admit of the passage of an ironclad. Practically, therefore, the safety of the dockyard was not endangered by the enemy's operations.

We are indebted to an officer of the scientific branch for the sketches that furnish our Illustrations of this affair, which was witnessed by a multitude of spectators from the sea-wall and from the piers at Portsmouth, besides those privileged to stand on the ramparts of Fort Monckton, including the military attachés of several foreign Embassies.

MR. AND MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed present another novelty, in the shape of a clever little sketch entitled "The Pirate's Home," which now forms the first item in their programme. The piece is full of little quaint sayings that irresistibly excite the risible faculties of the audience; and has, moreover, considerable merit in the way of characterisation. The action takes place on a desolate island lying off the western coast, the sole inhabitant of which is one Lonesome George (Mr. Alfred Reed), whose love of solitude has become a chronic affection, and who has, moreover, a natural antipathy to the sound of a human voice. In the indulgence of this propensity he is disturbed by the advent of certain tourists, who make their appearance severally upon the scene, and greatly disturb the equilibrium of his feelings. Assuming the attire of Sir Whipley Creme (Mr. Alfred Bishop), he is mistaken for that worthy by Mrs. Pleyer Cardswell (Miss Lucy Williams), and much merriment is the result of the illusion. The whole is interspersed with a pleasant little love-story, the principals of which are Digby Straigh (Mr. Corney Grain) and Rosie Templeton (Miss Edith Brandon). A misunderstanding taking place in consequence of a bicycle, and the letters between the parties having been intercepted, some complication ensues. Ultimately the mists clear away, and a reconciliation is effected. The acting is good. Mr. Corney Grain gives an excellent rendering of Digby Straigh, and Mr. Alfred Reed as Lonesome George is exceedingly amusing. The female interest is admirably supported by Miss Lucy Williams and Miss Edith Brandon. The Sir Whipley Creme of Mr. Alfred Bishop is also a noteworthy performance. The piece is written by Gilbert A Beckett, and the music composed by Vivian Bligh. Following this comes Mr. Corney Grain's new musical sketch "A Quiet Visit," in which that gentleman's vocal and instrumental abilities are exhibited to the intense delight of the audience.

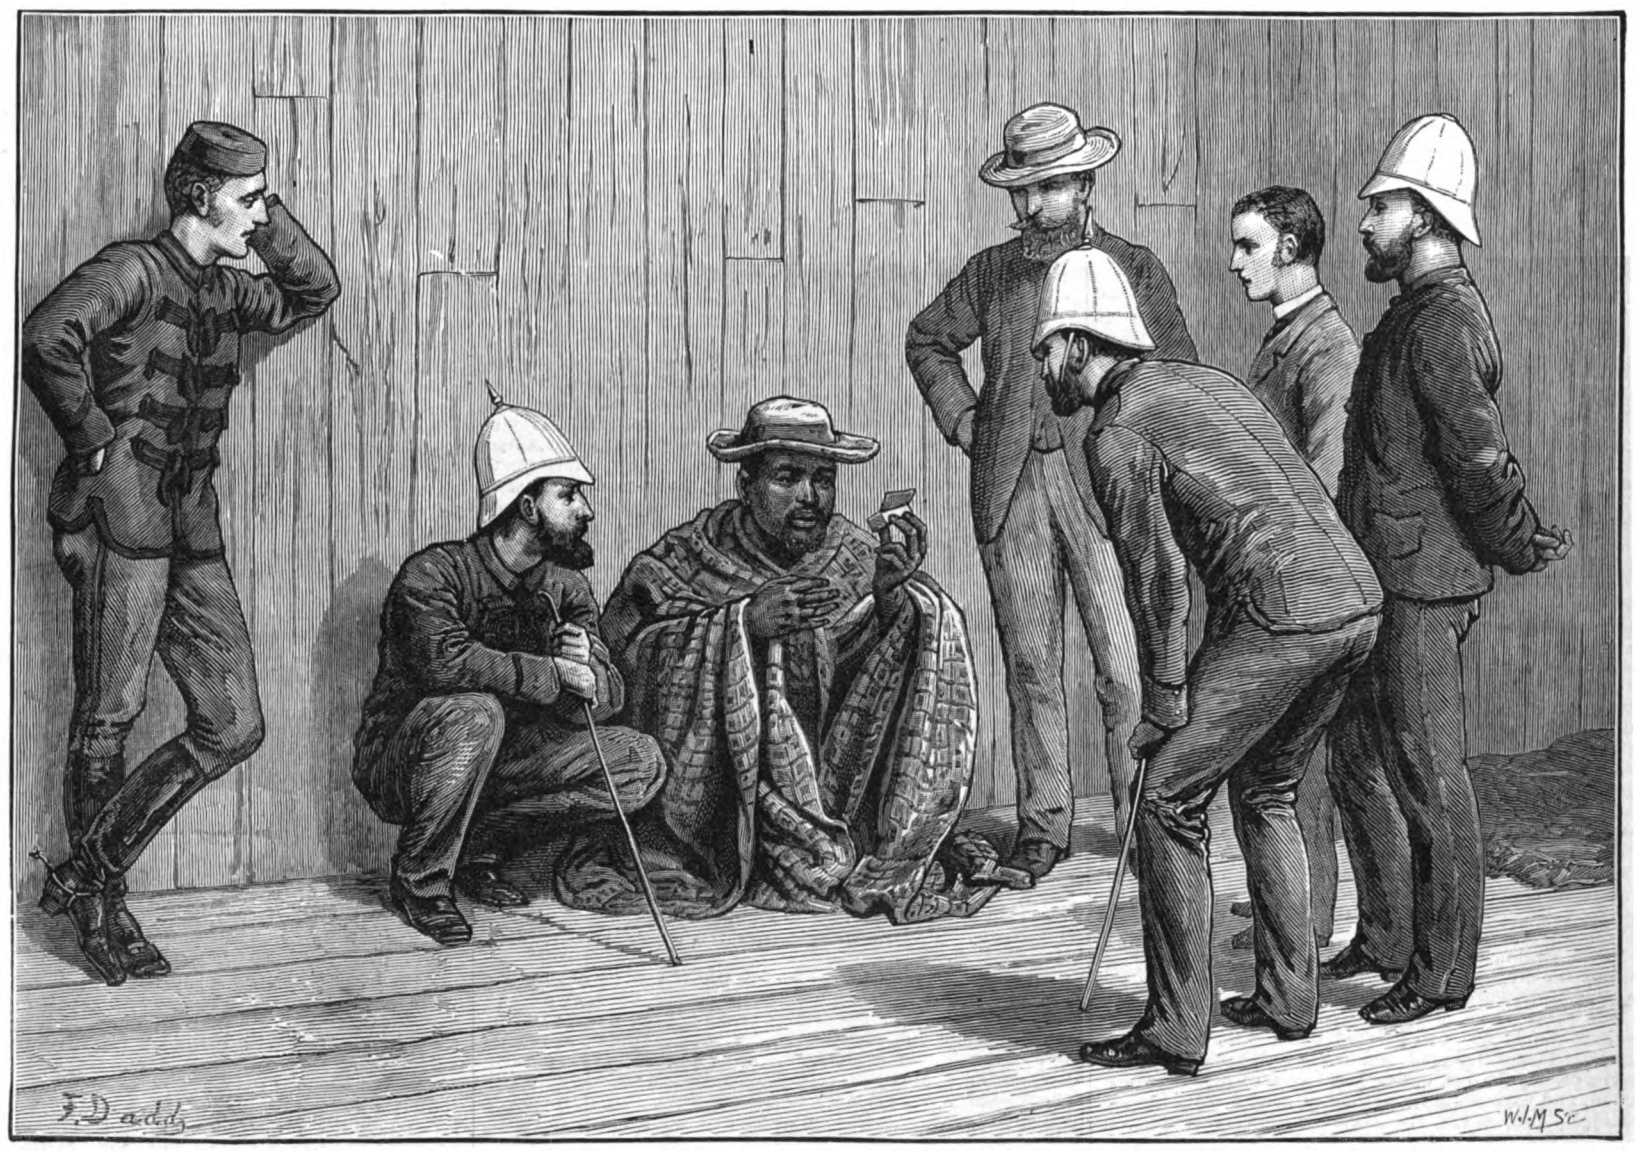
Mr. W. J. Metcalfe, Q.C., has been appointed Judge of the Bristol County Court, in the room of the late Mr. Fisher.

The Mayor of Crewe paid into the bank £500 towards providing a public park for the town, the donation being made in lieu of giving banquets during his year of office.

Professor Max Müller gave on Monday the opening address of the session in connection with the Birmingham and Midland Institute, of which he is president for the year. The lecture was delivered in the Townhall, which was crowded, and was preceded by the distribution of the prizes to the successful students of last session.

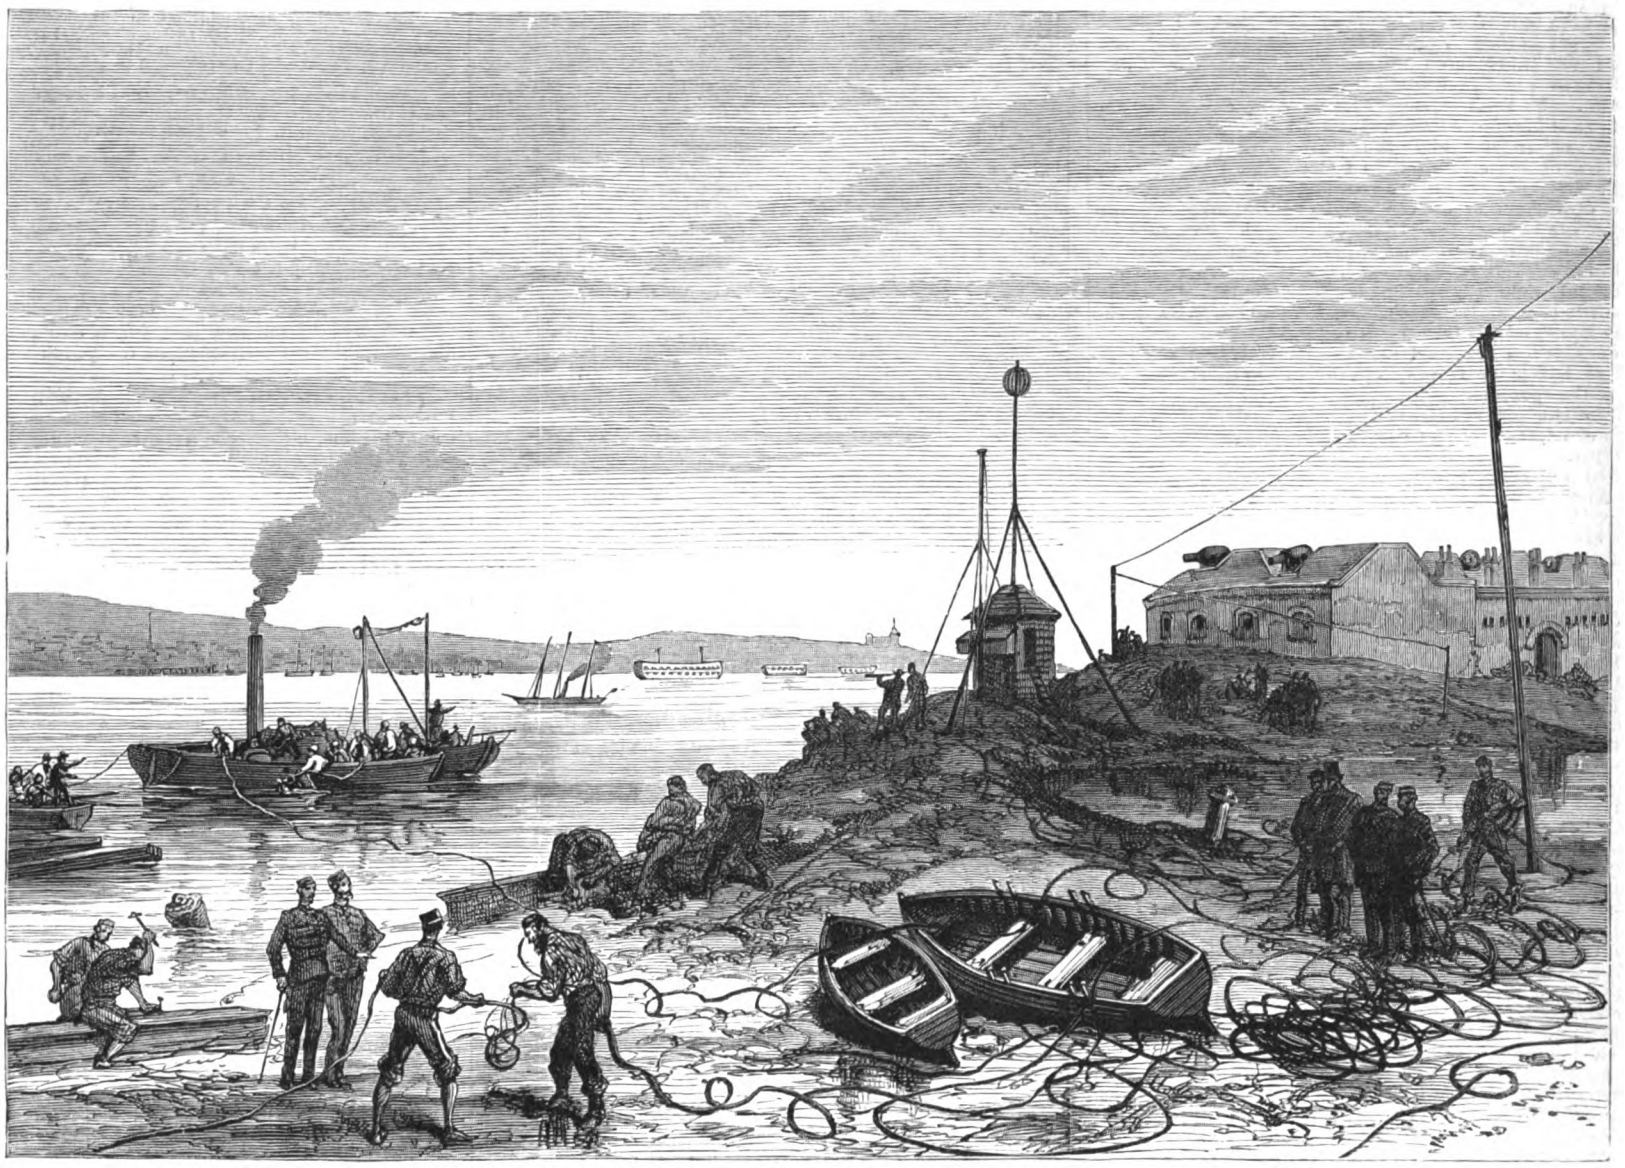
The East Suffolk Chamber of Agriculture on Tuesday discussed the agricultural depression, amongst the speakers being Colonel Barne, M.P., Lord Waveney, and Mr. F. S. Corrace. A resolution was passed affirming that the burdens imposed by law on agriculture were a serious disadvantage in competition with the foreigner.

The exhibition of paintings at the Manchester Royal Institution was opened to the public, free of charge, on Sunday afternoon. The Mayor and other members of the Corporation, who were present, expressed themselves highly gratified with the result of the experiment, not a single complaint being made against any individual, although 4194 persons, representing all classes of society, passed the turnstile.



It is proposed to unite Liverpool and Birkenhead by a subway under the Mersey twenty-nine feet wide and two miles long, estimated to cost half a million. The Birkenhead Corporation promise to guarantee one fourth the capital, and the other three fourths, it is hoped, may be guaranteed by the Mersey Docks Board, railways interested, and the Liverpool Corporation.

At a meeting of the Town Council of Inverness held on the 16th inst., it was unanimously resolved to present the freedom of the burgh to Mr. John Bright, M.P., who was then residing in the district. A deputation waited on the right hon. gentleman, who expressed his thanks for the intended honour, but said he could not accept it at present, as he went south the next day. It was also resolved to confer the freedom of the burgh on Mr. Duncan McLaren, M.P.



At the congress of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, held in the Manchester Townhall last September, Mr. John Heywood, of that city, and of 18, Paternoster-square, London, exhibited some oak reading-cases of all sizes, which were much approved. A case prepared by the firm for preserving copies of this paper (why is the word "Illustrated" omitted in the title affixed?), though somewhat cumbrous, has a neat appearance, and is, of course, durability itself.

The Sanitary Congress assembled on Tuesday at Croydon, where the proceedings opened with a luncheon. Mr. Drummond, who presided, pointed out that the object of the institute was the promotion of a knowledge of sanitary science, and the appointment of qualified officers as local inspectors, who were not to obtain such appointments until after an examination. An exhibition of sanitary manufactures was afterwards held; and in the evening the address at the opening of the Congress was delivered by Dr. B. W. Richardson.

THE OCCUPATION OF CABUL.

The Ameer Yakoob Khan has abdicated, leaving to the British-Indian Empire the grave responsibility of either nominating a successor to the rule of Afghanistan, or undertaking the government of that half-conquered and distracted country. The British military occupation of its capital has met with no further opposition from the natives, or from the broken remnant of the Afghan army; but a sinister accident, the explosion of the great magazine of ammunition in the Bala Hissar, with the destruction of a vast quantity of arms and stores, has excited much alarm in the city, though happily few lives were lost by this disaster.

General Sir F. Roberts has reported to the Indian Government that his entry into Cabul produced a favourable impression. The Ameer pleaded indisposition as a reason for not accompanying the British Commander on the occasion. Immediately after entering the city, on the 12th inst., General Roberts issued a proclamation warning the people against resistance and declaring that the British Government is desirous of tempering justice with mercy, and will therefore spare the city. Martial law is proclaimed in Cabul and the neighbouring district within a distance of ten miles. A Military Governor will be appointed, whom the people are warned to obey. A heavy fine will be levied on the citizens, the precise amount of which will be notified hereafter. A general disarmament is ordered, and a searching inquiry is to be made into the circumstances of the outbreak. Finally, the proclamation offers a reward for the surrender of the persons implicated or for information leading to the capture of those concerned in the outrage.

A force of British troops of all arms marched through the city on the 13th inst.

The Afghan troops who left Ghuzni to join the mutineers at Cabul have dispersed, abandoning twelve guns, to secure which a detachment of troops has been dispatched by General Roberts.

Eighty-five guns and mortars were found in the Bala Hissar, together with a large quantity of arms and ammunition for Snider rifles, the ammunition having been apparently manufactured in the country.

The explosion of the Balar Hissar magazine took place on Thursday, the 16th, about noon, but was followed by smaller explosions. Captain Shafto, R.A., with a Subadar Major, three havildars, and a dozen men of the 5th Goorkhas, and one soldier of the 67th Regiment, were killed. The troops have been removed from the Bala Hissar and encamped on the Siah Sung, outside the city. The cause of the explosion is not known.

A formal inquiry has been commenced into the circumstances of the attack on the Residency and murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari and his companions on Sept. 3. It is stated that the road from Jellalabad, through Jugdulluck and the Khoord Cabul, is open, and that General Gough will send a flying column to Cabul immediately.

The country of the Ghilzais is still unsettled, but the victory at Charasiab has produced a marked change in the attitude of the Khan of Lalpura. The hostile tribes between Ali Kheyl and the Shutargardan seem to be dispersing. An expedition has been sent to relieve the garrison of an outpost in the Naga hills.

CETEWAYO IN CAPETOWN CASTLE.

We have to thank Mr. Cecil Woodmass, a Lieutenant attached to the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, for his sketch of the interview of a party of officers of the army lately in Zululand, with the captive Zulu King in the castle at Capetown. The gentlemen admitted to visit Cetewayo upon this occasion were, besides our correspondent, Lieutenant H. M. Nuthall, of the 58th Regiment, the Hon. Rupert Carington, of the Grenadier Guards, and Mr. T. F. Kynnersley-Gardner, of Lonsdale's Horse. The King was accompanied by Captain Ruscombe Poole, R.A., who has the charge of him, and by Mr. Longcast, the interpreter, as he knows only the Zulu language. His Majesty was robed in a checker-patterned table-cloth, and wore a wideawake hat; he squatted or sat on the floor with his knees drawn up, and his chin resting upon one hand over the knees, which is a Zulu habit; and he seemed rather in a sulky humour. But he shook hands, and responded to the remarks that were made about his voyage and arrival at Capetown, and seemed to feel an interest in hearing that several of his visitors were at the battle of Ulundi, and that everybody admired the bravery of the Zulus in the late war. He accepted from Mr. Nuthall a snuffbox, which Captain Poole showed him how to open, and he applied his nose to the snuff with an exclamation of approval. Mr. Rupert Carington also gave him some cigarettes, which were likewise accepted; and, after shaking hands again with Cetewayo, the visitors took their leave. In the sketch we have engraved Captain Poole appears seated beside Cetewayo, and Lieutenant Nuthall bends forward to speak with him, having just handed him the snuffbox.

THE EVACUATION OF ZULULAND.

The very last British army corps has now quitted the country bounded by the Tugela, the Blood River, and the Pongolo, which was lately the independent Zulu Kingdom. It is to be divided into six or seven native principalities, each under a vassal chieftain owning the paramount supremacy of the British Government, with a Political Resident for North Zululand, and one for South Zululand, who will not interfere with the ordinary administration, beyond enforcing the prohibitions stipulated for by Sir Garnet Wolseley. The chiefs are not to be allowed to keep up standing armies, to put any person to death for witchcraft, or to import firearms and ammunition. They will not permit European settlers to buy land of the Zulus, and they may, if they think fit, exclude foreign traders and Christian missionaries of the white race. One of the chiefs, who possesses a large and valuable district adjoining Natal, is Mr. John Dunn. He is the son of a Scottish medical practitioner in Natal, and was fairly educated, but chose a wild, free life among the Zulus, with whom he has dwelt since his youth. Being an adopted member of the Zulu native community, and never a professing Christian, he has not scrupled to marry a plurality of wives, this condition being indispensable to a man of social respectability among the Zulus; and he obtained the rank of an Induna, with all the privileges of chieftainship, from the personal favour of Cetewayo, to whom he rendered some important services. It has been wrongly supposed that Mr. Dunn was to be appointed a British Resident, or representative of her Majesty's Government in Zululand. This is not the fact, and there seems to be no reason why he should not be recognised as a Zulu chief, on equal terms with the others who have signed the engagement imposed by Sir Garnet Wolseley. Our Illustration this week, from one of our Special Artist's Sketches during the late military campaign, shows the scene on the road in the march of a baggage-train, when some of the laden waggons, drawn by teams of twelve or even sixteen bullocks, have come to a standstill in going up a steep hill, and the soldiers are compelled to push behind, or put their shoulders to the wheel.

KAFFIR WOMEN AT PIETERMARITZBURG.

The British province of Natal, which has a native African population of nearly 300,000, and scarcely 20,000 Europeans, may be considered rather as a Kaffir and Zulu protectorate, than as a colony of our own people. Its British element, though it has belonged to her Majesty's dominions thirty-three years, does not seem to grow much more considerable; and in this respect it offers a striking contrast to New Zealand, where the two races are in a reverse proportion to each other. The Zulus of Natal have lived, for an entire generation, under the rule of a civilised government; yet their social and moral condition remains just the same as that of the Zulus, about equal in number, who were subjects of Panda and Cetewayo in the adjacent kingdom. A few converts have been made, and some hundreds of children educated, by the efforts of religious missionaries, both Church of England and Wesleyan; but heathenism still prevails, with polygamy and the slavery of the female sex, tolerated by colonial law. The native people in general, throughout the up-country districts, living in associated tribes under their own chiefs, and possessing herds of cattle with ample pasture, will not take employment from European farmers or planters. It has therefore been found necessary to import some thousands of coolies from India for the work of sugar cultivation along the coast. This produce, in 1875, amounted to no more than £100,000 in value, while that of coffee and other tropical growths was scarcely anything; and the apparent exports of Natal really consisted, in great part, of the wool, hides, ivory, and other natural products of the upland plains in the interior. Such is the backward industrial condition of Natal and so poor its prospects of developing any independent and substantial resources of wealth that it cannot be expected to join in a South African confederation bearing its fair share of financial burdens. The Zulus, however, in and about the towns of Durban and Pietermaritzburg, are disposed to take light household and street work, though they will not toil in the fields. Mr. Anthony Trollope speaks of their carrying his portmanteau, running an errand, or holding a horse for sixpence; they will scrub floors, sweep the roads, tend pigs, and the like, and the women enter domestic service. Our Special Artist lately in Natal saw Kaffir women selling pieces of sugar-cane, which is greedily sucked by their own countrymen. The squatting figure of an Indian coolie, of whom the English little girl is buying fruit, appears at the left-hand corner of his sketch.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

President Grévy was waited upon last Saturday by the Franco-American Committee, who were introduced by M. Foucher de Carill. M. Waddington and M. Léon Say were present. M. SPAIN.

There have been serious floods in Spain, attended with great loss of life. The evening of Tuesday, the 14th inst., was ushered in by a heavy storm, accompanied by torrents of rain, which swept across the provinces of Malaga, Granada, and Seville, making itself specially felt in Murcia and in the broad basin of the Segura, which lies embosomed between mountain ranges. Under ordinary conditions, the storm would have spent itself without further damage than the possible destruction of crops and vineyards. But in the valley referred to no sufficient means existed for the escape of the torrents which came tumbling down the mountain sides, and the beds of the rivers and streams, though at this season for the most part dry, afforded no sufficient channels for the volumes of water poured into them. The stormed raged without intermission for seven hours, and by midnight the streams had overflowed their banks and began to inundate the plain. During the two hours which followed the floods continued to rise, and the villages and mills which cover the plain were first flooded, and then in many instances swept completely away. Terrified by the rising deluge, and absolutely destitute of the means of escape, the inhabitants sought refuge in the upper stories of their houses; but in too many cases the foundations proved insufficient to support the strain, and habitations and inhabitants were engulfed. In the towns of Malaga and Murcia the streets were converted into rapid rivers. The gas was extinguished, and the total darkness not only added to the general panic, but considerably increased the dangers to which the unfortunate inhabitants were exposed. Torches were improvised by the municipal authorities, and by the most strenuous exertions many lives were saved which must otherwise have been sacrificed. From one village it is reported that the Curé alone succeeded in saving himself by taking refuge in the belfry of his church. In the town of Murcia nearly one hundred and fifty corpses have been found. The greatest losses both to life and property occurred, however, in the villages and fields which covered the broad expanse of the valley. Not only have the crops been completely destroyed, but movable property of every description, including household effects, mill machinery, and agricultural implements, have been swept away by the floods. Further details state that 2000 houses have been destroyed, that 570 dead bodies have been found, and that it is believed that more than 1000 people have lost their lives. An earnest appeal to public charity has been made by the Spanish Government, and large donations are coming in. Queen Isabella has subscribed 5000f. for the sufferers. King Alfonso has visited the plain of Murcia and distributed relief among the sufferers.

HOLLAND.

The Budget for the Dutch Indies presented by the Minister for the Colonies to the Second Chamber has been modified. The deficit of 6,000,000 fl. has been reduced by 2,500,000 fl. in consequence of the increased amount of coffee for sale, and the estimated diminution of the expenses of the Dutch troops in Acheen in view of the recent very favourable intelligence received thence. It is probable, therefore, that a loan will be superfluous. Among the items in the Budget are a subsidy for the steam-packet service to Java and China, and a grant for the education of officers for the army in the Dutch Indies.

The Second Chamber of the States General has adopted, by 45 votes against 15, the proposal for the entire abolition of flogging in the navy.

Prussia's matriculatory contribution to the Exchequer of the German Empire is estimated at 22,000,000 marks. A Berlin telegram says that the final decision of Herr von Bennigsen to accept his re-election to a seat in the Prussian Diet is regarded as essentially strengthening and thereby again bringing into prominence the right wing of the National Liberal party, whose views are more moderate, and who are more inclined to an understanding with the Government.

The Turkish Ministry has resigned, and last Saturday a new Cabinet was formed, in which Said Pasha is Grand Vizier; Sawas Pasha, Minister for Foreign Affairs; Mahmoud Nedim Pasha, Minister of the Interior; Aarifi Pasha, President of the Council; and Safvet Pasha, Director-General of Reforms. A later telegram states that Safvet Pasha had an audience of the Sultan on Sunday, and is reported to have tendered his resignation of his position in the new Cabinet. Osman Pasha, the Times' correspondent states, remains Minister of War. The Sultan, a Reuter's telegram says, has expressed to Sawas Pasha his desire for an amicable arrangement with Greece upon the frontier question. The telegram also states that it is considered probable that the Porte will abandon the project of a new loan which Aarifi Pasha was on the point of contracting

On the announcement of the vote M. Rosetti, President of the Chamber, made a speech stating that the Chamber of Revision had completed its labours. He added that in all the difficult circumstances in which Roumania had been placed there had been no more arduous task than that which had now been overcome. The representatives of the country had repressed their innermost feelings to make this unanimous proclamation of the national will before Europe.

The architect was Ralph Nevill, F.S.A., of Godalming and Gray's Inn, the cost of the whole being borne by the Rector, the Rev. A. Pontifex.

The parish church of Smallbridge, near Rochdale, has been reopened, after having been closed for several weeks in order to be cleaned, repaired, and beautified. An altar-piece, painted by herself, was presented by the wife of the Vicar, Canon Cook. It is executed in oils, and is a representation of "The Last Supper," after Leonardo da Vinci.

St. Peter's, Blackley, has been thoroughly renovated, the chancel enlarged, an organ chamber added, the west-end gallery thrown open to the parishioners, and free sittings increased by one hundred—so that church accommodation has been provided for nearly 1000. The organ has also been enlarged, the entire cost of the works being about £1350.

The Church of St. Barnabas, Warrington, was consecrated last Saturday by the Bishop of Chester. When completed, the structure will consist of a nave, chancel, with aisles, and a handsome spire; but the nave only has at present been built. The service was largely attended by the principal residents of the neighbourhood. This church is the result of a mission which was begun five years ago by Mr. Wilkinson in a cottage in one of the slums which abound in the Bank Quay district. The church is entirely free and open; and it is intended that the Sunday and week-day services shall be arranged so as to meet the special needs of the working classes.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol began his visitation on Tuesday at Gloucester Cathedral. His Lordship combated the evolution theory, and advised that modern phases of unbelief should be met by a broad statement of the basis of Christian faith.—The Bishop will continue the charge to-morrow. The Peterborough Diocesan Conference was opened the same day, the Bishop presiding. The Bishop of Ely opened an Archidiaconal Conference at Cambridge.

An arrangement has been made under which the society has undertaken the whole cost of building and maintaining the Church College at Tottenham, for one hundred students, the National Society making a contribution of £2000 towards the expense already incurred, and transferring the property without reserve to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

At the Miners' Conference in Leeds on the 15th inst. the emigration scheme was under consideration. It was agreed that the scheme should be a national one, and not worked in connection with the Miners' National Association. The sum of £6 will be allowed to a member going to America and £12 to one going to Australia or New Zealand. On the 16th the rules of the newly-formed National Emigration Association, which were discussed on the previous day, were adopted by the conference, and ordered to be printed. The delegates connected with the Miners' National Union subsequently revised the rules of that body.

Mr. W. E. Forster, M.P., as president for the year of the Salt Schools, delivered his inaugural address at Saltaire on the 16th inst., and spoke of the provision for secondary education in this country generally. He thought it would be found that there was a great want of really good education for the poorer section of the middle class. But the question arose how was this want to be provided for? He did not think the State would undertake the cost of dealing with the subject, as it had dealt with that of primary education; nor did he think it would be necessary for the State to deal with it. The time had come, however, when the friends of education should consider the subject.—Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, M.P., at Nottingham the same day distributed the prizes and certificates to the successful students at the lectures and classes in connection with the University extension scheme. The Hon. Henry Strutt, M.P., presided, and said that since the scheme was inaugurated in the town, seven years ago, 8200 tickets had been issued, representing nearly 100,000 possible attendances at the lectures and classes.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"Mr. Dick," in "David Copperfield," experienced an insurmountable difficulty in excluding some reference to Charles the First's head from the Memorial which he was continually drawing up. One of the difficulties of Editors just now is to keep the head of Henry Grey, Duke of Suffolk, out of the newspapers. The grisly cranium of the nobleman who was beheaded on Tower Hill in Burning Queen Mary's time, for his participation in Sir Thomas Wyatt's rebellion, has been haunting the public during at least three weeks of the "silly season." The archæologists have been at loggerheads over this caput mortuum. It has been called "a neglected relic." Proposals have been made to exhibit it in a glass case at the National Portrait Gallery. Altogether, the Duke of Suffolk's head has grown to be somewhat of an infliction.

Referring to "Mr. Dick" again, you will remember that when Miss Betsy Trotwood solemnly asked what she should do with poor, dusty, ragged, footsore, neglected, destitute David Copperfield, who had fled to his aunt for protection, the eccentric memorialist, after attentively contemplating the deplorable object before him, replied, "I should wash him." Paraphrasing "Mr. Dick," I should say that the best thing to do with the Duke of Suffolk's head would be to bury it. This whilom wearer of a ducal coronet was neither a remarkable nor an agreeable nobleman. He rebelled at the wrong time, and the head which he lost was the reverse of a wise one. Moreover, he and his Duchess cruelly ill-treated their beautiful, accomplished, and virtuous daughter, Lady Jane Grey, with "nips, bobs, and pinches" (to use Lady Jane's own words), and other little Spartan severities, which formed an integral part of domestic discipline in the eighteenth century. The poor girl used to rejoice when the hour arrived for her to read Greek with her tutor, good Master Roger Ascham. He taught her to construe her Testament, and her Plato too, without having any recourse to "nips, bobs, and pinches."

Mem: Touching the "heads of the headless" I may mention that, in a disused burying-ground just behind the house which I inhabit, there moulder the headless corses of Fletcher, Deacon, Chadwick, Berwick, Syddal, Blood, Morgan, and Dawson—Shenstone's "Jemmy" Dawson—all hanged, drawn, and quartered on Kennington-common for participation in the rebellion of 1745-6. Dawson, Blood, and Morgan's heads were given up to their friends. The rest were exposed—two at Manchester Cross and two at Carlisle. The headless trunk of the gallant Colonel Towneley, a Lancashire gentleman of long descent, who commanded the Manchester regiment in the Pretender's service, was buried in old St. Pancras churchyard. The Colonel's head was, I have heard, until very lately, preserved in a glass case in the drawing-room of a London mansion, the property of a lineal descendant of the ill-fated Jacobite gentleman who was slaughtered at Kennington. I think that this interesting relic has since received reverent interment.

Mr. Archibald Forbes is prosperously pursuing his lecturing tour in the provinces. Somebody has sent me from Southport, "the Ramsgate of the North-West"—am I right in likening Southport to Ramsgate?—an illustrated journal containing a capital lithographed portrait of Mr. Forbes and an enthusiastic "copy of verses" about his exploits. Of another distinguished journalist do I also hear as about to make his appearance on the lecturing platform. Mr. Henry Sutherland Edwards, special correspondent, novelist, dramatist, essayist, and musical critic, is to lecture on Monday next, at Steinway Hall, on "The Opera." I think that Mr. Edwards once wrote a history of the Opera; in any case, there are few living writers so well qualified as he is to discourse on the subject of the lyric drama.

Mr. Vernon Heath has been writing to the Times to complain that, while plenty of information has recently been made public touching the size and height of memorable English trees, it is extremely difficult to obtain any accurate data—or, indeed, any data at all—respecting the age and history of our monarchs of the forest. This is especially the case with regard to that wondrously beauteous woodland tract, Burnham Beeches. I happened to stumble the other day over a whole treasury of picturesque lore on the subject about which Mr. Vernon Heath is so inquisitive. This is a book entitled "Sylva Britannica; or, portraits of English forest trees," by George Jacob Strutt, and is illustrated by a number of exquisitely beautiful etchings of trees. In this delightful tome (to which is appended a "Sylva Scotica," or account of the forest-trees of North Britain, portraits and historic biographies are given of all of our most renowned trees—from the Panshanger and the Wotton to the Creeping and the Cowthorpe oak; from the Chipstead to the Tutbury wych elm; from the Tortworth chestnut, which, when Mr. Strutt wrote, was the oldest tree in England, to the aged chestnut in Cobham Park known as "the Four Sisters;" from the cedars at the Palace School, Enfield, to the Great Cedar at Hammersmith House. I notice one omission—that of the superb cedars of Lebanon at Pope's Villa, Twickenham. This (to me) fascinating book bears no date; but looking through the list of subscribers (mine is a large-paper copy, and I had to pay rather a "stiff" price for it) and finding therein the names of "The King's most Excellent Majesty" and his "Royal Highness the Duke of York," I am inclined to think that "Sylva Britannica" first saw the light about 1826. The book ought to be reprinted, and the plates—if they are not accessible—reproduced by the autotype process.

Mem.: If you ever ponder over the question as to what becomes of all the old engraved copper-plates, of which many thousands have disappeared from human ken, I should advise you to read M. Arsène Houssaye's "Life and Works of Jacques Callot." In M. Houssaye's amusing pages you will find that the mother of Madame Graffigny, a grandniece of the famous etcher, who inherited a portion of his belongings, sent a large number of Callot's finest plates to a copper-founder, to be by him transformed into pots and pans for culinary use. Another of Callot's next of kin had some of his illustrious relative's plates made into a basin for shaving purposes. The Prince de Craon purchased this most "barber-ous" basin for a large price, and preserved it as a curiosity in his picture-gallery.

I received the other day a post-card bearing a Cornish post-mark, and mildly reproaching me with so frequently mentioning the drama in this column. "Theatres," my anonymous mentor solemnly remarked, "have been a nest of ruin to many." That may be. I will promise my anonymous post-card sender not to say a word about things theatrical for a long time to come; but this week I must really crave indulgence in drawing attention to two dramatic performances which are to take place at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, on the evenings of Oct. 30 and Nov. 6. The performances are to consist of the comedy of "Where there's a Will there's a Way," and selections from "Hamlet." It may soften the ire of those who object to the drama if I hint that the performance of which I am speaking will be an amateur one. The ladies and gentlemen who will take part in it are, I think, mostly neighbours of mine, and the entertainment will be for the benefit of a most admirable charity called the Hospital for Sick Children, in Great Ormond-street. POLITICAL.

The Illustrated London News for April 13, 1872, contained a page Engraving of that triumph of Conservative organisation, the display of gay flags and banners, and the presentation to Lord Beaconsfield (then Mr. Disraeli) of numberless addresses of fealty in the spacious Pomona Palace of Manchester. Odious though the comparison may be, it is fair to question whether, even with the advantage of being a Minister in power instead of in Opposition, the Marquis of Salisbury has, seven years later, scored for his party so brilliant a success at Manchester as the Prime Minister did on the memorable occasion to which we allude. Easier by far is it, however, to criticise than to construct and defend a policy. The Foreign Secretary had to undergo several ordeals. To begin with, the noble Marquis on the morning of Friday week received an outspoken address from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and in the early part of his reply he named the gigantic armaments as the main cause of the increase in protective duties abroad, and expressed the hope that time would bring enlightenment to the countries wherein free trade was discountenanced; but when the Foreign Secretary came to refer to the prayer for action in the direction of reducing foreign duties on home products, whilst promising that every effort should be made to bring about the reduction, he insinuated that to the abandonment of protective duties by previous Governments without negotiating for reciprocal repeals on the part of other Powers might be attributed our unsatisfactory fiscal relations with other countries. This flavour of "Reciprocity" was not altogether palatable to some of his hearers; but his Lordship had the meeting with him again when he stated that the Indian cotton duties were "in principle wrong, and ought not to be allowed to continue," although the Indian Famine necessitated their retention at present. His Lordship, with Mr. Cross and Colonel Stanley, next paid a visit to the Exchange, where he was made practically aware of the divergence of political opinion in Manchester; but naught but cheers greeted the Foreign Secretary at the luncheon given him in the Conservative Club in the afternoon, and at the banquet in the Free Trade Hall in the evening. Mr. J. W. Maclure, the Conservative Marshal of the whole demonstration, took the chair at this banquet; and Lord Salisbury and Lady Constance Stanley looked down from the balcony on a goodly gathering of Conservative chiefs, including, besides the guest of the evening, Mr. Cross, Colonel Stanley, Mr. Egerton, Lord Wilton, and Lord Cranborne, Mr. H. Birley, M.P., and Mr. Hardcastle, M.P. The formal toasts and responses were in no way notable, if we except an unhappy reference made by Colonel Stanley to the absence of his brother, the Earl of Derby, and the Home Secretary's vague allusions to Lord Hartington's recent compliment to Mr. Parnell. The Marquis of Salisbury spoke with his habitual terseness and clearness, but travelled for the most part over familiar ground. He began with a lively justification of his trenchant circular against the Treaty of San Stefano; and, in eulogising the Berlin Treaty, conducted his admiring listeners on a kind of cheap Cook's excursion to Eastern lands. In this branch of his theme, in brief, he claimed the credit of having "pushed this Bulgaria back from Salonica, we have pushed it back from Adrianople, we have pushed it behind the Balkans, and left the Balkans in the military possession of Turkey as a bulwark for the protection of Constantinople." Turkey had then a pungent reminder that she must reform. There followed the passage which has occasioned more comment in Europe than any other portion of his speech. We quote it:—

> If the Turk fails, remember that Austria is now at Novi-Bazar, and has advanced to the latitude of the Balkans, and that no advance of Russia beyond the Balkans or beyond the Danube can take place unless the resistance of Austria is conquered (Cheers). Austria herself is powerful, and I believe that in the strength and independence of Austria lie the best hopes of European stability and peace (cheers); and what has happened within the last few weeks justifies us in hoping that Austria, if attacked, would not be alone (Renewed cheering). The newspapers say—I know not whether they say rightly—that a defensive alliance has been established between Germany and Austria (Loud cheers). I will not pronounce an opinion as to the accuracy of the information, but I will only say that to all who value the peace of Europe and independence of nations, I may say, without profanity, that it is "good tidings of great joy" (Loud cheers).

The Afghan policy of the Government was next defended tooth and nail, on the score that it was necessary for England to possess the Suleiman range of mountains for the adequate defence of India, and that it was indispensable to have an Envoy at Cabul to counteract the intrigues of Russia. Lord Northbrook was blamed in a manner for not obeying the Government in carrying out these views. The late war was declared to be necessary, the massacre of Sir Louis Cavagnari and suite was deplored, General Roberts's expedition to Cabul referred to, "but the policy in its main lines is not altered: it is defence, not dominion, that we seek." His Lordship found consolation in the fact that the Opposition had no policy to place before the country; and ridiculed the puny land reform suggested by some Liberal orators as promising no more than that "some three years hence, in some particular cases, the farmer will have to pay his rent to two squires instead of one squire." Regarding the Church, Irish Home Rule, and the threatened reversal of our Foreign Policy, the noble Marquis also held that a Liberal Ministry could not be trusted.

Lord Salisbury more than once on Saturday expressed the wish that all his colleagues could have been present with him to witness what he termed the "magnificent demonstration of opinion in favour of the Conservative cause," which on the face of it drew "Conservative working men in their thousands" to the Pomona Gardens and Palace. But, from the fact that the noise was so great that very little the Foreign Secretary said could be heard by the great majority of the Saturday half-holiday makers, the value of the Pomona demonstration may not, perhaps, be rated so high as it was in his Lordship's figure of speech. The Pomona Gardens are to Manchester what Cremorne used to be to London, save that the dancing resort at Manchester is far more popular. Free admission to the gardens, therefore, may of itself be deemed no ordinary inducement to vast numbers to visit them; and this remark is, of course, as applicable to Liberal as it is to Conservative assemblages. Lady Salisbury, Lady Wilton, and Lady Constance Stanley graced the platform on Saturday, as well as their liege lords. About a hundred laudatory addresses from Lancashire Conservative Associations were presented to Lord Salisbury, who was congratulated for bringing about "Peace with Honour," and sympathised with on account of the "unpatriotic opposition" he had had to encounter. The noble Marquis (who had in the morning been entertained at luncheon by the Carlton Club) had to satisfy himself with a very brief speech, the tumult being stronger than his penetrating voice. When a factious Opposition had attacked them the Government had found support in the people who were true to "the good old cause." They would still maintain "the Church and the Monarchy" intact, and uphold the "national honour." In phrases rather than in facts, it will be seen, did the Foreign Secretary indulge, his one solid argument being that the Ministry had kept this country out of war with Russia, whereas, twenty-five years ago, a Liberal Ministry had drifted into a war with that Empire. Colonel Stanley having striven to make himself heard in the same strain, the zealous and indefatigable chairman, Mr. Maclure, begged Lord Salisbury next to address the 15,000 to 20,000 persons outside the hall; and two or three pithy speeches were, accordingly, made outside by the noble Marquis. To stimulate the Conservative cause in Manchester still further, the Foreign Secretary on Monday opened the Moss Side Conservative Club ere he left the city.

Manchester Liberals, in their turn, play trumps this week. Mr. Egerton ventured at the Pomona Palace last Saturday to say he was quite sure the Liberal meeting under the same roof would not be so enthusiastic as the gathering which he essayed to address. Yet Mr. Robert Leake, chairman of the Liberal committee, may probably be excused for holding a different opinion. The Marquis of Hartington, after sojourning with Lord Derby as his guest, is to be entertained at the Reform Club by Mr. John Slagg, Liberal candidate for Manchester; is to receive an "Address of Confidence" in the Free Trade Hall from Lancashire Liberal Associations on the Friday evening; and his Lordship is to crown his work by accompanying Mr. John Bright to the Pomona Palace on Saturday afternoon, when both are to address the meeting.

Birmingham follows suit on Saturday with a Conservative demonstration at the Aston Lower Grounds, among the daring Conservatives announced to carry the war into the enemy's country being Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Secretary for the Colonies, the Marquis of Hertford, and Captain Burnaby, who is ambitious of being returned to represent Birmingham.

Mr. Childers was the first ex-Minister to reply to Lord Salisbury. The right hon. gentleman on Monday evening, in addressing his constituents at Knottingley, disrobed himself still further, as it were, of the lamb's clothing he is wont to wear in the House. He was quite brisk in his allusion to "the goddess Pomona," and his ironic felicitation of Lord Salisbury because he had not "called his own Prime Minister a weathercock, or likened his colleague and near relative to Titus Oates." Proceeding to business, Mr. Childers submitted the arguments of Lord Salisbury to a rigid analysis, condemned them, and marvelling at the Foreign Secretary's indiscretion in speaking of the alliance of Germany and Austria as "good tidings of great joy," feared that in the future "some such price as Savoy and Nice may have to be paid to the Liberator of the Balkan peninsula." Reverting to his Pontefract speech, Mr. Childers said in answer to certain criticisms of that address, that he was for maintaining a British Navy equal at least to any three nations of the world; that to Ireland, as well as England, he would extend a large measure of county government, and that he would do his best to extricate the country from dangerous perplexities in which it might be involved, albeit no Liberal Minister could repudiate responsibilities incurred with the approval of Parliament. As regards the land, he desired

> Four distinct reforms—a better security for tenants' improvements, extended power for selling land (now so mischievously tied up), the compulsory register of title without trusts and simplicity of transfer, and the sale of large quantities of land held in mortmain, now producing nearly £3,000,000 a year.

The other reforms in his programme were "the extension of household suffrage to the counties, the removal of the last grievance of Nonconformists, and the abatement of abuses in the Church." As a last word, Mr. Childers emphatically censured the financial policy of the Government, of which, indeed, he has been a frank critic during the past Session.

Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's speech at an agricultural dinner held at Christchurch on Tuesday may be placed next in importance to the address of Mr. Childers. It may be said to have improved the position he secured by his candid avowal in the House of the faults of the Porte; for, while awarding due praise to the Czar for the enlightened and liberal measures passed during his reign, the hon. member discriminately observed that "the Emperor of Russia and the Government of that country were carried away by the torrent of an unknown democracy." He, therefore, expressed satisfaction at the coalition of Germany with Austria, as it would have the effect of resisting "the invasive tendencies of Russia"—not of the Emperor, but of his agents, whose action in Eastern Roumelia he had had personal experience of. But the greater number of recent speeches have had a ring in them unmistakably hostile to the Government. From Mr. Herschell's characteristically clear sentences at Durham on Monday, Sir Henry Havelock's martial accents at Sunderland, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen's trumpet-notes, and Mr. Brassey's well-reasoned argument at Deal on Tuesday, Mr. Ernest Noel's utterances at Dumfries, Mr. Briggs's amusing address at Blackburn, Sir Wilfrid Lawson's "gay wisdom" at Brampton, and Mr. Ingram's outspoken speech at Boston, the Government could gather none of that encouragement which Lord Salisbury gained at Manchester, and which Mr. Raikes offered them at Chester on Monday.

In Ireland Mr. Parnell rested on Sunday last, leaving it to Mr. Davitt, the released Fenian, to fan the land flame; but on Tuesday Mr. Parnell made amends by taking part in the institution of a Land League for Ireland, of which the hon. member was chosen President.

The sum of £640,695 10s. 4d. was paid in the year ended March 31 last as excise duty on sugar used in brewing.

Two Lincolnshire farmers have sailed for New Zealand, in compliance with a requisition from upwards of 500 farmers and landowners, who occupy or own in the aggregate considerably more than 100,000 acres, asking them to proceed to that colony, in order that, after personal inspection, they may report upon it as a field for emigration for farmers possessed of means, and capitalists, with special reference to such as have had experience of farming in Lincolnshire.

The police have now satisfied themselves that the Miss Edwards, whose disappearance in Liverpool last month has created some excitement, has not met with a violent death or been unlawfully detained anywhere. In all her proceedings she has been a voluntary agent. It appears to have been satisfactorily ascertained that she travelled direct to Shrewsbury, via Birkenhead, on the day she left home, and that from the 30th ult. to the 10th inst. she was staying at Corbett's Temperance Hotel, in Birmingham.

The Congregational Union of England and Wales closed its thirty-ninth autumnal meeting at Cardiff on the 16th inst., when papers were read on Special Missions for the Revival of Spiritual Life in the Churches, and other subjects. The assembly resolved to recommend to the consideration of the county associations the conducting of special missions by competent and well-certified persons, at the same time suggesting that the Council of the Church Aid and Home Missionary Society might render some help in this work. It was expressly stipulated that the missions must not be of a sensational character.

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN ISTHMUS CANAL.

The project of a ship canal through the isthmus of Central America, to connect the Atlantic with Pacific Ocean navigation, presents no insurmountable engineering difficulty. It has, during the last four or five years, been revived by M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, the author and successful conductor of a similar great undertaking at the Isthmus of Suez. But the idea has often been propounded, though with different proposed routes for the canal, and its practicability is beyond all doubt; the only question is that concerning the reality of its commercial advantages. These would apparently be confined to the European traffic with the west coast of South America, Peru, and Chili, with New South Wales and New Zealand, and with the Sandwich Islands. It would not shorten the voyage from England to China, to Singapore, or to Calcutta; but the home voyage from Australia, which now goes round Cape Horn, would be very much easier and more convenient. The traffic between the United States of North America and China or Japan, which now either crosses the breadth of the continent by railway to the port of San Francisco, or passes the narrowest part of the isthmus by the Aspinwall and Panama Railway, seems not yet to demand a ship canal. M. de Lesseps has therefore failed to win the prompt support of subscribing capitalists, at the present moment, to a scheme which is, nevertheless, quite likely to be carried out whenever circumstances shall make it urgently desirable. These circumstances may arise from the commercial progress of Australasia, or from increased activity on the Pacific coasts of America; but not, in all probability, from any change in the course of traffic between Europe and Asia. The Suez Canal has settled that question.

As to the kind of canal required to satisfy the interests of navigation, the ideal canal would be one like that of Suez; a broad and deep trench which ships could enter in any state of the tide, a passage without tunnel, and, above all, without locks, necessitating complicated manœuvres and loss of time. Unfortunately, the extensive and long-continued explorations which have been made show that in all the length of the American isthmus, from Tehuantepec to the Rio San Juan of Colombia, bounding the Bando Cordillera on the south, there does not exist any depression fulfilling the necessary conditions. The lowest heights are found in Darien, 410 ft., and in the Isthmus of Panama, 300 ft. With such heights, if the canal is made by an open trench, the excavation would cost a sum hardly to be thought of. From Port Escoces, on the Isthmus of Panama, to San Miguel the distance is under forty miles—less than half the width of the neck between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea—and it was with reluctance that engineers were forced to recognise that the summit level was everywhere high, that the ridge was rocky, and that it would be almost impossible to get water for the higher levels of a canal.

Another route, though less immediately obvious, had long been considered preferable for this purpose. The Republic of Nicaragua has a territory bounded on the north by Honduras, on the south by Costa Rica. The northern part of this territory, including Segovia and a part of Chontales, borders on the high plateau of Honduras, and shares in its mountainous character. The southern part—separating this highland district from the high mountain group or centre of elevation in Costa Rica—is the basin of the Nicaraguan Lakes, lying transverse to the Cordillera range, which it interrupts—a country of broad, fertile plains, about 300 miles long by 150 wide. In its centre are the Lakes of Managua and Nicaragua, which collect the water flowing inward, and discharge them through one great outlet—the San Juan river—into the Caribbean Sea. Lake Nicaragua has an extreme length of over one hundred miles, and an average width of forty miles. The water in most places shoals very gradually, and there are only a few points at which vessels of any size can approach the shore. The general depth—in some places not less than forty fathoms—is, however, ample for purposes of navigation, except near the mouth of the San Juan. That river, from the lake till it debouches at Greytown, is, with its windings, about 120 miles long, and in the rainy season, from May till October, has a large volume of water. Till the survey made by Colonel Childs, in 1851, for the company formed under the shelter of a diplomatic convention between Great Britain and the United States, it was supposed that the river San Juan was navigable continuously from Greytown to Lake Nicaragua. This proved to be a fallacy, and the line surveyed by him comprised three divisions. It did not include Lake Managua, or Leon, at all. The western division was a proposed canal from the little port of Brito, on the Pacific, to the point where a stream called the Rio Lajas flows into Lake Nicaragua, rather more than eighteen miles. The middle division was from this point, across the lake, to San Carlos, at the head of the San Juan River, rather more than fifty-six miles. The eastern division was in two sections—the first, slack water navigation on the San Juan River from San Carlos to a point opposite the mouth of the Rio Serapiqui, ninety miles and a fraction; the second, a canal from this point to the port of San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, twenty-eight miles and a fraction—giving (with fractional distances) a total length from ocean to ocean of about 194 miles. The isthmus of Rivas between Lake Nicaragua and the Pacific Ocean has, it is true, an altitude of only about 150 feet, but the length of the track and the presence of the lake render a level canal impossible there It is thus necessary to decide to adopt either a level canal—that is, without locks, but with a tunnel—or a canal with locks; and even the latter, along any of the tracts that have been surveyed, except by Nicaragua, would require also the cutting of a tunnel.

The International Commission appointed in 1876 by the Governments of the French Republic, the United States, and the Central American Republics, at the instance of M. de Lesseps, made a practical comparative examination of these and several other proposed routes, including those crossing the isthmus of Darien, and more than one availing itself of the Atrato river to the south, also in the State of Colombia. Lieutenant Lucien Wyse, of the French Navy, was actively employed in the surveys of these routes; and the members of the International Commission deliberated further upon the question whether it would be better to have a canal without any tunnels, but with many locks and sluices connecting its different levels, or to have a level canal passing through one or more tunnels. They decided in favour of the latter system, which has led them back, after all, to the choice of a route across the isthmus of Panama. This route is from Limon Bay, up the Chagres and the Obispo, on the Atlantic side, and down the valley of the Rio Grande to the port of Panama, on the Pacific side. It would be a level canal forty-four miles long, with a tunnel of three miles and a half; and it could be constructed in six years, at a cost of 475,000,000 francs. The proposed canal route is near the Panama Railway, passes through a well-peopled region, and there is no difficulty as to ports. Lieutenant Wyse's commission warmly advocates this scheme, as being preferable to any other. The time wasted in passing locks, the difficulty and expense of maintaining them, and other considerations, induce them to advise that all idea of a canal with locks should be abandoned; and of all possible level canals with tunnels that just mentioned seems to this commission the one presenting altogether the most favourable conditions.

The Illustrations we give are from sketches by a correspondent who travelled through Central America in March and April, 1867, ascending the San Juan to Lakes Nicaragua and Managua, and visiting the Chontales gold and silver mines. A sketch of the seabeach at Panama, on the Pacific Coast, belonging to the Federal Republic of Columbia, is also included. The existing railway to this port from Aspinwall, or Colon, was opened in 1855, and has a large traffic. Its length is forty-eight miles, and the journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific shore can be made in two hours.

The School Board consists of fifty members, apportioned as follows:—Chelsea, four; City, four; Finsbury, six; Greenwich, four; Hackney, five; Lambeth, six; Marylebone, seven; Southwark, four Tower Hamlets, five; and Westminster, five. The election is to be held on Thursday, Nov. 27.

In reference to the coming School Board election, a conference of delegates was held on Tuesday afternoon at the office of the Board of Works for Westminster, and a resolution was passed affirming—"That it is exceedingly desirable, in the interest of the ratepayers, that independent candidates should be nominated in each division, who, while encouraging elementary education, will pledge themselves to check all sanctiful and lavish expenditure."—On the same day Miss Helen Taylor addressed a crowded meeting of the Southwark ratepayers in her candidature for re-election to the School Board at the Drill-hall, Neckinger-road, Bermondsey.

A girl who for more than a month has been an inmate of Hampstead Workhouse, who called herself Gertrude Florence Villars, and gave a romantic account of herself as having wandered all the way from the extreme west of England, has been claimed by Mrs. Eyres, living at Shepherd's-bush, as her daughter. It has been ascertained that she ran away from her situation at Shepherd's-bush because she had been threatened with dismissal for sitting up in bed at night reading novels by candlelight. The name Gertrude Florence Villars is supposed to have been borrowed from one of her favourite novels. The mother has taken her daughter home.

The Metropolitan Board of Works at their meeting yesterday week received and referred to a committee a memorial from the vestries and district boards of the metropolis praying for the removal of gates and bars in certain thoroughfares, which caused serious obstruction and loss of time. The Building Act Committee reported that, having received a full report upon the Gaiety Theatre from the superintending architect, they were of opinion that the existing arrangements for egress are fairly satisfactory, and that there was no sufficient ground for the complaints that had appeared in the newspapers.

Last week 2637 births and 1499 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 135, and the deaths by 43, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes further rose last week to 21·6—a higher rate than has prevailed in any week since the middle of May. The deaths included one from smallpox, 31 from measles, 73 from scarlet fever, 14 from diphtheria, 27 from whooping-cough, 26 from different forms of fever, and 48 from diarrhœa. Thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 220 deaths were referred, against 227 and 230 in the two preceding weeks. These deaths were 30 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The fatal cases of scarlet fever showed a further increase of 7 upon recent weekly numbers, but were 24 below the corrected weekly average: 20 were returned in the north, 18 in the east, and 22 in the south groups of districts; 11 of the deceased scarlet fever patients had resided in St. Pancras. The fatal cases of fever, which had been 38 and 29 in the two previous weeks, further declined to 26 last week, and were 10 below the corrected average: one was certified as typhus, 22 as enteric or typhoid, and three indefinitely as low or continued fever. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 201 and 190 in the two preceding weeks, rose to 318 last week, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 46; of these 192 resulted from bronchitis and 73 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 62 deaths. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 30 in. The mean temperature was 45·0 deg., being 6·3 deg. below the average in the corresponding week of twenty years. The mean was very considerably below the average on each day of the week.

The new station at Lime-street, Liverpool, which has been constructed by the London and North-Western Railway Company at a cost of £200,000, was formally opened on Monday. The entire area of the two stations is 28,100 square yards, the new portion covering 13,700 yards. The tunnel has been enlarged and opened for a distance of a quarter of a mile from the bottom end, and it is in contemplation to make it wide enough for four lines of rails from Lime-street to Edge-hill. The terminus now comprises eleven platforms.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Newmarket Houghton Meeting doubtless compares unfavourably with the Second October in point of sport, but, given fine weather, our last visit to the famous heath until the following year is sure to be a pleasant one. Proceedings began on Monday with the Trial Stakes, in which Villager, who had all the worst of the weights with Advance and Reefer, beat his five opponents with such ridiculous ease, that his stable companion, Leoville, at once came to 4 to 1 for the Cambridgeshire. The ready victory of Typhoon (7 st. 11 lb.) in the Flying Stakes makes Lucetta, who has twice defeated him of late, a very smart filly indeed; and the next race of more than passing interest was the Criterion Stakes, for which the field was by no means of such calibre as has generally been the case. Duke of Cumberland, who was unpenalised, started a very strong favourite, but he was in trouble a long way from home, and a desperate finish between Preston Pans and Dora resulted in a head victory for the former. It is a great thing for Prince Charlie to be able to claim paternity of the best staying two-year-old of the season, and it may be remembered that he himself won this race in 1871, having a flyer like Cremorne behind him. The match between Touchet (8 st. 7 lb.) and Belphœbe (8 st. 10 lb.) was generally considered a very near thing, as slight odds were first laid on the mare and then on the horse, but Touchet had matters all his own way in the race.

A heavy programme on Tuesday contained no race of much importance except the Cambridgeshire. The feature of the betting towards the finish was the great fancy for Lartington (7 st. 4 lb.), who, after being erroneously reported to be scratched, started an equal favourite with Leoville. There was also a sustained run upon Falmouth (7 st. 10 lb.) which brought him to 8 to 1; but Ragman (6 st. 9 lb.), who was sold to Count Lagrange, together with the rest of Jennings' horses prior to the race, and Harbinger (7 st. 4 lb.) went to much longer odds than those at which they had been quoted previously. Owing to the fractiousness of Flash Man and Lartington three breaks away occurred, and then the flag fell, and the lot seemed to get away in excellent order. The first to break the line were La Merveille and Lartington, but whereas the former was quickly drawn back, the Ashgill colt on the left cut out the work, followed by Sunburn, who in turn was succeeded on the top ground by Ragman, Leoville, Rylstone, Adamite, and Caxtonian, with Out of Bounds and Falmouth at their heels. When they had fairly settled down into their places Lartington resigned the command in favour of Sunburn, who came on at a tremendous pace, closely attended by Ragman and Leoville on his own side and Lartington on the lower ground, Caxtonian being well up in the centre, while immediately in attendance upon the favourite on the left were Flash Man and Sarsaparilla. The field soon assumed straggling proportions, and as they streamed past the Rowley Mile Stand there was already a long tail, the rearmost division comprising Ismael, Rob Roy, Rhidorroch, and Breadfinder. Soon after passing this landmark Sunburn slightly increased her advantage, and was followed by Lartington, Leoville, Ragman, Harbinger, The Bear, and Exeter, with Lord Clive, Discord, Caxtonian, and Fitz-Plutus lying well up, and La Merveille at the head of the others. Approaching the Red Post, Lartington was hopelessly beaten, and retired, leaving Sunburn with a lead of fully two lengths of Caxtonian, who was in turn as far in front of Ragman, Out of Bounds, and La Merveille, with Discord, Leoville, and Breadfinder at the head of the remainder. Two hundred yards from home Sunburn was beaten, and Caxtonian was left in front, only, however, to be joined in the next few strides by La Merveille and Out of Bounds, of which pair the former got the better of an intensely exciting race in the last few strides and won by a head. A similar distance separated the second and third, and Sunburn was placed fourth, a length behind Mr. Crawfurd's filly. Discord was fifth, Breadfinder sixth, Leoville seventh, Fitz-Plutus eighth, Sarsaparilla ninth, Ragman tenth, and the last lot comprised Rylstone, Mr. Gretton's pair, Jessie Agnes, Blue Ridge, Rhidorroch, Spendthrift, Lansdown, Adamite, Stylites, Rob Roy, and Flash Man. La Merveille was third for this race last year to Isonomy and Touchet, and, since that time, she has only figured in public twice. Falmouth and Harbinger were never dangerous; but, looking at the forward running of Discord, Mr. Gretton had a grand chance of repeating his Isonomy triumph with Westbourne, had he not struck him out of the race when he found that he had been so heavily backed by the outside public. Lord Rosebery well deserves a slice of luck, considering the persistently bad fortune that has dogged his colours all this year, and Constable has made a famous beginning after his illness. The best performance in the race was accomplished by Out of Bounds (7 st. 9 lb.); and a man must be a bad loser indeed who will argue that the advantage of Fordham's services were not well purchased by carrying 3 lb. extra.

There was not a very grand day's racing on Wednesday, when the weather, though comparatively warm, was dull and showery. As it has been decided that Beaudesert will not run again in public until the Two Thousand Guineas, the Dewhurst Plate appeared to be quite at the mercy of Grace Cup, who was second in the Middle Park Plate, and escaped a penalty. Her eleven opponents did not include anything of much character, and she won just as she liked from Ambassadress and Dora. Milan, a stable companion of Dora, was the only one, except the winner, that was backed with any spirit; but Goater could not get him into a place. Lord Rosebery followed up his recent successes by winning two more races, and the remaining events need no comment.

Mr. G. D. Rowe, of University College, has been elected president of the Oxford University Boat Club, in the room of Mr. W. H. Grenfell, of Balliol, whose term of office has expired; and Mr. A. F. Hills, also of University, has been elected president of the Oxford University Athletic Club, vice Mr. M. Shearman, of St. John's, who also had fulfilled his term of office.

While aquatic matters in this country are confined to a paper warfare between Elliott and Boyd, America and Australia have been by no means idle. The projected race between Edward Hanlan and C. E. Courtney created greater excitement than has ever been known in the history of boat-racing; but, on the morning of the day fixed for the contest, it was discovered that both Courtney's boats had been sawn in half, and it was, therefore, impossible for him to compete. Mutual recriminations and accusations ensued, and, pending the receipt of fuller news than has been given by cable, we prefer to say nothing about the matter. In Australia, Edward Trickett, the champion of the world, has defeated Michael Laycock with great ease, and his friends are fully prepared to back him against Hanlan.

On Saturday afternoon last about 7000 people assembled at Stamford-bridge to see the second and third bicycle races between Mr. H. L. Cortis and John Keen. The distances were one and five miles, and the professional secured both, winning the mile by a foot, in 2 min. 52 1-5 sec., and the five miles by two feet, in 15 min. 30 sec.

The annual meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance was held in Manchester on Tuesday, and began with a conference of the General Council in the Friends' Meeting-house in Mount-street. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., was in the chair, and there was a very large attendance, including several members of Parliament. He urged the members to use every endeavour, in view of the coming general election, to have candidates returned to Parliament who would help to diminish the "master-curse" of the British nation. In response to the appeal for special subscriptions sums amounting to over £5000 were promised in the room. Sir W. Lawson headed the list with £1000, Mr. Hugh Mason gave £500, and the Messrs. Pease £600. In the evening Sir W. Lawson took the chair at the annual public meeting in the Free Trade Hall, at which it is estimated about 4000 persons were present. A supplementary meeting was held in a neighbouring building, at which it is stated 1800 persons attended, and 1000 more had to be refused admission.

A presentation was recently made at Padstow, on the coast of Cornwall, to five young ladies, the Misses Prideaux Brune and Miss Nora O'Shaughnessy, in the shape of silver medals and votes inscribed on vellum, which had been awarded to them by the National Life-Boat Institution, in acknowledgment of their intrepid services in proceeding in their boat through a rough sea, and saving, at considerable risk of life, an exhausted sailor from a boat which had been capsized, during squally weather, off Padstow, on the 9th ult., two of his companions having perished before their arrival. Samuel Bate, late assistant coxswain of the Padstow life-boat, was towing the ladies' boat astern of his fishing-smack, when, seeing the accident, they nobly requested to be cast off, and on that being done he states that they rowed "like tigers" to the rescue through a heavy sea, and he has no doubt that the man saved would have perished, like his companions, but for their prompt arrival.

The laying of a stone in the basement of the new Eddystone Lighthouse by Lady Lopes, on Saturday last, marked a distinct stage in the works on the reef—the commencement of building operations in the west dam. A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette states that during the past few weeks of favourable weather the work of landing stone on the rock has progressed at the rate of upwards of a hundred tons per week. Mechanical improvements have also much facilitated the placing of the blocks. Sir Massey, Lady, and Miss Lopes, Admiral Farquhar, and the company of ladies and gentlemen who landed on the rock on Saturday, spent nearly an hour upon the works. Lady Lopes deposited the usual coins of the realm under the block; and, it being the first in the dam, and that by which all the work in that section will be regulated, the process required as much care as the placing of the foundation-stone by the Duke of Edinburgh. In the course of laying the first stones in the western dam the workmen found an interesting relic in the shape of a pair of lead weights, in all probability belonging to the clock in Winstanley's Pagoda, which went by the board in the memorable storm on the night of Nov. 26, 1703. The probability of this is increased by the fact that these weights were found on the side of the New House Rock, which faces the old tower.

Remissions of rent have recently been made as follows:—Sir John Heathcoat Amory, Bart., M.P., of Tiverton, has informed his tenants that 20 per cent will be allowed off their rents in the case of all who pay at his half-yearly audit, early next month. Sir John Errington, of Cheshire, has returned the whole of the tenants on his estate 10 per cent on their respective rentals. The joint proprietors of the Trevalyn estate, the Rev. J. S. Darvell, Captain C. Griffiths Boscowen, and Mr. Trevor Parkins, have made their tenants a similar allowance on the past half-year's rental. Mr. Martin M'Donnell, a large landed proprietor, announces that he will allow a half-year's rent to his numerous tenantry paying under £10, and 30 per cent to those paying over. In his letter announcing this, he states that public works are necessary to keep the people from starving through the coming winter. At his half-yearly rent audit the Rev. W. Hanbury, Rector of Charleville, remitted from 10 to 20 per cent. Mr. John Sullivan, of Curramore, has given an abatement of from 30 to 50 per cent to the tenants on his county Limerick estate. Captain Douglas has reduced the rents on his county Longford estate 20 per cent. The Sussex Express states that the Duke of Richmond has deferred payment of the rents due from his tenants on Sept. 29 to Jan. 1 next, and that the Earl of Sheffield has postponed the collection of his Michaelmas rents until the end of November. Lord Sheffield has also informed his agricultural tenants that in consequence of the continuous depression he will then make the same abatement in their rents as he made at the audit in April last—namely, 25 per cent.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—

"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—

HERR F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

THE NEW RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE SEVERN, AT LYDNEY, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—SEE PAGE 390.

THE SEVERN RAILWAY BRIDGE.

The opening of the new railway bridge over the lower part of the Severn at Lydney, twenty miles below Gloucester, took place yesterday week. A short line of railway, only five miles in length, has been constructed, to join the South Wales lines, at this place, with the Bristol and Birmingham Railway at Berkeley. Lydney is on the right, or west, bank of the river, where it is nearly a mile wide, but narrows somewhat upwards, about Sharpness and Purton Passage. The new line commences by junctions with the Severn and Wye and the Great Western Railways at Lydney, whence it crosses the Severn by a bridge three quarters of a mile in length, and terminates at the Sharpness Docks by a junction with the Midland Railway. It thus brings the Midland Railway into communication with the Severn and Wye Railways, and, consequently, with nearly all the collieries and ironworks in the Forest of Dean. It shortens the distance from South Wales to Bristol by thirty miles, and if a junction half a mile in length were made at Stonehouse between the Midland and the Great Western Railways it would reduce the length of the journey from South Wales to London by fourteen miles. The line also supplies the pressing necessities of the trade of the district, and affords an improved communication for the extensive and increasing traffic of the Forest of Dean with the south-west of England. The Severn Bridge Company, of which Mr. W. C. Lucy is chairman, is about to be amalgamated with the Severn and Wye Railway Company. It has been assisted in the undertaking by the Midland Railway Company, the Sharpness Docks Company, and the Gloucester and Birmingham Navigation Company, each subscribing £75,000, the total cost being £400,000.

The bridge is, of course, the prominent engineering feature of the scheme. This structure is 4162 ft. in length, including a masonry approach viaduct on the north side of the river, and a swing bridge over the Gloucester Canal on the south side. The bridge proper consists of twenty-one spans or openings, composed of bowstring girders carried on piers formed of cast-iron cylinders placed in pairs transversely to the length of the bridge under the ends of the girders. The cylinders are sunk deep into the rock which forms the bed of the river, and are filled in with concrete. Of the twenty-one spans the first at the Lydney, or north end of the bridge, is 134 ft. 6 in. wide from centre to centre of the piers; there are then two spans of 327 ft., each followed by five of 171 ft. each, the remaining thirteen spans being 134 ft. each. The two large spans—the piers for which are composed of four cylinders—occur over the navigable portion of the river. They have a headway of 70 ft. above high water, ordinary spring tides. The headway of the remaining spans gradually decrease from 70 ft. to 50 ft. The first thirteen piers, counting from the south side, are formed of cast-iron cylinders, 6 ft. in diameter, and from 1¼ in. to 1½ in. thick. They are cast in 4-ft. lengths, and are bolted together on the inside through flanges. The cylinders were sunk through the sand in the ordinary way of excavating inside and weighting them. Compressed air had to be used to keep the water out. The diameters of the cylinders in the piers Nos. 14 to 18 are 9 ft. below low water and 7 ft. above that level. The cylinders of piers Nos. 19 to 21 are 10 ft. in diameter below and 7 ft. in diameter above low water. The superstructure consists of a series of bowstring girders placed in pairs over each span, and carrying between them the cross girders upon which the flooring rests. The rails are carried on longitudinal timber sleepers resting on wrought-iron longitudinal bearers, and the flooring consists of iron plates. In the two largest spans of 327 ft. each the main girders are 38 ft. deep at the centre. The connection between the bridge proper and the high-level land at the Lydney end is effected by a masonry viaduct, of twelve arches, 70 ft. in height. At the south end the bridge is connected with the railway works by a swing bridge, 200 ft. in length, turning on its centre upon a circular pier of heavy masonry. The bridge weighs 500 tons, and moves upon a live ring, the turning being effected by a steam-engine inclosed in a small house on the bridge. One half of this bridge carries the line over the shore of the river; the other spans the Gloucester canal, the bridge being swung for large vessels to pass. The Severn bridge has been built in four years, at a cost of £200,000. The consulting engineer is Mr. Thomas E. Harrison. Mr. Keeling and Mr. G. W. Owen were jointly concerned as engineers; the work, however, has been carried out by Mr. Keeling. The contractors for the approach-railway were at first Messrs. Vickers and Cooke, but this work was completed by Mr. Griffith Griffiths. The contract for the bridge was taken by Hamilton's Windsor Ironworks, by whom the work has been very efficiently carried out.

The opening ceremony was attended by the Earl of Ducie, Lord Lieutenant of the county, Earl Bathurst, and other noblemen and gentlemen, the Mayors and city or borough aldermen of Gloucester, Birmingham, and other towns, and the railway officials of the district. They came from Gloucester by special train, crossed to Sharpness Docks, and were entertained with luncheon under a marquee, Mr W. C. Lucy presiding at table. We give an Illustration of the new Severn Railway Bridge.

A public meeting has been held at Croydon for the purpose of inaugurating an ambulance centre. A deputation from the central committee attended and explained the objects of the movement, and classes to teach "first aid to the injured" were at once formed. Centres have lately been established at Waltham Abbey and Shoeburyness, and are about to be opened at Liverpool, Hereford, Cheltenham, Bristol, and Twickenham.

Major Chard and Surgeon-Major Reynolds were entertained at dinner yesterday week by the members of the Wanderers' Club at their house in Pall-mall. About one hundred gentlemen were present, and Lord Headley presided.—The members of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club at Ryde gave a banquet the same day to Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel J. Browne, on his return from Afghanistan. The proceedings were private.—The Council of the British Medical Association have resolved to give a dinner to Surgeon-Major Reynolds, V.C., who has received the gold medal of the association for his bravery in Zululand in tending the wounded while under fire.—At a luncheon held at Crediton Townhall on Monday (Sir John Shelley in the chair), Colonel Buller presented Private Lethbridge, of the 13th Infantry, who had seen active service in the Zulu war, with a handsome silver watch, gold chain, and locket, which had been subscribed for by his fellow-townsmen on his return to his native town. Corporal Berry, 1-24th, would have been similarly honoured but he remains in Africa, where he has bought his discharge. His brother represented him, and his present will be transmitted by Sir J. Shelley.—The Mayor of Portsmouth has received a telegram from Lord H. G. Lennox, M.P., expressing his cordial approval of the proposed welcome home to the seamen and soldiers from Zululand, and requesting that his name may be added to the local committee.—At a meeting of the committee appointed to arrange for a testimonial to Captain Lord Gifford, V.C., at Cirencester, held on Tuesday (Earl Bathurst presiding), it was resolved that the presentation, consisting of a breakfast service, should take place at a public dinner on Nov. 11.

ST. CRISPIN'S DAY.

This day, Oct. 25, is set apart in our calendar to St. Crispin, and, to quote the spirited speech that Shakespeare has put into the mouth of King Henry V. when he addressed his army of 30,000 men before the famous Battle of Agincourt, fought and won by the English on Oct. 25, 1415, "this day is called the Feast of Crispian." Not that Crispian was all one with Crispin, for they were not one, but two, and in that speech by the King he mentions them as "Crispin, Crispian," and ends his address with the words "that fought with us upon St. Crispin's day." The poet used whichever name was required by the metre of his line. He also calls Crispian "Crispianus," and he was otherwise known as Crispinian. The two brothers Crispin and Crispian were sprung of a noble Roman family, and having embraced the Christian faith, left Rome for Soissons, where they were imprisoned and tortured to death by the Governor, Rictius Varus, in the year 287, when Maximian was Emperor. During the daytime the brothers preached the Gospel, and, in order to support themselves, worked at night at the trade of shoemaking, as had been done at an earlier period by Anianus, Bishop of Alexandria, who is said to have received instruction from St. Mark. But while Anianus, the episcopal shoemaker, is scarcely remembered, the names of Crispin and Crispian are of world-wide reputation, the place of honour, as the patron saint of shoemakers, being given to the elder brother, Crispin.

In the London Magazine for 1825 the gentle Elia mystified the members of "the gentle craft," as well as his learned readers, by an article in which were mentioned some extraordinary works, such as "The Soleary System," "The Sutrina Hobeana," "The Ars Calcearia," "The Hypodemania, or the History of the Passion of Shoe-buying," and "The Scytotomical Decameron, or Ten Joyous Days in a Shoe Warehouse." But "the Rev. Tom Foggy Dribble," who was supposed to have made use of those books, was a good-natured caricature of the Rev. Thos. Frognall Dibdin, and the entire article was a witty burlesque on the erudition of that once-famous bibliomaniac and antiquarian. But, in that paper, Charles Lamb mentioned a genuine production, "The History of the Gentle Craft," originally published in 1584, and reprinted in 1723 and again in 1758. It is a 12mo (5½ by 3 inches in size), and contains 146 pages and several very rude woodcuts. Charles Lamb says that a copy of this little book was sold for 15 guineas; and I know that Lord Alvanley's copy was sold, in 1858, for £3 19s. I possess a copy of the work, in which the story of the two brothers, Crispin and Crispian, is transferred to England and the neighbourhood of Canterbury, and romantically treated in a manner that does not accord with the versions of Alban Butler and Lusius; for, while Crispian goes to the wars, Crispin is made "the Emperor's shoemaker" to King Logria, and makes shoes for his daughter, the Princess Ursula, who falls in love with him, is told by him that he is a prince by birth, and is privately married to him. There are some curious adventures, but no martyrdom; for the King pardons them, and they live happily ever after. In connection with this Kentish story it is somewhat remarkable that when John Weever, the antiquary wrote his "Funeral Monuments," in 1631, he described a heap of stones on the beach at Widde, near Stonend, which was said to mark the graves of Crispin and Crispian, who had been shipwrecked and cast ashore at that spot. The first baby-boy of Prince Crispin and Princess Ursula gave rise to the old proverb, "A shoemaker's son is a Prince born."

A story is told of Henry VIII. going through the London streets at night in disguise that he might see for himself how the constables and watch performed their duties; and that he went into a cobbler's shop to get his boot mended, and that he drank with the cobbler, and asked him to come to the palace and inquire for him by the name of Harry Tudor; and how the cobbler went and recognised the King, who gave him the freedom of his cellar and an annual pension of forty marks. A somewhat similar story is told of the Emperor Charles V. of Germany, who, on Oct. 25, wandered in disguise into the shop of a Flanders cobbler in order to get his boot mended. The cobbler refused to do this, because they did not do a stitch of work on St. Crispin's Day; but he invited the stranger to drink with him, and proposed the King's health. "Do you love him, then?" asked the other. "Ayo," said the cobbler, "I love his long-noseship well enough; but, I should love him more, if he would tax us less." The next day the cobbler was summoned to the palace, and was horrified to find that his long-noseship was his companion on St. Crispin's Day; but the King thanked him for his hospitality, and begged him to say what benefit he would wish to be bestowed upon him. The simple-minded cobbler could think of no other request than this—that the cobblers of Flanders should bear for their coat-of-arms a boot surmounted with the Imperial crown. This was granted, as was also his further request that cobblers should take precedence of shoemakers. A dispute on this point occurred at Frankfort so lately as July, 1863, and had to be settled by the authorities. On St. Crispin's Day, 1861, the King of Hanover and his son were received into the Corporation of Cobblers at Hanover.

In England, the Cordwainers' and Cobblers' Company was incorporated so far back as the year 1410; but the title of Cobblers fell into contempt, and is not now used by the company, whose fine hall is in St. Distaff's-lane, St. Paul's. In 1813, a work was published on "The Art and Mystery of a Cordwainer," written by Frederick Rees. The word cordwainer is a corruption of corduainier, which itself was a corruption from cordonnier; Cordova, or Cordua, being famed for that leather, of which we are told, in Hudibras, of some who "have been kicked till they know whether a shoe's of Spanish or neat's leather," a delicacy of perception engendered by tenderness of the cuticle. In Paris the shoemakers celebrated St. Crispin's Day by a mass at the Church of St. Peter, Montmartre, up to Oct. 25, 1868, on which day, instead of the usual statue of the Saint, the Frères cordonniers carried a huge boot, to the great merriment of the spectators. The ecclesiastical authorities therefore refused, in 1869, to perform the usual ceremonies unless the image of St. Crispin was borne in the procession; and, as the cordonniers preferred the huge boot, St. Crispin's Day was not observed as a religious festival. That French word cordonnier, or cordinnier, was introduced (in the "Quentin Durward" days) into Scotland, where a shoemaker was called a cordiner; though soutar, or souter, is the more familiar term. Burns' Souter Johnny was John Lauchlin, a shoemaker of Ayr. Sir Walter Scott, in his "Lay of the Last Minstrel," spells the word in its Latin form, when he calls Watt Tinlinn "sutor and archer." It was Apelles, the painter to Alexander the Great, who, when a cobbler had found fault with the sandals in one of his pictures, and then proceeded to criticise the other portions of the painting, checked him with the words Ne sutor ultra crepidam: "The shoemaker should not go beyond his last."

St. Crispin's Day is celebrated at Stirling and elsewhere in Scotland in a highly convivial way by the Crispin Clubs; but we may hope that their old saying, "On the twenty-fifth October, Ne'er a souter's sober," will have dropped into decadence. At Selkirk on St. Crispin's Day the members of the Crispin Club were compelled to "lick the birse," which was a bunch of bristles, the emblem of their craft, and was mouthed by all in turn. When Sir Walter Scott was initiated he washed the birse in his wine, but was compelled, as a penalty, to drink the polluted liquor. Prince Leopold had to go through the ceremony in 1819, when he was made a Sutor of Selkirk. St. Crispin's Day at Birmingham in 1866 produced a case for the magistrates, in which a witness spoke of shoemakers' tools as "snobs' tools"—snob being one of the many names given to makers and menders of boots and shoes, who are also known as welters, cleaners, clickers, blockers, runners, closers, repairers, restorers, translators, clobberers, and slobberers. The last title, according to a North-country legend, had its origin from a Jew shoemaker who insulted the Saviour on His way to Calvary, and was told by Him that he was a sneak and a slobberer, and that all his race should be slobberers till the end of time. A more curious term for "snobs' tools" is "Sir Hugh's bones," the meaning of which is explained in a story in "The Gentle Craft," wherein Sir Hugh, before his death with the Princess Winifred, bequeaths his bones to the shoemakers, at whose trade he had worked, and who, in memory of him, called their tools "Sir Hugh's bones."

As there are upwards of 300,000 shoemakers in Great Britain, St. Crispin's Day will, no doubt, be duly observed by numerous workmen in Sheffield, Kettering, Wellingborough, Leicester, Northampton, and other centres of the trade—a trade, by-the-way, which has contributed more recruits to the Army than any other trade, and which is also the trade most in request by the afflicted inmates of the Earlswood Asylum, to whom, in its soothing influence, it is indeed "the gentle craft." When King John was at Northampton he gave one shilling for his dress-boots and sixpence for his slippers; but when our Queen and the Prince Consort passed through there, on their way to Burleigh, the Prince was presented with a pair of boots. There is a saying, "You may know when you are within a mile of Northampton by the smell of the leather and the noise of the lapstones." The mud-boots for our Crimean soldiers were made there.

St. Crispin's Day, in that Crimean war, 1854, will ever be remembered for the Battle of Balaclava and the Charge of the Light Brigade. Tennyson's poem thereupon, both in metre and idea, was evidently suggested by Michael Drayton's poem, written in 1619, on "The Battle of Agincourt," both of these famous fights being fought on St. Crispin's Day. And, although the fastidious Laureate has made numerous alterations in his poem, yet, in its original form, there was one passage that was evidently suggested by the Shakspearean speech of King Henry to his soldiers before the Battle of Agincourt. Tennyson's lines—now suppressed—were as follow:—

> Honour the brave and bold!
> Long shall the tale be told;
> Yea, when our babes are old—
> How they rode onward!

St. Crispin's Day, 1869, was celebrated at Deane, Northamptonshire, by the reopening of the parish church, after considerable restoration, when the Bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Magee), in his sermon, made eloquent mention of the battle of Balaclava and the Charge of the Light Brigade, in which an important part was taken by the late Lord Cardigan. He is buried in Deane church, where his tomb is sculptured by Boehm with scenes from the battle. After the service Lady Cardigan took her visitors to the paddock, where was the charger that was ridden by Lord Cardigan in the battle; and, although he was now twenty-five years old, he had sufficient spirit to break away from his groom, and dash off in a gallop round his paddock. His grave is now to be seen there, not so very far removed from the last resting-place of his gallant master, of whom it was said, that he leapt the parapets before the Russian guns as coolly as he would an ox fence in Northamptonshire. Both at Agincourt in 1415, and at Balaclava in 1854, British heroism was splendidly displayed on St. Crispin's Day.

INDIAN HILL-TRIBES.

The region of British India called the Terai, or Marsh Land, a part of Kumaon, with the Bhawar, an upland forest tract adjoining this, at the foot of the Himalayas, extends from Nepaul westward above Rohilcund, to the Dehra Doon; and it differs considerably from the general character of Upper India. It is a dense jungle, with a very unhealthy climate, and infested by tigers, wild elephants, and other formidable beasts, but has a population of mixed races, to which belong the Taroo and the Bhootea, whose portraits were sketched by Mr W. Simpson, our Special Artist, during his travels in India with the Prince of Wales. The Bhootea, a nation of Tartar race, who give their name to the country of Bhootan, are nearly allied to the people of Thibet on the northern side of the Himalayas. Most of the other tribes in the Terai are of Hindoo descent, speaking a dialect of Hindee, and professing the Brahminical religion, of which the "joghi," or fanatical mendicant friar, is a devout adherent and servant. The other portrait is that of a Mahratta chief belonging to Scindia's province of Gwalior, which was likewise visited by the Prince of Wales.

THE BURNING GHAUT, CALCUTTA.

The customary rite of burning the bodies of the dead, and committing their ashes to the waters of the sacred river, has not entirely fallen into desuetude among certain castes and races of the Hindoo subjects of the Empress Victoria. This practice has often been witnessed, in a place appointed for the purpose, on the banks of the Ganges at Calcutta. It cannot fail to remind the student of classical literature of similar scenes described by the Greek and Latin poets of antiquity. The recent advocacy of "cremation," as a scientific substitute for the usual Western mode of "earth-to-earth" sepulture, may claim such venerable Oriental examples as somewhat in its favour. But there is a deep-seated repugnance in the European mind at least since it has been imbued with the traditions of Christendom, to this deliberate and systematic destruction of the mortal remains of humanity. The actual sight of the Burning Ghaut is too shocking for the majority of our countrymen at the capital of British India. Our Artist long since made a sketch of this remarkable spectacle, which will be quite sufficient for the curiosity of home readers.

A public library was opened for the use of the inhabitants of Chatham on the 16th inst. The library is in connection with the Congregational Institute, and has been formed entirely through the exertions of the Congregationalists of the town.—The foundation-stone of a new Workmen's Club and Institute was laid at Chatham last Saturday by Mr. George Winch, who is building the institute at a cost of over £2000. The institute will consist of a lecture-hall, library, and reading-room, billiard and smoking-rooms, as well as hot and cold water baths. There will be a refreshment-bar, at which beer besides other refreshments will be sold.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We have already given an outline of Mr. Mapleson's prospectus of his autumn season of Italian opera performances, and have now to record the opening thereof with "Aïda" on Saturday last. This latest of Verdi's stage productions was originally produced at Cairo in 1872, and was first given in England at the Royal Italian Opera-House in 1876 (with Madame Adelina Patti in the principal character); having been brought out by Mr. Mapleson in June last, when the cast included Mdlle. Kellogg in the title-part, Madame Trebelli as Amneris, Signor Campanini as Radamès, Signor Galassi as Amonasro, Signor Foli as Ramfis, &c. In last Saturday's performance Madame Marie Roze appeared as Aïda for the first time in England; another important feature having been the repetition of Madame Trebelli's fine performance as Amneris. The first-named lady achieved a genuine success by her refined and impassioned singing and her earnest acting. The expressive delivery of Aïda's romance, "O cieli azzuri" stood in strong contrast to the effective declamation with which that character's shares in the duet with Amneris, that with Amonasro, and those with her lover, Radamès, were given. The performance of Madame Roze was throughout a complete success. Of Madame Trebelli's Amneris it is unnecessary to say more than that it was as excellent as in the representations already commented on, last summer. Signor Frapolli, as Radamès, gained an encore for his romance "Celeste Aïda," which was his most successful effort; the declamatory music of the part being less suited to him than that of most other characters in which he has appeared. Signor Pantaleone was the Amonasro, as in the latest representations of the opera during the past season—and again gave a highly effective rendering of the character, both in its musical and its dramatic aspect. The cast was completed by Signor Pinto as Ramfis (the High Priest), and Signor Susini as the King.

The excellence of the scenery, and the splendour of the costumes and stage pageantry, were again noticeable features in the performance. The National Anthem preceded the opera, which was ably conducted by Signor Li Calsi. There was a very full attendance; and there seems to be every prospect of similar results throughout the season—the attractions of the performances being heightened by the advantages of low prices, early hours, and non-restriction to the arbitrary rules of fashionable evening dress.

On Monday Mdlle. Ilma di Murska appeared, for the first time these four years, as the heroine in Meyerbeer's "Dinorah," and sang with brilliant effect. The Slumber-song in the first act was given with much gentle grace; Dinorah's share in the following quaint duet with Corentino having been sung with arch expression and fluent vocalisation. In the Bell-trio that closes the first act Mdlle. di Murska proved that she can excel in the cantibile as well as in the bravura style. In this latter respect, her delivery of the difficult "Shadow-song" in the second act was a splendid display of finished executive skill. In rapid scale-singing, passages of shakes, and the command of an exceptional range of high notes, it was a performance of very special merit, and elicited such enthusiastic applause as to necessitate the repetition of the concluding "Allegro." In the fine trio of the torrent-scene, and in other instances, Mdlle. di Murska was also eminently successful, and her reception was such as to indicate that she will again be as popular as during her previous seasons here. The Goatherd's song, at the beginning of the second act, was expressively sung by Madame Pisani, who was much applauded. As on former occasions, Signor Frapolli sang and acted well as Corentino, and Signor Rota was again the representative of Hoel; subordinate characters having been filled by Mdlle. Lido, Signor Franceschi, and M. Thomas. Mr. John Hill conducted the opera with practised ability.

On Tuesday "Carmen" was given, with a repetition of the fine performance of Mdlle. Minnie Hauk in the title-character; and the transference of the part of Escamillo (Toreador) to Signor Pantaleoni, who, in several instances, justified the good opinion he had already gained. The characters of Michaela, Paquita, and Mercedes were sustained, respectively, by Mdlles Lido, Laura Stelzner, and Barnadelli; that of Don José by Signor Tecchi, as before, as were some of the subordinate parts. Signor Li Calsi conducted.

For Wednesday "Lucia di Lammermoor" was announced, with Mdlle. di Murska in the principal character. "Aïda" was to be repeated on Thursday; Mdlle. Minnie Hauk was to appear as Mignon on Friday (yesterday)—for the first time in England; and this (Saturday) evening "Faust" is to be given, with a cast more or less familiar.

THE BRISTOL TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL.

This celebration closed yesterday (Friday) week, with a performance of "The Messiah." Our last week's record was necessarily incomplete, leaving the performances of the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday to be referred to now. On the first-named day Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, with the special feature of Madame Albani's fine singing in some of the solo soprano music; the most important item in which, the great air "Hear ye, Israel" (which opens the second part of the oratorio) was rendered with the same admirable qualities of voice and style as on previous occasions by the same artist. The other soprano music was brightly sung by Miss Emma Thursby; the remaining principal solo vocalists having been Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley.

Wednesday evening's concert opened with Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony, finely played by Mr. Charles Hallé's excellent band, led by Herr Straus, the programme having also included the same composer's hymn, "Hear my prayer," with Madame Albani as solo vocalist, and Brahms's cantata, "Rinaldo," besides miscellaneous pieces. Brahms's work is written for tenor solo, male chorus, and orchestra, the text being adapted from Goethe's poem based on the well-known episode from Tasso's poem. The work has already been spoken of in reference to its performance at a Crystal Palace concert, where, as at Bristol last week, the tenor solo was finely sung by Mr. E. Lloyd, the other portions of the score having been also worthily rendered. The miscellaneous portions of the concert referred to comprised Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon," the introductions to the first and third acts of Wagner's "Lohengrin" (admirably performed by the band), vocal solos by Mesdames Albani and Patey, Miss Emma Thursby, and Mr. Barton McGuckin, and a very effective setting (for chorus and orchestra) by Mr. E. Hecht, of "The Charge of the Light Brigade," conducted by the composer. In this, as generally throughout the festival, the fine singing of the Bristol choir was conspicuous.

Thursday morning's performances of Mozart's "Requiem" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" call for but slight mention, these works—grand and beautiful as they are—being familiar to all from frequent repetition. The soloists in the latter were Mesdames Albani and Trebelli, Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Santley; in the former, Miss Emma Thursby, Madame Patey, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Hilton.

The specialty at Thursday evening's concert was Beethoven's leviathan symphony, the ninth and last of the series, including the choral finale, a setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy." This elaborate work received an admirable interpretation in every respect, the solo vocalists having been Miss E. Thursby, Madame Patey, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Santley. The first part of the concert now referred to opened with Mendelssohn's fine overture composed for a German version of Victor Hugo's "Ruy Blas," and concluded with the garden scene from Goldmark's symphony, "A Rustic Wedding," having also comprised miscellaneous vocal solos, and Raff's "Gavotte and Musette" for pianoforte, charmingly played by Mr. Hallé.

As already said, the celebration closed with the usual festival climax "The Messiah," in which Madame Albani again (as recently at the Hereford Festival) proved that she can excel in sacred music equally as in that of the stage. The other solo vocalists were Miss Thursby, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. B. McGuckin, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Hilton.

Fresh tribute is due to the excellence of Mr. Charles Hallé's conducting—an onerous office under any circumstances, but especially so when combining therewith the position of solo pianist. Mr. Riseley's co-operation at the organ has been a serviceable accessory; and the efficient fulfilment of the duties of chorus-master by Mr. D. W. Rootham must not be overlooked.

The pecuniary success of the festival appears to have answered all expectations, and the excellent institutions in whose behalf the performances were given—the Bristol Royal Infirmary and General Hospital—will doubtless derive such aid therefrom as their extended operations urgently call for.

Mr. Walter Bache's eighth annual pianoforte recital took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when the programme comprised his own performance of a varied selection of pianoforte pieces by Liszt, besides several songs by the same composer rendered by Mr. Santley.

This week's programmes of M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre have included a "Trafalgar" night on Tuesday, a classical night on Wednesday, and a Scotch Festival on Thursday. Yesterday (Friday) Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was to be given, and this (Saturday) evening the anniversary of the Battle of Balaclava is to be celebrated by a grand military concert.

At a meeting of the committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society held on Tuesday evening, it was decided that, as the directors of Exeter Hall are now in a position to continue the society's tenancy of the hall, the concerts will be given in that building as heretofore. The opening performance of the forty-eighth season will therefore take place in November. The committee understand that the building will not be available for musical purposes after October next, and the concerts for the season 1879-80 will therefore be the last series given by the Society in Exeter Hall.

Mr. William Carter's new season will open at the Royal Albert Hall on the 30th inst., when "The Messiah" will be performed. "The Hymn of Praise" and "Stabat Mater" will be given on Dec. 18, "The Messiah" again on Jan. 1, "Elijah" on Feb. 19; and there will also be four national concerts.

THEATRES.

"Fernande" has been withdrawn from the bills of the Court Theatre, and a new and original comedy, in three acts, from the prolific pen of Mr. H. J. Byron, entitled "Courtship, or the Three Caskets," has been substituted in its stead. Mr. Byron takes a somewhat cynical view of the subject his story illustrates, exhibiting wealth and station as woman's foremost attractions in the race for matrimonial distinction, beauty and goodness appearing as simple makeweights in the balance. He also presents the novel spectacle of a woman wooed by neglect and assumed indifference less erringly than by other and more seductive methods. "She is a woman, and therefore may be wooed," sagely observes the hero, alluding to his mistress, further supplementing, "She is a woman, and therefore may be won." Acting on this conclusion, he proceeds to inflict upon his idol every petty slight and indignity which his tyranny, under the name of disinterested passion, can devise. The lady has a taste for painting—he finds fault with her pictures and praises those of her opposite neighbour. She visits the theatre; he declines to accompany her, preferring to stay at home and flirt with an insignificant lady acquaintance. When, in short, his conduct approaches the height of absurdity, and he appears in a light truly ridiculous, then we behold the phenomenon of a woman wooed and won. But, with all his perversities, our hero comes nobly forth at an important crisis, when, apparently dispossessed of rank and fortune, the lady is suddenly deserted by her butterfly wooers, and she discovers at her side her single stanch adherent. The same, however, is but a plot concocted between the heroine and one Blatchford, her confidential adviser, to test the sincerity of her suitors. Discovering the deception practised, the lover becomes indignant, and declares his engagement with the heiress null and void. The lady is ultimately released from her dilemma by the discovery of her uncle, supposed to be drowned, in the person of Mr. Blatchford, and a right understanding is speedily effected between the parties. Such is a brief outline of the plot, which, it may be seen, is composed of slender materials. The author mainly depends upon the smartness of his dialogue, which in this production does not fall short of his previous efforts. Laughter and applause attend his numerous witticisms; and, despite the discrepancies in his story, the curtain falls on a complete success. We may remark that the same scene serves for the three acts, and that the action is comprehended within the space of twenty-four hours. The acting is good. Mr. Charles Coghlan gives a masterly rendering of the hero, Edward Trentham, and the foppish effrontery of the high-born Claude de Courcy is admirably depicted by Mr. Wilson-Barrett. As the vulgar Phineas Gubbins, Mr. G. W. Anson is irresistibly comic; and the characters of Mr. Blatchford and Tom Lilford are adequately represented by Mr. Edward Price and Mr. H. Reeves Smith. Miss Amy Roselle is charming as the heroine, Millicent Vivian; and Mrs Leigh Murray gives a droll impersonation of a widow, Mrs. M'Tartar. Miss Emmeline Ormsby as Fanny Trevelyan is unaffected and natural. On the first night the author and his exponents were loudly summoned at the fall of the curtain.

At the Imperial, Miss Lytton has replaced the "Beaux Stratagem" with the younger Colman's comedy of "The Poor Gentleman." The piece, as we know, has sterling merits, and appears as highly relished by modern audiences as it was by those of a bygone generation. Undoubtedly, it has lost none of its flavour in the process of keeping, and the jokes of Dr. Ollapod and the argumentative proclivities of Sir Robert Bramble are as richly enjoyed as ever. The cast is a strong one, Mr. Lionel Brough appearing as Dr. Ollapod, Mr. William Farren as Sir Robert Bramble, and Mrs. Stirling as Miss Lucretia M'Tab. The whole is well mounted.

At the Olympic, Mr. J. R. Gibson has appeared as Sir Pertinax Macsycophant in Charles Macklin's comedy of "The Man of the World." Mr. Gibson has cultivated a fine Scotch accent, and is a clever, intelligent, and painstaking actor. His assumption of the character was perfectly successful.

Mr. Hollingshead has completed his arrangements for a season of two months' French plays at the Gaiety Theatre next season. Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt, with M. Coquelin and a strong company, will appear for the first month. "Frou Frou," "Adrienne Lecouvreur," "Jeanne Marie," are among the plays proposed, as well as a selection from the classic repertory. During the second month the company of the Palais Royal will represent their most favourite pieces.

The Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, was reopened on Monday night after extensive enlargements and alterations, which have occupied the past three months.

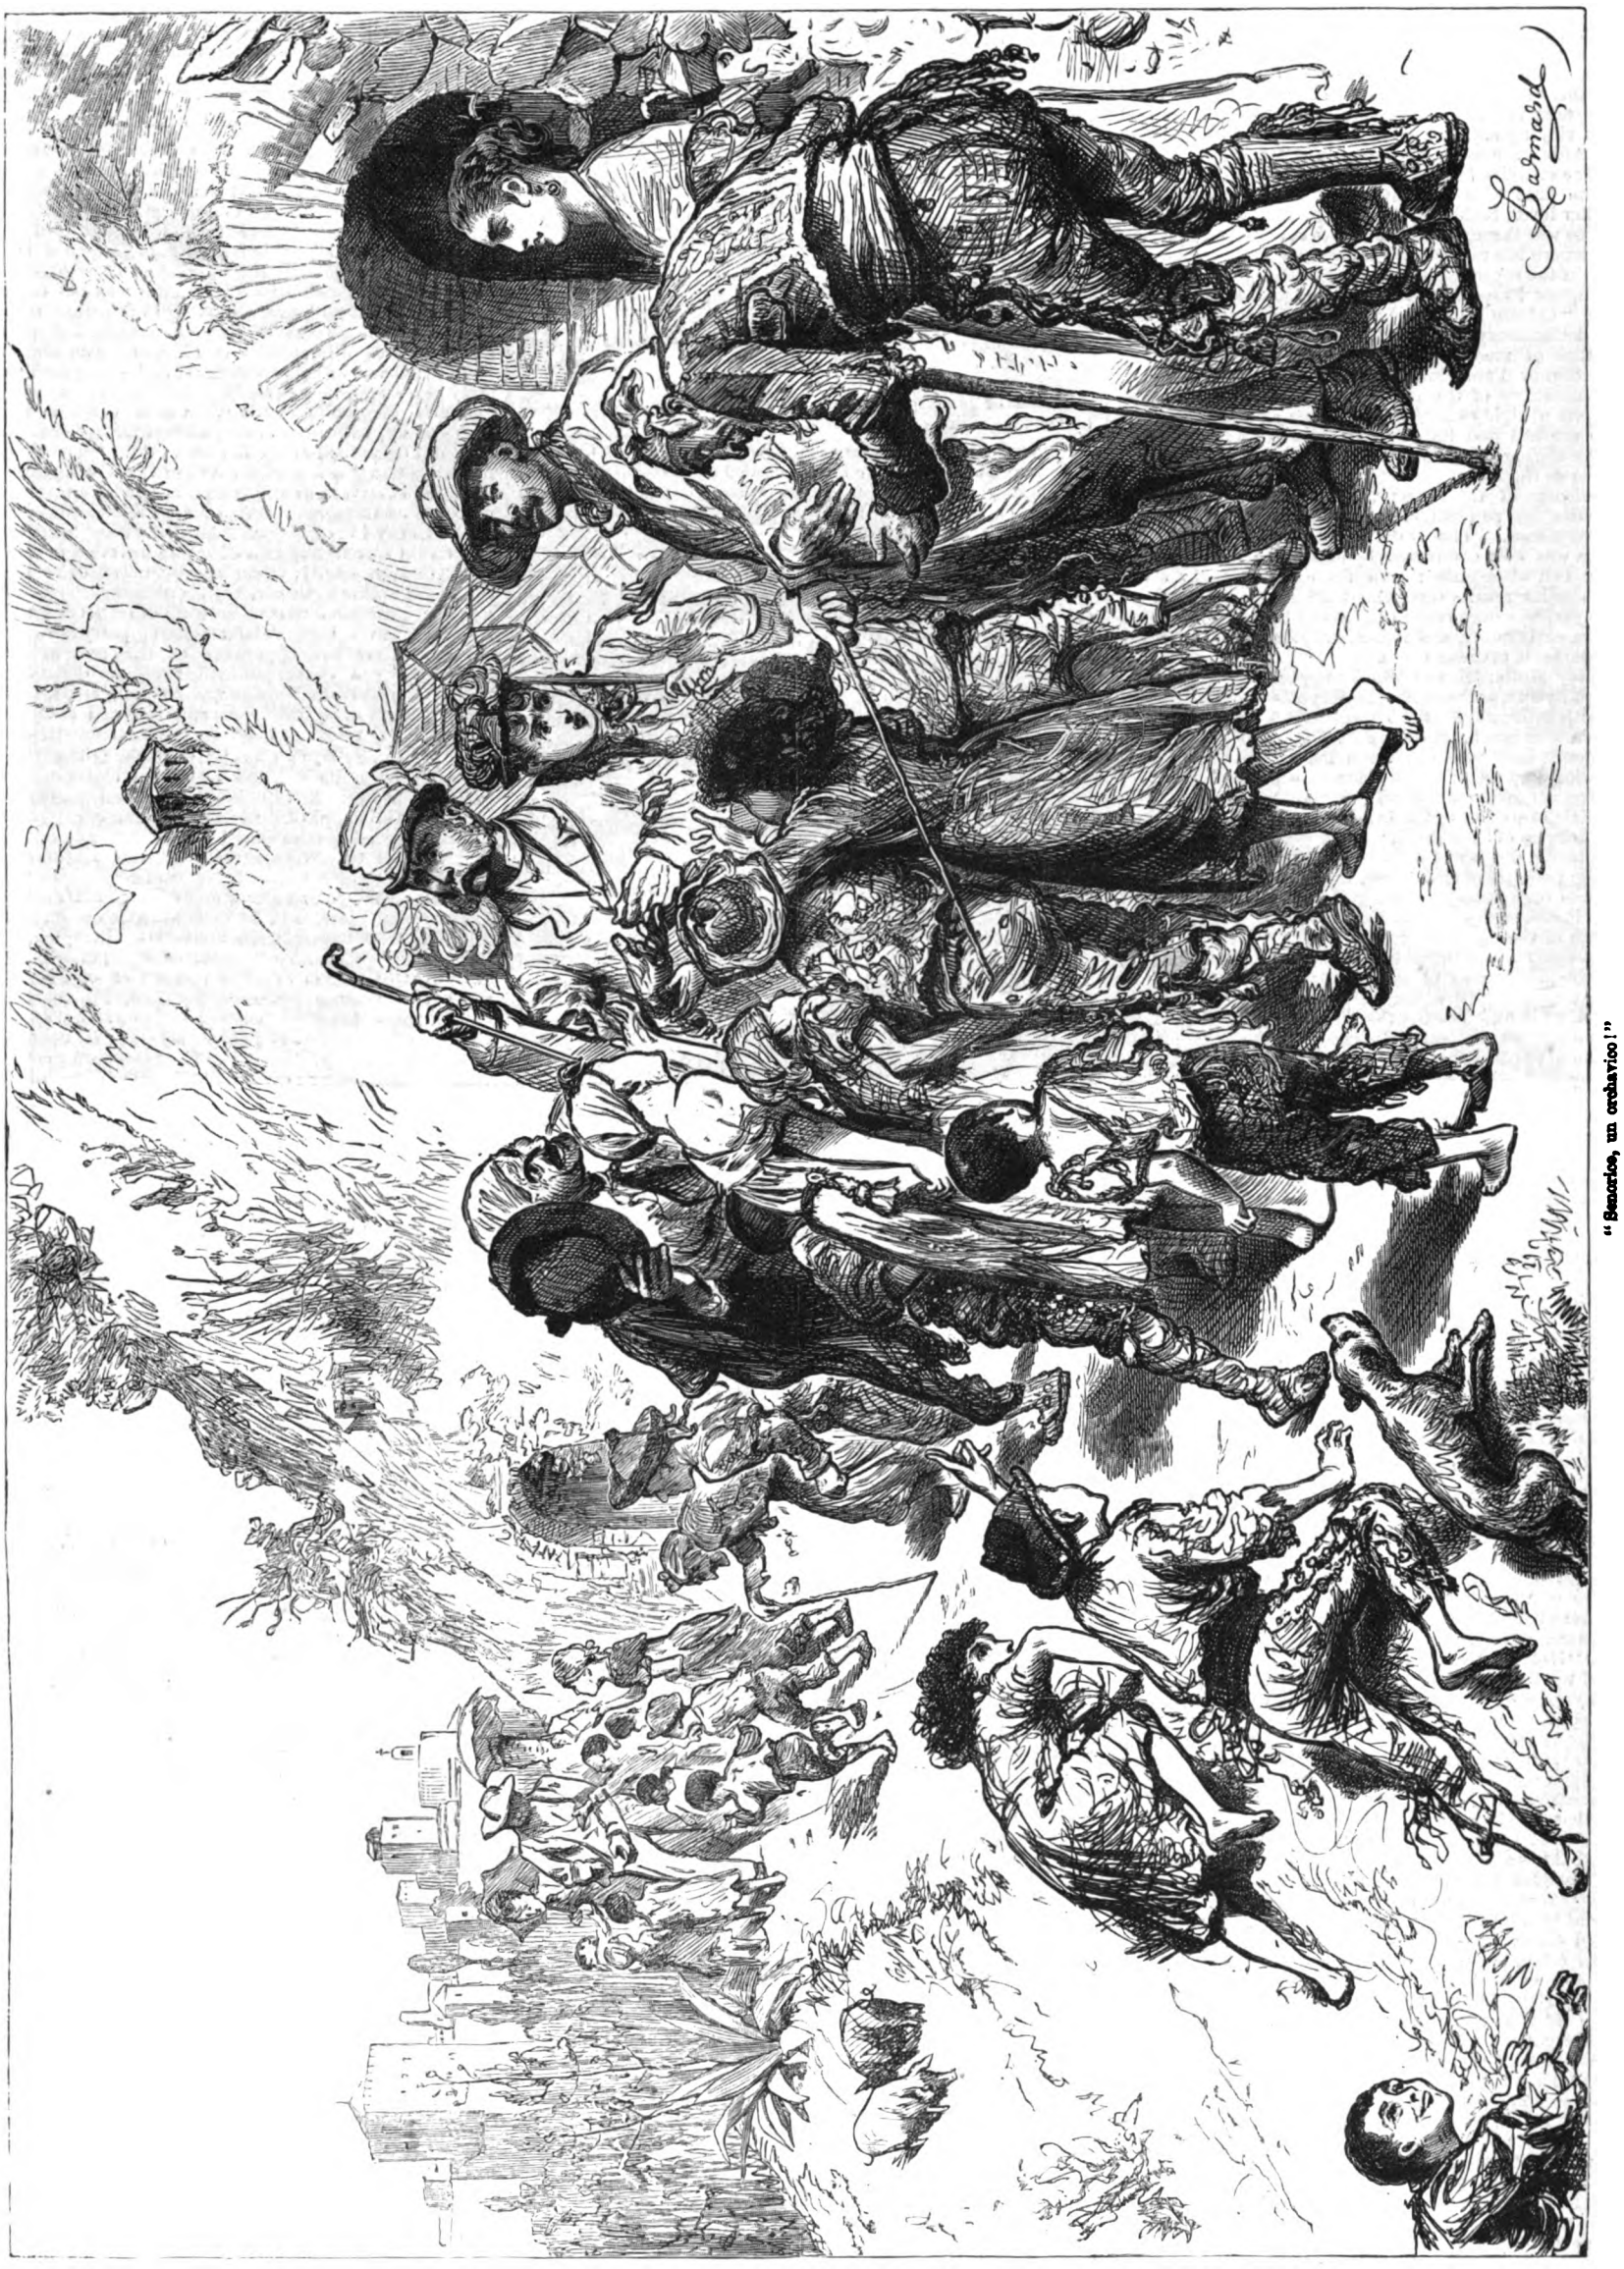
THE QUARTERLIES.

In the October number of the Quarterly Review, there are several articles of literary and historical discussion worth reading; Pascal for one, Albert Dürer for another, being stars of individual celebrity that have not lost their attraction. As topics of home interest, the history of the College of Physicians, from their "Roll" set forth with biographical sketches by Dr. W. Munk, and the life of Bishop Herbert de Losinga, founder of Norwich Cathedral in the twelfth century, take hold of the Englishman's mind. Continental nations, with their conflicting views of religion, morals, and government, since the French Revolution of 1789, afford an endless study, to which Count Joseph de Maistre, and his opinions of Russia sixty years ago, may contribute something. A review of Mr. Froude's biography of Julius Cæsar deals seriously, but temperately, with the vicious public character of the author of Imperial despotism in the Roman world. "The Weather and its Prediction" is a brief account of the recent employment of scientific observations and computations for a purpose of great practical usefulness. Another favourite historical subject, the life of Henry IV. of France, is treated with sufficient attention. The recent sore feeling and outcry of a section of the Anglican High Church clergy, under the operation of laws enforcing the Royal authority in matters ecclesiastical, gives occasion to an article, intended to conciliate them with the prospect of a working Convocation. The impending party struggle between the supporters and opponents of the present Ministry is heralded by a stern political note of defiance, entitled "Principles at Stake." The Quarterly, in short, maintains its solid Conservative, orthodox and national character, is as respectable as ever, but not very brilliant.

Quite unlike it, as everybody knows, is the New Quarterly Magazine, with its mixture of fiction and poetry, æsthetic criticism, utilitarian statistics, and Radical politics, each kind tolerably well supplied in the current number. The quality of the last-named species may be considered rather drastic. Its first dose is to advocate the wholesale transfer of Indian administrative offices, district collectorships or magistrateships, from Englishmen to natives of India. In the second place, Irish Home Rule, which is described as something very different from Repeal, finds a resolved champion, "a Home-Rule M.P.," who greatly admires Mr. Parnell. The army short-service system and the reforms of workhouse management and visiting proposed by Mrs. Nassau Senior, are treated in a practical manner. The series of descriptive notices of the great public schools is continued with one upon Rugby. Mr. R. L. Stevenson contributes a tale, "The Story of a Lie," which is not wanting in vigour, but lacks delicacy of sentiment, though not positively objectionable in any way. There is, on the contrary, an exquisite refinement of feeling, and the glow of poetic imagination, in "The Maid of Song," by Dr. T. Gordon Hake. A critical essay on "Realism in Dramatic Art," leading to a severe condemnation of such pieces as "L'Assommoir," deserves thoughtful consideration in these days of sensational excitement. The works and studies of the late Mr. G. H. Lewes, as literary artist and critic, man of science, and philosopher, came under the notice of another writer.

The contents of the Church Quarterly Review, as usual, have been assorted mainly for the instruction or gratification of clerical readers, or those who cherish a sympathy with that reverend order in view of High Church doctrines. Leaving, however, such dissertations as those on "Diocesan Synods," "Preaching in Rome," and "The Doctrine of the Fathers on the Real Presence," we find articles upon English middle-class education, the Wellington despatches, and the art and "faith" of Phidias, which have more general interest. There is one of antiquarian biography, that of "St. Hugh of Lincoln."



THE GIPSY CAVES OF GRANADA.

The tourist in Spain, while at Granada, having duly admired the Alhambra, with its historic Moorish magnificence, and visited the tomb of the Catholic Sovereigns Ferdinand and Isabella, may stroll up the neighbouring hillside. He may there find a series of human burrows in the earth, not much unlike a rabbit warren. These habitations of "the Spanish Gipsy"—for we are reminded of George Eliot's fine dramatic poem—have a curious aspect; but with odd little whitewashed chimneys cropping out of the ground above them, and the doorways overhung with trained vines, they are not destitute of comfort. In summer they afford a cool dwelling-place, and they are equally snug in winter. If they were generally kept clean, they would be as tolerable as many rustic cottages in England. The inhabitants, men, women, and children, have a singular propensity for extracting small coins from the purses of foreign visitors. They call these indiscriminately "Franchutes," which in their dialect is Frenchmen. Gipsy women accost each lady of the party with a proposal to tell her fortune. The younger fry of boys and girls are not less willing to show their agility in a "rona," or scramble for coppers. One word is constantly on their lips; that is "un orchavico," the minutest piece of money, worth about half a farthing. The "senorico," as they call the strange gentleman, is vociferously importuned for this trifling gift.

It was stated at a conference on emigration and the depressed state of trade, held on Monday at the Homerton Evangelical Hall, that the ex-Mayor of Natal is prepared to take out in a short time 200 artizans, provided each man can raise £10, and a resolution was passed asking the various friendly societies if they are desirous of forming a fund by which the subscribers would have the privilege of voting passages for persons who had been nominated to go to the colonies.

The Great Northern Railway Company ran for the first time last Saturday a dining-room and drawing-room car from King's-cross to Peterborough and back. About fifty persons travelled on this trial-trip, and the arrangements worked successfully. These cars will be attached for the present to the morning and afternoon express-trains between Leeds and King's-cross; and, as soon as the arrangements can be brought into thorough working order, second as well as first class passengers will be admitted at a small charge for dinner.

The proposal of the War Office to compel the retirement or removal to the reserve of all volunteers over fifty years of age has been modified, with a view to meeting special cases.

The creditors of the City of Glasgow Bank have received payment of the third dividend on their claims. The liquidators have now paid to the creditors in the three dividends, amounting to 13s. 4d., a sum of about £7,400,000, which, irrespective of the 5 per cent interest, leaves about £3,600,000 yet to pay.

Black resigned.

The contents of the English chess magazines for the current month are unusually varied and instructive. The Chessplayers' Chronicle (W. W. Morgan, 67, Barbican) presents a large number of games, carefully annotated, tourney problems, and the events of the chess-playing and problem-composing circles in the monthly record. The remarkably able review of Mr. Gossip's Theory of the openings is concluded, and the initials appended show that these clever papers have been contributed by the Rev. Mr. Wayte.

The Huddersfield College Magazine (John Watkinson, Fairfield, Huddersfield) opens with two competing problems in the conditional tourney, and these are followed by an account of the match between Messrs. Potter and Mason from the pen of the former gentleman, illustrated by one of the games played in the match from the Illustrated London News. A challenge problem in twenty-one moves, by G. Reichelm, of Philadelphia, dedicated to Mr J. A. Miles, who offers the sixth volume of the Westminster Papers as a prize for the first correct solution; "Chess Jottings," and three tourney problems make up an excellent number.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated April 12, 1870) with two codicils (dated Aug. —, 1876, and July 31, 1879) of Mr. Edward Blore, late of No. 4, Manchester-square, who died on the 4th ult., was proved on the 11th inst. by the Rev. Edward William Blore, the son, Charles Keyser, and the Rev. Thomas Vere Bayne, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. Among other legacies, the testatrix bequeaths £20 to the convalescent fund of the Berks County Hospital, Reading, and £10 to the poor of each of the parishes of Binfield and Hurst, Berks. As to the residue of her property, the testatrix gives one half to her said sister, and the other half upon trust for her nephew, William Charles Golding.

The testator gives, devises, and bequeaths all his estate and interest in the chancel of the parish church of Winterborne Whitchurch to his son, the said Joseph Gustavus Fowler, his heirs and assigns, absolutely, on condition that he do keep the memorial windows which he, the testator, had put up, the family tablets therein, and also the chancel itself in good order and condition. NEW RAILWAY IN NORTH WALES.

The new line from Bettws-y-Coed to Festiniog, through the Lledr Valley, has been constructed by the London and North-Western Railway Company for the purpose of obtaining access to the famous slate quarrying district of Merionethshire. This line, which has now been opened for traffic, is only twelve and a quarter miles in length, and of the ordinary guage. It forms another valuable link in the chain of Welsh railway communication, as it not only opens up to the tourist a grand and charming stretch of country before little known or frequented, except by pedestrians, anglers, and artists, but also provides superior facilities for the large output of slates from the various quarries in active operation in that neighbourhood. The terminus of the line, at Blaenan Festiniog, adjoins the station of the Festiniog narrow guage railway, which enables passengers to get to and from Port Madoc, Barmouth, and other places on the Welsh coast. The cost of the line has been upwards of half a million sterling, and so heavy and difficult has been the nature of the works, that its construction has extended over a period of five years. The whole of the works have, however, been satisfactorily carried out under the superintendence of the company's district engineer, Mr. W. Smith, C.E. We present two Illustrations, one of the Lledr Viaduct, and one of the valley of that river at Bryn-y-Fedw, not far from Dolwyddelan, at the foot of Moel Siabod.

A shock of earthquake is reported as having been distinctly felt at several places in West Cumberland at about half-past five last Saturday morning. At Maryport, in several houses chairs, doors, and tables were rattled.

Liverpool emigration returns for August show an increase of over 6000 as compared with last year. Only one tenth of the emigrants were Irish, two thirds having been English. The total number was 14,739, against 9302 last year.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided on the 16th inst. over a great demonstration held at Carnarvon in connection with the Welsh auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The Bishop of Bangor, Lord Penrhyn, Mr. Bulkeley Hughes, M.P., and others took part in the proceedings.

ON AN AVERAGE, about every seven days AN OPPOSITION VELVETEEN to the "LOUIS" is started and endeavoured to be introduced to public notice under one name or another. Not only is the style of making up, and the stamping of the name on the back of every yard resorted to IN ORDER TO DECEIVE, but they are actually asserted to be equal or superior. THE Proprietor of the "LOUIS" Velveteen, whilst admitting that "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery," cannot but caution the public that the genuine article is stamped,

THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN, RICKETS, AND ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that DR. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Phys. Hosp. for Dis. of the Throat and Chest, London.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1879.

Speculation has been rife during the week as to the chances of a General Election before the end of the present year. Reasons have been assigned for and against the occurrence, none of which, looked at separately, nor all of which, taken together, can be regarded as presenting any very high degree of probability. The likelihood is that the public will have no certain foreknowledge of what is about to take place until the Gazette shall inform them that the present Parliament is dissolved. In many respects an immediate dissolution is preferable to a deferred one. It is seldom that the Session of Parliament next preceding its Constitutional demise is productive of much important or useful legislation. Members are too intent upon what is to come after to give due consideration to that which is before them. An electioneering Session is almost sure to be a comparatively barren Session. Party passions usually run highest when the issues with which they have to do approach most nearly to their close. The present Parliament is necessarily losing much of that authority which it enjoyed in the earlier part of its career. The successor to its inheritance is now the principal object of men's expectation. Curiosity is chiefly excited in regard to what it will be in character and what it will do when Power is transferred to it, and less importance is attached to the proceedings, foreseen or possible, of the Legislature the term of whose existence is about to expire. For public reasons, therefore, of a general nature, bearing upon political progress, and quite irrespective of Party, one would choose, if it were in his power to do so, to shorten as much as possible what may be called "the pangs of dissolution."

On the other hand, it would seem undesirable to precipitate just now the excitement of a General Election. At any time it is a detriment to trade, diverting into a boisterous and unproductive channel those energies which are required in the ordinary routine of business. The present moment would be specially ill-chosen for such a political struggle "all along the line." Ill-chosen, we mean, of course, in regard to the Trade interests of the Empire. These are just reviving, after a long decline; are beginning to shake off a torpor which appeared to be interminable; are surmounting—if, indeed, this is not too highly coloured a description of their present state—the difficulties with which they have been beset; and are acquiring, it may be, somewhat prematurely, renewed confidence, and nearly forgotten strength. They are specially susceptible now to external influences of an alien character. They cannot bear the shock of a General Election without suffering a disadvantage therefrom. It is just possible that six months hence they will have sufficiently recovered from previous depression to be able to spare the temporary attention and activity which a political crisis like the present is sure to involve. Under present circumstances, it cannot fail to be regretted that the course of business in the country should meet with any other check than that which may arise out of its own internal condition; and, in this view of the question, such a postponement of it as may be found compatible with law and with the political well-being of the community would meet with general acquiescence.

But the British Public will rejoice to see the next General Election behind, instead of in front of it. The suspense which is caused by the prospect of it is, for the time being, worse than any decision at which it must arrive, be it what it may. It paralyses by its very nature a vast amount of useful action. It diminishes the country's influence for good upon political movements in all parts of the world. What England will be, or say, or do, in any given case affecting the proximate future is usually an important factor in the government of European States. Uncertainty, therefore, is not only unpleasant to ourselves, but is disadvantageous to the principles and interests which we wish to prevail abroad. No moribund Parliament can exercise powerful control over the Foreign Policy of the Empire, which, necessarily in the case supposed, falls under the exclusive guidance (unchecked by the counsels of the people's representatives) of the Government for the time being.

No one, however, can reasonably complain of being left at present without a political stimulus, or means of enlightenment. The Titans of the political sphere are exerting themselves with almost unprecedented earnestness. The battle of Parties is assuming quite an heroic form. Chief follows chief with briefest interval in using the weapon with which he may chance to be most familiar for purposes of offence or defence. All the chief statesmen and orators of the country and the times pass and repass across the stage in quick succession. The struggle becomes more exciting as weeks roll on; the rhetoric more passionate, the stake at issue more distinctly visible. Let the General Election come when it will—next week or next autumn—the electors will know pretty well what is the question they are called upon to decide. The judgment they will deliver in either case will rest upon the past and reach forward to the future. No doubt, it will in many instances be qualified by personal and local feelings. But there is a fair prospect that, on the whole, it will be intelligible and final. Final, that is, so far as political movements can assume such a character.

One result, we fancy, of the present conflict of Parties may be confidently anticipated—namely, a somewhat closer attention than has been given of late to the domestic policy of this country. Legislation, it is true, is very far from being the most effective instrument for fashioning social good. But, other things being equal, it is always to be desired that law should keep pace with the progress of the community. There still remains much in our Statute book that calls for repeal, and there is much needing to be enacted. Little has been done, and that little very imperfectly, to adapt the expressions of public authority to the changing state and obvious needs of modern society. We shall, no doubt, have a spell of domestic legislation in the next Parliament, with which Party soever the majority may lie. So far the Nation, we think, has some reason to be glad. No reputation we may gain abroad ought to make us content to go slipshod at home. We are told upon the highest authority what to think of a man who neglects his own household. Such neglect, we rejoice to think, can only be temporary in this country. The indifference of to-day is sure to be cured by the increased earnestness of to-morrow.

It is stated that Lord Sydney has been appointed Captain of Deal Castle, in the room of the late Lord Clanwilliam.

The Earl of Stamford and Warrington has presented to the town of Altrincham about sixteen acres of land for the purposes of a public park.

Lord Northbrook, as head of the Indian Institute Committee, has received a letter from the Maharajah of Vizianagram intimating that the Maharanee intends contributing £1000 toward the fund now being formed by Professor Monier Williams for establishing an Indian institute at Oxford.

The opening of the Sydney International Exhibition, at the capital of New South Wales, on Sept. 17, was briefly reported by telegraph in the London papers at that time. But the first detailed account of it in print has just now reached us from Adelaide, the capital of South Australia. The South Australian Register, of Sept. 19, contained a report, five or six columns in length, telegraphed by its own correspondent from Sydney to Adelaide, describing the exhibition and the opening ceremonial. This edition of the Adelaide newspaper has been sent to England by the steam-ship Garonne, of the new Orient Line, coming homeward through the Suez Canal, but has been forwarded from Alexandria viâ Brindisi. It arrives here some days before any Sydney papers of Sept. 17 can be expected.

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice passed a day or two at the Glassalt Shiel last week; and during their sojourn the Empress Eugénie paid a visit to her Majesty, who showed the Empress through all the rooms in the Royal Cottage, and entered the servants' hall while tea was being served. During the absence of the Queen from Balmoral a dance was given by command of her Majesty in the Iron Ball-Room, near the castle, to the keepers and ghillies and a few of the tenantry on the local estates. THE GREAT FLOODS IN SPAIN.

Our Foreign News of last week gave some account of the disastrous floods in the south of Spain, chiefly in the provinces of Murcia and Granada, caused by sudden rain-storms, beginning on the 14th ult;, which swelled the mountain torrents of the Sierra Sagra and the Sierra Nevada. The river Segura, flowing from the first-named range eastward to the Mediterranean coast, through Murcia and part of Valencia, overflowed its banks, and the inundation submerged a fertile and populous district. One of our Illustrations is a view of the town of Murcia, the capital of the province of that name. It stands in the middle of a luxuriant "huerta," or plain, irrigated after the style of the Moors, and hard by flows the Segura, the Serebis of the ancients. On its banks the vegetation is very active, with rich fields of tall canes, aloes, esparto, and maize, and here and there the peasants' houses, with thatched roofs and made of earth, hard baked. Wherever there is water in the sunburnt provinces of the south of the Peninsula the country has a pleasant aspect. Murcia a few days ago possessed gardens and inclosures where flowers and shrubs in plenty could be seen under palm trees and mulberries. The lower parts of the town are near the Segura, and these suburbs of San Benito and San Lorenzo are protected by high embankments, between which in ordinary times is a sluggish stream meandering across a broad and rocky bed. Beyond Murcia, down the river, are many villages like Alcantarilla and Benjajain, which also stand in huertas and well-cultivated plains. The stream in its course towards the sea receives many tributaries, on whose banks are situated Lorca, on the Mundo, Totana, Hellin, and Lorqui. In the lower valley is the important town of Orihuela. These districts in the valleys of the Mundo and Segura were the scene of the floods. They had experienced an unusually hot summer even in that torrid region, and for several months not a drop of rain had fallen, not a cloud had been seen until the violent storm, which in one night brought an overwhelming deluge. Lorca and Orihuela, which are towns, respectively, of twenty-three thousand and fifty thousand inhabitants, were surprised and flooded. The damage done in Orihuela was even greater than at Lorca, as a suburb was entirely under water for two days. More than five hundred houses were either destroyed or had to be abandoned by order of the authorities. Nearly two thousand five hundred persons were left homeless, having saved nothing but what they had on when taken away from their houses by the boats and barges manned by sailors and Civil Guards. In Lorca the force of the flood was so great that not only the poorer dwellings in the suburbs, but large and strong houses of the gentry, were turned into a heap of ruins. In some houses whole families are reported missing, and the Alcalde of Lorca says that seventeen hundred persons are destitute. He also reports that he has found nearly one hundred bodies, mostly women, children, and invalids, who could not be moved quickly enough. In Orihuela the casualty list exceeds eighty victims, and, as in the case of Murcia, no exact total can yet be given. The ruins will not easily be explored when the local authorities have to look after fifteen thousand fugitives or destitute persons in three provinces, not to speak of those who persisted in staying at half-ruined houses and farms. The loss of property and life in the rural districts is quite appalling. The Governors and members for Murcia, Alicante, and Almeria believe that more than three thousand human beings have perished, while three millions sterling would not cover the material losses of towns and wealth. Along the south coast of Spain, from Almeria westward to Malaga, and to the boundary of the province of Seville, many localities situated beneath the Sierra Nevada have felt this calamitous visitation. We present views of several of the places above named, the seaports of Almeria and Malaga, and the unfortunate town of Orihuela, as well as Murcia. All ranks and classes in Spain, from King Alfonso and the highest grandees and prelates downwards, are engaged in the work of providing and dispensing relief to the distressed people.

At the Central Criminal Court on Saturday last Adolphus Rosenberg, proprietor and publisher of Town Talk, was put upon his trial on three separate indictments charging him with publishing libels concerning Mr. and Mrs. Langtry, Mr. and Mrs. Cornwallis West, and Lord Londesborough in that paper. In regard to the case of Mr. and Mrs. Langtry, the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and, on that account, the prosecution in the other cases was not carried out. The Judge postponed the delivery of his sentence till Monday, and meanwhile Messrs. Head and Mark, the printers of the paper, who had pleaded guilty to the charge of publication, were admitted to bail. On Monday Adolphus Rosenberg was sentenced by Mr. Justice Hawkins to eighteen months' imprisonment for the libels upon Mrs. Langtry and to enter into his recognizances in the sum of £1000 to keep the peace for a further term of eighteen months at the expiration of the sentence; for the libel on Lord Londesborough he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment; and for the libel on Mrs. Cornwallis West also to six months' imprisonment, all three terms to be concurrent—why not consecutive? The printers of the paper were ordered to enter into their recognizances in £1000 to appear for judgment when called upon to do so.—Mr. Henry Cox, the proprietor of the Licensed Victuallers' Gazette, appeared on Tuesday at the Bow-street Police Court, in answer to an adjourned summons charging him with publishing in his paper, in an article headed "People we Meet on Racecourses," a libel on Mr. Matthew Dawson, a Newmarket trainer. It was stated in court that the case had been arranged, the defendant having agreed to pay all the costs, and to publish in various papers a retractation of the libellous statements.

THE AFGHAN DIFFICULTY.

The British military occupation of Cabul is daily strengthened by completing the defensive lines; and the opening of permanent communications with the Peshawur and Khyber Pass column, throughout the Khoord Cabul and Gundamuk, will be accomplished in a few days more. The route from Ali Khel, over the Shutargardan, will then be abandoned for the winter, as the snow must soon make it impassable; and Colonel Money, who had some severe fighting with the Ghilzais on the 19th ult., will bring the regiments under his command, with four mountain guns, on to Cabul. General Sir F. Roberts has quartered a portion of his force at Sherpur, and expects to collect sufficient supplies for the winter. He has received the submission of the head men of Kohistan, north of Cabul.

The city is quiet, under the rule of Major-General J. Hills, V.C., C.B., the Military Governor. Inquiry into the circumstances of the attack on the Residency is proceeding. Meanwhile, Sirdar Yahya Khan, Yakoob's father-in-law, the ex-Governor of the city, also the Wazeer and the Mustaufi, or Finance Minister, are under close arrest. The special commission of inquiry consists of Colonel Macgregor, Dr. Bellew, and Hyat Khan. Another commission, consisting of Brigadier-General Massy and Majors Moriarty and Guinness, has sentenced five men to death, including the City Kotwal, who was prominent in inciting and organising the resistance at Char-Asiab on the 6th ult., also a man implicated in dishonouring the bodies of members of the Embassy. They were hanged on the 20th in front of the Residency. The Ameer is voluntarily in General Roberts's camp, which, though under no restraint, he never leaves, declining even riding exercise with the General or his Aide-de-Camp. He is apparently in a pitiable state of apathy and depression.

The latest news, to the hour of this writing, is by a telegram from the Viceroy of India on Wednesday. It was defeated and dispersed by Colonel Kenuedy, with the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, detachments of the 59th Infantry and 2nd Belooch Regiment, and three guns of the 11th Brigade Royal Artillery. The loss on our side was two men killed and twenty-six wounded, amongst the latter Captain Sartorius, of the 59th, and Captain Broom, of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William has, with his usual energy, recommenced the conduct of State affairs. Several Ministers and Court notabilities have had audiences with his Majesty since his return to Berlin.

The Emperor William opened the Prussian Diet on Tuesday with a speech from the throne in which he alluded to the new tariff, which, however, would not affect the estimates for next year to an appreciable extent, and the deficiency in the revenue would have to be met by a loan. Bills would be presented on the trade in spirituous liquors and for the purchase of the railways, and his Majesty announced that the Government would propose the construction of several new lines. Other matters of internal reform were mentioned, which, said the Emperor, would "open up an extensive field of important legislative labour." Various passages of the speech were received with applause. At the entry of the Emperor into the hall, as also at his departure, three cheers were given for his Majesty. The Upper House proceeded to the election of its president and vice-presidents, and re-elected the former occupants of those offices by acclamation—The Duke von Ratibor is president, Count Arnim von Boitzenburg first and Chief Burgomaster Hasselbach second vice-president.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

In Monday's sitting of the Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath the draughts of the addresses of the majority and the minority in reply to the Speech from the Throne were read and discussed. On the motion for the general debate, no member rose to address the House, and consequently the discussion of each separate clause was proceeded with. The first two paragraphs of the address of the majority were adopted without debate. A discussion, however, ensued upon the third paragraph, in which several Archdukes and Cardinals took part. Count Taafe, the Minister President, addressed the House, saying that the paragraph under discussion was not quite compatible with the Speech from the Throne, but that in other respects the two addresses were in harmony. The Government was desirous that the Constitution should not only repose upon the laws of the country, but should also take root in the hearts of the people. He therefore desired the adoption of a single address for the purpose of general reconciliation. Herr Hübner then proposed an amendment, which was referred to the Address Committee, by which it was immediately discussed, the sitting of the House being meanwhile suspended. Upon the resumption of the sitting the reporter of the committee announced that the two parties had not been able to come to an agreement. The House then divided upon Herr Hübner's amendment, which was supported by the Government, but rejected by 78 votes against 59. Ultimately the Address of the majority with the insertion of the paragraphs concerning the military law was adopted en bloc.

In Tuesday's sitting of the Lower House the Minister of Finance presented the Estimates for 1880. The balance closes with a deficit this year of twelve million florins. This deficit it is proposed to cover without having recourse to any new credit, and for this purpose the Government would propose several alterations in the stamps and special taxes, increasing the tax upon lottery prizes to 20 per cent, raising the stamp duty on playing cards, introducing a fixed stamp duty on remittances and reimbursements of money, abolishing various abatements of taxation, increasing the stamp upon applications to the judicial tribunals and on contracts of insurance. The total increase of revenue which the Government expects from these changes is 5,800,000 fl. Moreover, the Government intends to impose a tax on the consumption of home mineral oils, and at the same time increase the customs duty upon petroleum from 3 fl. to 8 fl., thereby providing an addition to the revenue of 4,800,000 fl. According to the Ministerial proposals, the duty on brandy is to realise an additional revenue of 1,500,000 fl. The Government furthermore propose as temporary measures only applicable to the year 1880 the imposition of a 10 per cent tax upon passenger traffic on railways and steamers, and a supplementary tax upon all incomes exceeding 1400 fl.; these measures are estimated to yield 4,000,000. The financial statement concluded by stating that reductions in the expense of administration, a thorough reform in the system of taxation, the introduction of a general income tax, and the taxation of joint-stock companies, would firmly secure a financial equilibrium in the future.

In the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet yesterday week Bills were presented by the Government for establishing a Customs union with Bosnia and Herzegovina, and for the union of Dalmatia, Istria, the town of Brody, and several Hungarian free ports on the Adriatic, with the Customs territory of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy.

Count Szapary, Minister of Finance, introduced the Hungarian Budget for 1880 in the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet on Tuesday. It shows a deficit of 18,000,000 fl., for covering which 15,000,000 fl. of rente not yet issued and railway obligations to the nominal value of 11,000,000 fl. are still available. The Minister declared that his department was prepared to pay the coupon due on Jan. 1 next from this year's Treasury balances. The Minister subsequently introduced a bill relating to the application of the sinking fund, the issue of bonds for the relief of landholders, and of bonds for redeeming the wine tithes, by which the Minister expects to realise a saving of 4,000,000 fl. per annum. He also presented bills for securing an increase in the customs duty upon petroleum, the abolition of taxes upon articles of luxury, and for modifying the income tax of the second class and the tax upon transport.

The Greek members of the Commission stated their demands; and Sawas Pasha, Minister for Foreign Affairs, has addressed a note to the Powers pointing out that these demands exceed the frontier line indicated in the thirteenth protocol of the Berlin Congress.

By a large majority, the bill for the revision of the Constitution was passed by the Senate on Thursday night. On Sunday the Senate voted political rights to 888 Jews who had served in the Roumanian army during the war of independence. There were thirty-eight senators present, and thirty-three voted for the enfranchisement. The Prince has approved the project as it passed the two Chambers; and his message dissolving the Constituent Assembly and convening it as an ordinary Legislature was read in both Houses on Sunday.

A Cabinet Council has decided that the first important measure to be introduced by the Government during the extraordinary Session of the Chambers ending Nov. 12 shall be a bill for the purchase of the Roumanian railways by the State.

The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec met on Tuesday. Mr. Joly, the Premier, brought forward a resolution confirming the vote of supply passed by the Assembly before its adjournment on Sept. 2, and protesting against the action of the Legislative Council in refusing to sanction the vote. An amendment was subsequently moved by the opposition in favour of the formation of a strong conciliatory Ministry.

A meeting has been held at Montreal of the friends of Sir Francis Hincks, director of the Consolidated Bank in that city, who was recently found guilty of having signed false returns to the Government respecting the affairs of the bank. AMERICA.

President Hayes on Monday received Señor Justo Arosemena, the new Colombian Minister, who, in presenting his credentials to the President, said that Colombia more than other countries needed to cultivate friendly relations with the United States owing to the Panama railroad and the prospective canal through the isthmus. The President replied, cordially welcoming Señor Arosemena.

Secretary Sherman, in a speech delivered on Monday at a mass meeting in New York, declared that the Republicans would never recede from the specie standard or abate the civil and political rights of any American citizen. Mr. Sherman maintained that the resumption of specie payments was a Republican measure, and that its triumph was due to the Republican party, which had steadily supported it. The result had been the universal revival of commerce and industry. There was no drain on the coin in the Treasury, and gold was pouring in from Europe.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The Cape mail steamer arrived in Plymouth on Tuesday evening, bringing intelligence up to Oct. 7. Moirosi's stronghold is defended with unabated vigour, but orders have been given that it is to be taken at all costs. The Boers presented Sir Garnet Wolseley with a memorial demanding the Queen's answer to their prayer for the annulment of the annexation, and, in reply, Sir Garnet issued a proclamation declaring that the British Government intended the Transvaal to remain for ever an integral portion of the Empire. The Boers continue their refusal to pay taxes and rent. John Dunn denies that he forbade missionaries to enter his district.

The speech also alluded to the undoubted success of the International Exhibition. The addresses in reply to the Governor's speech were agreed to without opposition.

News from San Domingo received at New York states that the inhabitants of Puerto Plata and the Northern provinces, headed by General Laferon, have risen against President Guillermo. The principal cause of the rising is alleged to have been dissatisfaction at the manner in which the Government settled the late difficulty with Spain.

NEW BOOKS.

Intelligent studies, such as those which find expression in Representative Statesmen, by Alex. Charles Ewald, F.S.A. (Chapman and Hall), present the large mass of ordinary readers, whose leisure is small, with the best possible means of informing their minds upon important and interesting subjects under the most delightful conditions. It is important and it is interesting to obtain clear ideas about the work performed and the characteristics exhibited by men who have occupied prominent positions in the political world, and it is delightful to obtain them at so small an expenditure of time and with so large an amount of pleasure as the perusal of Mr. Ewald's two volumes will require and confer. Of course, there is always the risk of being inadvertently led astray by an author's prejudices or predilections; but that risk cannot be avoided when there is neither time nor opportunity for independent investigation; and when Mr. Ewald, or another like him, undertakes to examine, instruct, and guide, the risk is probably reduced to infinitesimal proportions. In the first volume he deals with Strafford, as the representative of "the despotic Minister," Halifax of "the moderate Minister," Sir Robert Walpole of "the Minister of peace," Chatham of "the Minister of war," and William Pitt of "the disinterested Minister;" in the second with Lord Eldon, as the representative of "the deliberative Minister," Canning of "the brilliant Minister," the Duke of Wellington of "the conscientious Minister," Sir Robert Peel of "the Minister of expediency," and Palmerston of "the English Minister;" and there will be small inclination, no doubt, on anybody's part to find fault with the qualifying expressions he has adopted, unless it should appear that "English" is an epithet which would apply to all the Ministers, seeing that all were undoubtedly devoted to their country, and that "popular" would have more fitly described the qualities which are associated with the memory of Lord Palmerston. There are, or were, even monomaniacs, who believe, or believed, or profess or professed to believe, that he had sold his country to Russia; and it is doubtful whether, among the whole number of "studies," there is any other Minister against whom the same, or a similar, accusation was brought, at any rate, so openly, expressly, and pertinaciously, even by monomaniacs. He was considered also to have shown "too great deference to the wishes of a foreign potentate," which is decidedly un-English, when he was so hasty with his "Conspiracy to Murder" Bill; but even this un-English proceeding was condoned after awhile, and popularity returned to "old Pam." The great advantage of the book is that it not only places before the reader vivid portraits and short biographies, as well as brief but sufficient summaries of memorable events, but it whets the appetite and refreshes the memory, recalling with one bright flash the history of a whole epoch, and kindling the desire, if time and opportunity should permit, to ransack those fuller and more elaborate accounts upon which the studies are based. But, though the separate monograms are, from the very nature of the case, like the extract of meat rather than the meat itself, they are not deficient in substance, at the same time that they are of double or triple strength. If it were right to distinguish one above the rest, one might perhaps give the palm to the study of Chatham, a study executed with singular appreciation, force, and fire.

Opinions differ about the possibility of having too much of a good thing; those persons who do not admit the possibility will, no doubt, be confirmed in their belief by a perusal of The Life of Sir James Brooke, by Spenser St. John, F.R.G.S., William Blackwood and Sons), and those who do may by the same process be induced to revise their dogma. One thing, however, is undeniable; there have been a great many works dedicated to the life, deeds, and character of the famous "Rajah of Sarawak." A very near relative of his, if memory may be trusted, devoted her talents and her pen to the story of his life and the vindication of his career, only a year or two ago; and she seemed to have left little or nothing for gleaners after her. However, the present work, being the fulfilment of a solemn promise made to the late lamented Rajah himself, had to be published sooner or later, and would be graciously accepted for the very promise' sake, even if the author had not other claims founded upon the position he held, the functions he discharged, the confidence reposed in him, and his literary abilities, to general attention. None can be more sensible than he himself of his "backwardness in coming forward," of his extremely tardy appearance upon the scene; but he can plead the unanswerable excuse of "long and wearisome illness, as well as continued active service in tropical countries." It is now eleven years and more since the "rajah" died; and in that interval enough has been written about him and about Borneo in general and about Sarawak in particular to provide any but a gluttonous reader with literature, so far as Sarawak is concerned, for a whole lifetime. There are, nevertheless, good reasons why the present work should commend itself in preference, if addition be out of the question, to many others of similar scope; for the author was "formerly secretary to the rajah" and "consul-general in Borneo"—that is to say, he filled offices which gave him rare opportunities of becoming acquainted with the character and of estimating, from the practical point of view, the much-lauded and much-vituperated "rajah." It may be well to mention once more that "very little of interest is known of the early life of Sir James Brooke;" it is from 1835, when "his father died, leaving him about £30,000," which enabled him to buy a yacht to his fancy, that we must date the commencement of that adventurous career which terminated in 1868, when he was sixty-five years of age, leaving his memory as a bone of controversy between two sets of persons wearing different sorts of spectacles. He may have been the finest of heroes, the most humane of men, and the best of Christians; but it is more than doubtful whether great inconvenience, and something worse, would not be caused to the country and the Government, if many adventurous and chivalrous gentlemen, having £30,000 or more at command, should fit out vessels and, in their capacity of self-constituted redressers of wrong and champions of law, order, and civilisation, acquire territories and power and responsibilities of which they would gladly be relieved by the interposition of their own Government, when the excitement of action has worn off and the anomalous character of the situation produced has become apparent. One of the most interesting chapters is the tenth, in which the author has inserted the answers he gave to Mr. Gladstone's questions concerning "Sir James Brooke's dealings with the Borneo pirates;" and there is an appendix of a very useful and important kind. There is also a portrait of the "rajah;" and there is the welcome addition of a map.

Appropriateness of title is not so very common that it should go unnoticed; and the three volumes entitled High Spirits, by James Payn (Chatto and Windus), containing "certain stories written in them," are a singular instance of happy description. And if the spirits be sometimes more than high, so that they become even extravagant; on the other hand, they are sometimes, not to say frequently, tempered and modified by some delicate mixture, whether of pathos or of melancholy or of whatever else is efficacious in toning down exuberant jollity. The prevailing characteristic, however, of the stories is certainly "high jinks;" free rein is given to drollery; imagination is allowed to indulge in the wildest and most fantastic freaks; and, in the pauses between his pieces of wit, humour, and grotesque fancy, the author does not disdain to grin through a horse-collar. Not to laugh is impossible; though it may occasionally occur to the laugher that it is extremely weak to be tickled by such rattling, rollicking, roaring farces, which seem to border upon arrant buffoonery. Still one laughs, even when the clergy are treated with shocking levity, a levity which creates a probably erroneous impression that the author, in his desire to cause explosions of laughter, is a sapper to whom nothing is sacred. Witness his story about the High-Church parson, who having got himself "japanned," as he irreverently terms it, for matrimonial purposes, and having succeeded in his fortune-hunting, discards his "japan"—that is, his "orders"—and returns to the devil, the world, and the flesh; or about the daring young lover who, aided by a more daring friend, does not shrink, for the sake of obtaining a certain fair hand, from introducing among the nobility of our country a drunken crossing-sweeper, an Oriental fire-worshipper and worshipper of "fire-water," as the august Shah of Persia. All this, of course, is very farcical; but it is also very amusing. And the same may be said of the other stories, or most of them. It may be added, however, that the author's happy style of writing, combined with a certain superiority of tone, gives literary grace to his most burlesque productions.

Curiosity, if not interest, will almost certainly be excited by the title of Don Garcia in England, by George Windle Sandys (Samuel Tinsley and Co.), and readers will not do amiss to satisfy that curiosity and indulge that interest by a perusal of the volume, undismayed by its somewhat imposing size and somewhat sombre appearance. For, as the sombreness of the black covers is relieved by a few touches of red and by a liberal amount of gilt, so the contents, which are in the main, or are at any rate intended to be, of a sober, if not of a solemn, character, are by no means confined solely to "the more serious aspects of life." The author's purpose may perhaps be divined from the fact that he dedicates his book "to those political leaders by the aid of whose wisdom and united counsels Englishmen of constitutional views trust to see their country pass safely through the present crisis of her fortunes." The author's method of proceeding is this: he begins with some pleasant, picturesque chapters, in which he describes either what he has seen and experienced personally in Spain, or what he has picked up from reading books about Spain. Thus a connection is established between himself and "Don Garcia," a supposititious person, apparently, or, if real, very carefully disguised, inasmuch as a Spaniard, so liberal, and so energetic, and so wise, and so well-informed, and altogether so supernaturally superior to his fellow-creatures of all nationalities, it is beyond the efforts of memory to recall. This Spaniard, having found his way to London, is trotted about by the author, in the spirit only, it must be surmised, to various parts of England, that he may become acquainted with our social and other institutions, with the manner in which conversation is carried on among the aristocracy, even the more cultivated sort of them, at their lordly houses in the country, with the speechifying of trade-unionists in manufacturing districts, with certain aspects of life at the University of Oxford and, by implication, at Cambridge also, with a few characteristics of fox-hunting, including specimens of the behaviour and language adopted by young ladies who devote themselves to the fascinations of that sport, with the condition of our politics, our art, and our drama, and, in fact, with whatever the author thinks proper to discuss under cover of a dialogue in which the foreigner is made to discharge, for the most part, the convenient office of one who "asks for information." The author is thus enabled to deliver himself of much criticism, some very sound, some very clever, all very agreeable to read. Indeed, the book is written with great liveliness, if not with much profundity; and questions of the day are touched upon with considerable point, though with a light hand. Places, persons, and things, moreover, are described in a style suggestive of more than ordinary literary ability; and the tone, if a little flippant, bitter, and cynical, is piquant and sufficiently wholesome. His denunciations are sometimes a little too sweeping, perhaps, especially as regards what he has to say about "famous" painters, so called in our day, and about dramatic authors. There is certainly nothing very new in the indictment he brings against both, but there is more than one grain of truth at the bottom of it. There is, of course, a difficulty sometimes in ascertaining whether he is propounding his own views and pronouncing his own judgment, or merely giving a lifelike representation of the wild mode of talking which prevails in the smoking-rooms of clubs. "When we want anything like a ruler of men," says one of the author's characters, who occasionally seems to coincide with the author himself, "our people are often hard put to it. One sees that by the number of failures. I have known them look into an attorney's office for a Prime Minister, into a bookseller's shop for a Secretary of State, make a minor poet into a pro-consul," and so forth. The allusions here made to Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. W. H. Smith, and Lord Lytton are, as everybody will see, transparent; and the cheap sneer is a fair sample of the smartness displayed in the dialogues at which Don Garcia "assists." The writer will very likely be considered better as a describer than as a debater, a critic, or a philosopher.

The biographical treatment of subjects belonging to the cherished beliefs of the Christian religion has lately been taken out of the hands of hostile criticism, like that of Strauss, and fanciful conjecture, such as is indulged by Rénan, to be used by orthodox English divines with a frank adoption of the ordinary historical method. The Rev. Dr. Farrar, Canon of Westminster and sometime Head Master of Marlborough School, is the well-known author of a "Life of Christ," which has, notwithstanding the exceptions that may be taken to its style in point of pure literary taste, won general approval as a work of accurate and judicious research, dealing not only with the statements of the New Testament narratives, but with a large and varied store of collateral information. That work has achieved great popularity, and is likely to hold its place as a standard piece of English religious literature. The same publishers, Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, for whom it was prepared by Dr. Farrar, have been employed in the production of his new book, The Life and Work of St. Paul, in two volumes. This will probably not at once command such a rapid and extensive sale; nor is it calculated to attract the ready notice even of religious people who are unaccustomed to critical and exegetical studies. But it will, in our judgment, prove far more valuable to serious inquirers concerning the original character and doctrines of Christianity, and it will be an important aid to clergymen and other ministers or lay teachers of the Gospel, in the pursuit of essential truth upon that momentous subject. The Epistles of Paul, which cannot be disassociated from the facts of his personal history, demand the very first place, not the second rank, in a critical examination of the contents of the New Testament. This claim is due to their having, in the order of time, certainly preceded the narratives commonly called the Gospels, and to their unquestioned authenticity as documents showing what was the belief of the earliest Christian societies a few years after the appearance of Christ in the world. Independently of all the other Scriptures, there is in this portion alone of the New Testament sufficient to furnish a genuine exhibition of the facts and ideas of Christianity, with the strongest evidence and arguments in its support as a Divine Revelation. The work here undertaken by Canon Farrar is therefore one that challenges the most earnest attention and consideration of Biblical and classical scholars, of theologians, and of exact students of history, particularly those versed in Roman and in Jewish antiquities. It differs widely, in some respects, both from the learned and archæological "Life of St. Paul" by Mr. Thomas Lewin, and from the joint work of two able writers, the late Rev. W. J. Conybeare and Dean Howson, which has deservedly gained a wide acceptance. Canon Farrar has the great advantage of familiarity with the Talmud and all the traditional maxims, usages, laws, and doctrines of the Rabbis, which must continually be referred to for the explanation of many incidents in the life of St. Paul, and of many passages or phrases in his writings. No commentator upon the New Testament, that we can remember, among the clergy of the English Church, has yet made such abundant use of this special branch of knowledge; and it has yielded a large amount of useful assistance. The diligence with which he has prosecuted his literary researches is also displayed in a great variety of citations from Greek profane authors of the later ages under the Roman Empire. These are seldom read by classical scholars, but their writings serve best to illustrate the social and intellectual life of the East, including Asia Minor, Syria, and Alexandria, when the Gospel was first preached in those parts. With a view to taking stock of those two component elements, the Hebraism and the Hellenism of that period, which Mr. Matthew Arnold and others have declared to be main factors in the mental composition of Christendom, this book seems to meet a prevailing tendency of our time. But it will not be found to lead in the direction of rationalistic or anti-supernatural scepticism, as it is thoroughly pervaded, like all Canon Farrar's writings and discourses, with a settled and sober evangelical faith. Its style is, for the most part, tolerably free from those faults of turgid and florid rhetoric which were perceived in his "Life of Christ." The exegesis of the text of St. Paul's Epistles appear to be performed, in general, in a satisfactory manner. But this cannot be expected to add much that is valuable to the results presented by former editors and commentators. The two volumes are furnished with convenient maps, chronological tables, and other helps to study. We can safely recommend the new work on St. Paul to every serious and thoughtful reader.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

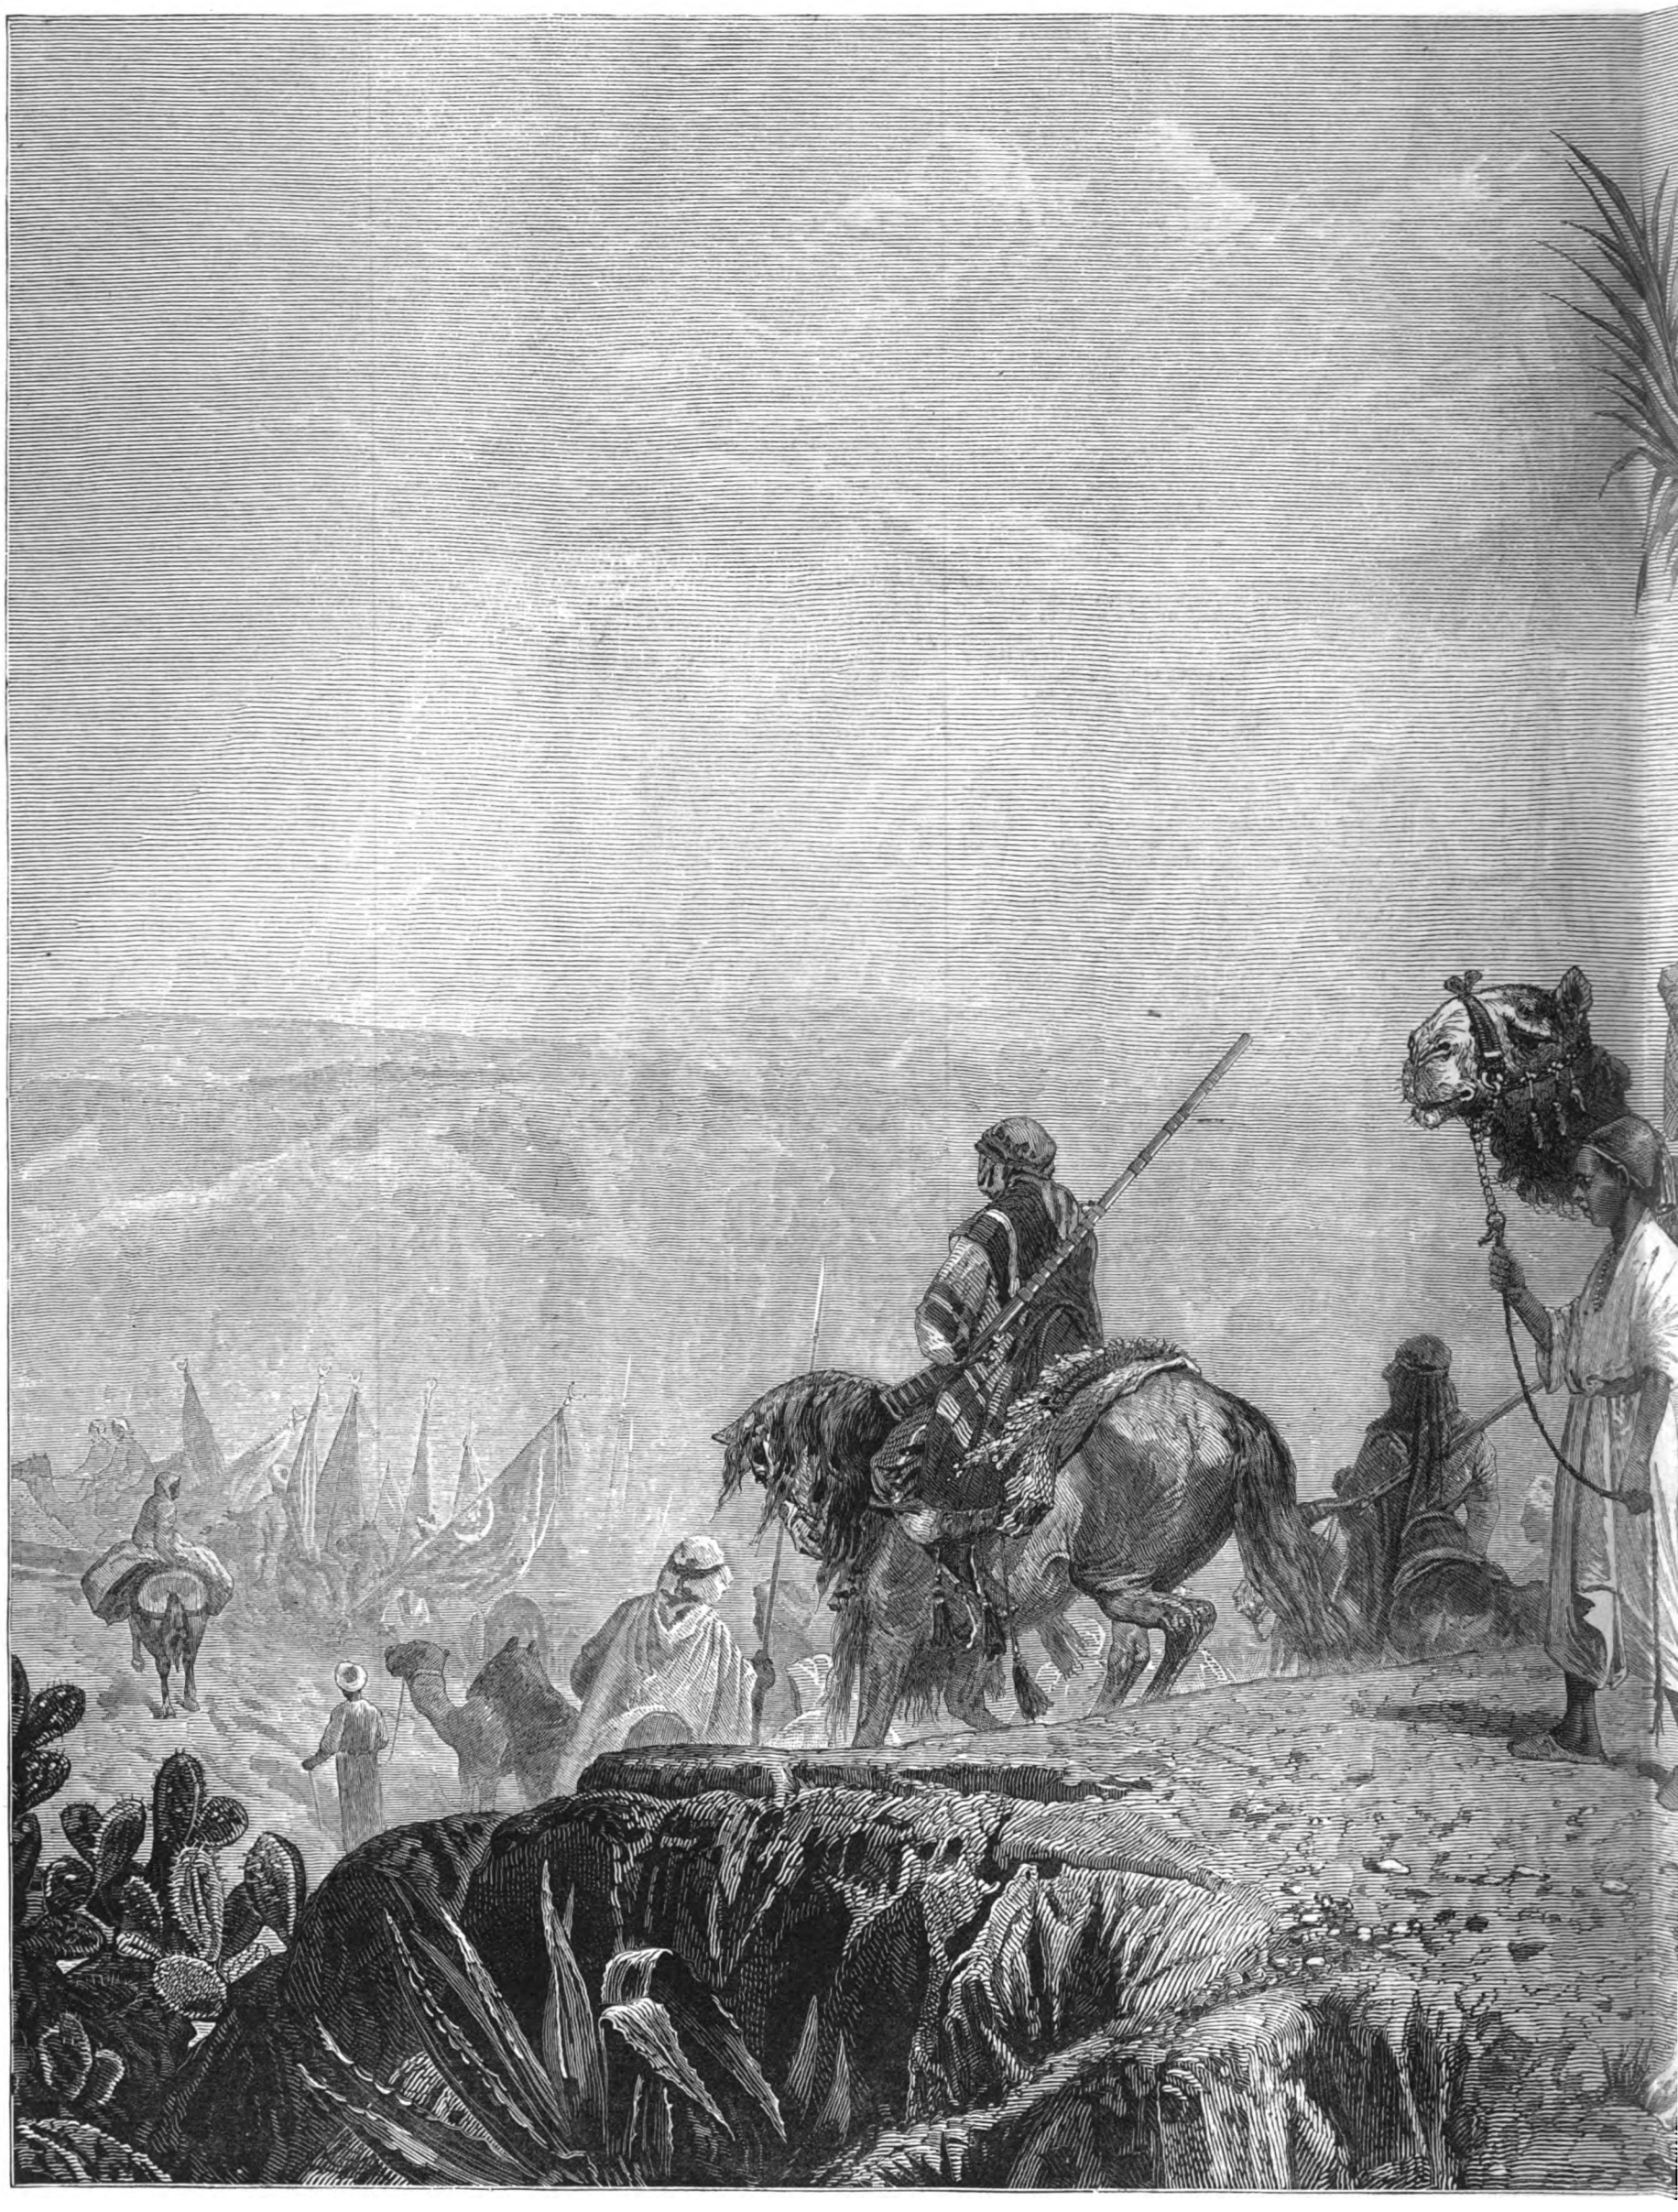
Lord Mayor's Day falls this year on a Sunday. The procession and banquet of the incoming Lord Mayor (Alderman Sir Francis Truscott) will, therefore, take place on Monday, Nov. 10.

The Scottish Corporation will hold its 215th anniversary festival on Monday, Dec. 1, for St. Andrew's Day, when the Earl of Rosebery, one of the vice-presidents of the corporation, will occupy the chair.

The Lord Chancellor will receive the Judges, Queen's Counsel, Benchers of the Inns of Court, and the Registrars and Masters of the several divisions of the Supreme Court of Judicature at his Lordship's residence, 5, Cromwell Houses, next Monday, the first day of Michaelmas Sittings.

Mr. C. Wilson, president of the Metropolitan Teachers' Association, took the chair at the seventh yearly meeting of that body, which was held last Saturday. The Rev. John Rodgers, Sir John Bennett, Mr. Picton, Mr. Wilks, and Mr. Heller joined in the discussion, which had especial reference to the work of board schools.

The new house erected in Northumberland-avenue by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will be formally opened next Monday at one o'clock by the Archbishop of Canterbury. At nine o'clock there will be a conversazione of the members and friends of the society at Willis's Rooms, when addresses will be given by the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Rangoon, Canon Barry, and others.



The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the third week in October the total number of paupers was 80,770, of whom 43,761 were in workhouses, and 37,009 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 3701, 2832, and 2698 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 891, of whom 631 were men, 209 women, and 51 children under sixteen

There were 2547 births and 1561 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 52, and the deaths by 61, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 5 from smallpox, 30 from measles, 79 from scarlet fever, 10 from diphtheria, 34 from whooping-cough, 31 from different forms of fever, and 35 from diarrhœa. These 224 deaths were 26 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 3171 births and 1842 deaths were registered.

Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided on Tuesday at an influential meeting held at the Cannon-street Hotel for the purpose of promoting a memorial to the late Sir Rowland Hill. A resolution (moved by Mr. W. F. Rock and seconded by Mr. J. Harvey and Sir J. Bennett) was passed acknowledging the services of Sir Rowland Hill and approving the proposal that a national subscription be raised to secure a fitting public memorial; and other resolutions were passed to carry out the object in view. A general committee and an executive committee having been elected, Messrs. Baxter and Whitehead were appointed general secretaries of the fund. It was stated that a canvass of only four hours had resulted in subscriptions being promised, independently of anything sent to the Mansion House, amounting to nearly £600.

The Rev. John Rodgers, vice-chairman of the School Board for London, opened a new board school in the Plumstead-road on Thursday week. He said the site of that school was unusually large, being 34,168 square feet. Only £1500 was paid for it, as against £25,000 sometimes paid for a site a quarter the size.—A new board school in Whitfield-street, Tottenham-court-road, was formally opened last Saturday evening, when a public meeting, which was numerously attended, was held in the school. Mr. Stiff, chairman of the Works Committee of the London School Board, occupied the chair, and there were several members of the School Board on the platform. The chairman said the school was built to accommodate 600 children; it had been in operation now about two months, and there were already on the roll 170 boys, 182 girls, and 285 infants, a sufficient proof that the school was needed.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Something will have to be done, and that quickly, to amend the law of copyright in the matter of photographs. The great mistake made hitherto seems to have been the classing of photographs with pictures, engravings, sculpture, music, and the like. Only from one or two points of view can photography be considered as a fine art. It is a process of chemical manufacture susceptible of being turned to uses altogether foreign to the Arts, and its attributes, for good and evil, are so varied, and its resources are being so surprisingly developed, that photography and photographers might beneficially be made the subjects of a special Act of Parliament. The gentlemen who have been lately laying down the law on the matter in the newspapers seem to have wholly ignored the leading and remarkably illustrative "negative" case of Mr. W. P. Frith, R.A., and the Autotype Company.

It strikes me that it is extremely absurd to talk of a person having no copyright in his own face, when its counterfeit presentment is effected by photography. The copyright is created when the photograph is produced; and the question of property in the negative might be very easily settled by agreement between the photographer and the photographee. It is monstrous to assume that, in the absence of such an agreement, the photographer should be entitled to sell copies of your effigy for shillings and pence, and pillory you in the shop windows between the late Charles Peace and Miss Follejambe of the Frivolity Theatre.

Mem.: I hope that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, when he brings forward his next Budget, will have the courage to impose a penny stamp duty on all published "cartes-de-visite." Such an impost, with surprisingly beneficial effects to the revenue, was placed on all photographic "cartes" in the United States during the Great Civil War. Photographic portraits are clearly luxuries, and as such are the fittest for taxation. Album "cartes" might be charged double. I trust, however, that the measure will not be retrospective, as I have about six thousand five hundred cartes-de-visite at home, picked up in all parts of the world, and duly classified. The very oldest one in the collection—a portrait of Sir William Fenwick Williams, of Kars—was purchased in St. Petersburg in 1856, and it is only very slightly faded.

I notice that the Indian Government have issued a series of wonderful regulations touching the special correspondents of newspapers in the field, and that the code in question has excited much exasperation in the Indian press. "Specials" permitted to accompany a force on active service are to be licensed; they are to wear a distinctive badge; they are not to make use of any cipher or any foreign language in their telegrams, which are to be subjected to the censorship of a staff officer; and, finally, they are to be made amenable to the provisions of the Mutiny Act and the operation of military law. This might come to mean tying up to the halberts and the infliction of five-and-twenty lashes with the cat-o'-nine-tails if the Chief thought that the Special's last telegram was not quite complimentary enough to the force under the Chief's command. A zealous commanding officer might essay such a proceeding "pour encourager les autres."

I wonder whether the Marquis of Salisbury, who paid such very high-flown compliments to the "Specials" when he took the chair at the Newspaper Press Fund banquet, approves of this Draconic law. My campaigning days are over; but I should like to know what the extant and valid race of "Specials" think of the "regulations" promulgated by the Indian authorities, or whether such journalists as Archibald Forbes, Charles Austin, Sutherland Edwards, Phil Robinson, George Henty, Frederick Boyle, and Hilary Skinner would care to accompany any army on active service and to ply their vocation at the risk of being treated as though they were disorderly camp-followers. I should advise them to stay at home and let the military gentlemen do all the special correspondence for themselves.

Mem.: The "badge" idea is really not a bad one. In European warfare (and I suppose that in process of time the Indian Government press regulations will be adopted by our War Office) the special civilian correspondent (to say nothing of the special artist) is in constant peril, if he be captured by the enemy, either of being hanged or shot as a spy by the military authorities or of being murdered by a mob of ignorant peasants temporarily frantic and ferocious with fear. Very narrowly did I escape the gallows in Italy in 1866 and the firing-party in the Franco-German war in 1870. Let the "Specials" be badged by all means. Tattooing on the right arm with their names, addresses, and the titles of the newspapers to which they are attached might not be a bad mode of distinguishing them. Or, what do you say to branding them between the shoulders with a red-hot iron? The effigy of a "flying pen" would make a very pretty trade mark.

This is an age of wonderful school-books. As a grammar of design of the human form, the collection of Flaxman's Outlines, comprising the magnificent illustrations to the Iliad, the Odyssey, Æschylus, and Hesiod, published by Messrs. Seeley, and edited by Mr. John Sparkes, Head Master of the National Art-Training School, South Kensington, is, perhaps, the grandest and usefullest art school-book lately put forth. Next to this (from an educational point of view) I must class a work just published by Mr. Stanford, of Charing-cross, the singularly beautiful "Atlas of Anatomy; or, Pictures of the Human Body," which comprises one hundred separate forms in twenty-four coloured plates, and the descriptive letterpress of which has been written by Mrs. Fenwick Miller, of the Ladies' Medical College, and who is also a member of the London School Board. In her preface Mrs. Miller distinctly states that her work is meant for "children with their keen interest in the facts of nature, and their fresh, undistracted minds full of curiosity about the facts around them." It is certain that Traddles, in "David Copperfield," was very fond of drawing skeletons on the margins of his copybooks, and that he got caned instead of complimented for this precocious addictedness to the study of osteology.

Were I a reviewer of books, instead of a mere note-taker of their appearance, I could fill several columns of small print (how my readers would yawn, to be sure!) with a disquisition on Mrs. Fenwick Miller's most instructive work. These many years past the study of graphic anatomy has been a passion with me, and rarely does a day pass that I do not try to draw at least one skeleton. I have got as many books on anatomy—beginning with Vesalius and ending with Dr. Marshall and Mrs. Miller—as I have cookery books; and I scarcely know which class of literature I prize the most. But I cannot review Mrs. Fenwick Miller's "Atlas of Anatomy"—in this place at least. I can only offer my humble and hearty compliments and congratulations to the lady, not only on her talents, but also on her downright vigorous and determined "pluck," in publishing such a work at all for the amusement and instruction of the British youth. Yes! the British word "pluck" is the word to use. "Courage," "bravery," "heroism" are all too feeble.

"PILGRIMS EN ROUTE TO MECCA."

We have already noticed this picture by Mr. R. Beavis with warm appreciation in our critical column when reviewing the late Exhibition of the Royal Academy, where it was hung, as were also two other important works by the same artist, all three differing from each other widely in character. The subject of this picture is a very novel one as from an English artist. It is obviously not less picturesque than novel, and not less than either is it authentic, we may be sure, as a few years back Mr. Beavis made a lengthened and extensive tour in the East. Need we remind the reader of the extraordinary proportions of the great annual Hadj or Pilgrimage to the birthplace of Mohammed in Arabia Felix, to which this picture refers? We are not surprised at the number of pilgrims seen on this particular route when we know that so many as 60,000, with their 20,000 camels, reach Mecca at the appointed month each year, traversing the arid and burning sands of Arabia from all parts of the Mohammedan world. A man can hardly consider himself a good Mussulman if he has not (unless prevented by extreme poverty or illness) visited himself, or at least by paid deputy, the holy places of Mecca—unless he has seen the Beitullah or God's house, and seven times made the circuit of the Holy Kaaba it enshrines, each time kissing the black stone that bears the mark of Abraham's foot. He must drink of the Zemzem water, and walk in procession to the hill of Arafat, where Adam, conducted by the angel Gabriel, met Eve after they had been separated 200 years, in consequence of their disobedience and banishment. He sacrifices in the valley of Mina, shaving the head and clipping the nails. Only by performing all these ceremonies does the follower of the Prophet acquire the proud title of Hadji or Pilgrim, and become entitled to wear the green turban—the colour of that worn by the Prophet. According to the Mahommedan legend, the curious small oblong or cube-like building called the Holy Kaaba was constructed in Heaven 2000 years before the creation of the world, and Adam, the first of the faithful, erected it on earth in its present site exactly beneath the spot where it stood in Heaven. Seventy thousand angels have it in their special care (when the black awning which covers it is shaken by the wind it is said to be ruffled by their wings); and, when the last trumpet shall have sounded, the angels are commanded to transport the holy Kaaba back to its original place in Paradise. To visit such a wondrous site is not only a religious obligation, but is naturally regarded as one of the greatest events in life by the imaginative and credulous Orientals. From the remotest confines of Islamism they collect, forming themselves into caravans, for protection against the ubiquitous Bedawee brigands; and fatigue, privation, and danger, sometimes famine, the plague, and death, are braved with the immovable fortitude engendered by their entire belief in fatalism enjoined by the Prophet of Allah. All classes perform the journey, as we see in the picture, from the warrior sheikh, mounted on his sagacious, high-mettled Arab, to the peaceful, humble dervish, who, riding on his ass, trusts to alms for subsistence; together with a large proportion of merchants, who, during the period of the pilgrimage, convert Mecca into one of the greatest fairs of the East. It is a bazaar-keeper, perhaps, who, with his attendants, walks beside the camel bearing his wives and children, the creature's back being saddled in a fashion that forcibly recalls the apt description of the camel as "the ship of the desert." But, patient and enduring as is the camel, and usually kind to his beast as is the Mussulman, by injunction of the Koran, it not unseldom breaks down under the burdens imposed upon it through the parched and pastureless sands; and the tracks of the caravan routes are often marked by its bleached or bleaching bones. The highly picturesque caravan here depicted appears to be one of considerable military strength, judging by the number of standards seen in the middle distance—each with its crescent-head, which, by-the-way, is not, as is commonly supposed, a symbol peculiar to Islamism (as the cross is the symbol of Christianity), but the ensign of Byzantium, or Constantinople.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Yesterday (Friday) week M. Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" was given, with some variations from the previous cast. The principal character was sustained by Mdlle. Minnie Hauk, for the first time in England, with complete success. Her performance was throughout distinguished by special vocal and dramatic power. Her delivery of the passages expressive of Mignon's fear of her harsh taskmaster, Giarno; of those expressing her gratitude to Wilhelm at his interposition, and her love for him and jealousy at his attentions to the actress, Filina, were alike excellent; as also was her performance in the scenes with the mysterious harper, Lotario (afterwards discovered to be her father), and in the final situation of Mignon's restoration to her home and her union with Wilhelm. The applause bestowed was great and frequent, the impulsive "Styrienne," in the second act, having had to be repeated. Mdlle. Hauk's Mignon will probably rank with her Carmen in power of attraction. The important part of Filina was sustained by Mdlle. Ilma di Murska, who sang with brilliant execution, particularly in the florid aria "Io son Titania." Madame Trebelli was the same excellent representative of Federico as before, and, as usual, had to repeat the "Rondo-Gavotte" in the second act. As Lotario, Mr. Conly made a successful first appearance here, and will doubtless improve the impression already produced, when less under the influence of nervousness. Signor Tecchi, as Wilhelm (Guglielmo), sang and acted with much earnestness; and Signor Franceschi was, as heretofore, an efficient representative of Giarno. Mr. John Hill conducted the performance.

"Faust" was the opera on Saturday, with most features of the cast as before, including the clever performance of Madame Hélène Crosmond as Margherita, and Madame Trebelli's well-known excellent rendering of the character of Siebel. Signor Frapolli having been again the Faust, Signor Rota the Mefistofele, Mr. Carleton the Valentino, &c.

On Monday the opera was "La Sonnambula," with Mdlle. Ilma di Murska as Amina; and on Tuesday "Il Trovatore" was given, with the effective performances of Madame Marie Roze as Leonora, Madame Trebelli as Azucena, Signor Tecchi as Manrico, and Signor Pantaleoni as Count di Luna. "Don Giovanni" was announced for Wednesday evening, "Mignon" for Thursday, "Aïda" for Friday (yesterday), and to-day (Saturday) the first morning performance is to take place, "Carmen" being the opera—to be followed in the evening by "Les Huguenots," with Madame Pappenheim as Valentina, and Mdlle. Ilma di Murska as Margherita di Valois.

The Crystal Palace concert of last Saturday afternoon brought forward an "Allegro," forming a portion of a concerto for the violin, left by Beethoven in an incomplete state among his manuscripts. The movement referred to is itself incomplete, and has been finished, to render it available for public performance, by Herr Helmesberger, of Vienna, who has cleverly effected the task by using the phrases and passages of Beethoven's own manuscript. The piece is in the clear, melodious style of the master's early works, and probably belongs to the closing years of last century. It was skilfully played by Mr. Carrodus, who also executed with great success two movements from Molique's concerto in A minor. Madame Schuch-Proska, of Dresden, made her first appearance at these concerts, and sang with great success. The programme opened with Schumann's fine symphony in C major, included the "Gavotte" from "Mignon" (encored), and closed with some bright and tuneful ballet music from Signor Ponchielli's opera "Gioconda."

The first of four oratorio performances, conducted by Mr. William Carter, at the Royal Albert Hall, was to take place last Thursday, the work announced having been "The Messiah," with Mesdames Nouver and Patey, Miss B. Francis, Mr. E. Lloyd, Signor Brocolini, and Mr. H. Winter as principal vocalists. Four grand National Concerts are also to be given by Mr. Carter at the Albert Hall—Scotch, on Nov. 29; Welsh, on March 1; Irish, on March 17; and English, on April 23.

Mr. Sutherland Edwards gave an interesting lecture on the opera, at the Steinway Hall, on Monday evening. The lecturer is well qualified for such a task, having written a history of the opera, besides other books on music, as well as literary works. Mr. Edwards traced the rise and progress of the lyric drama from its early beginnings, and treated his subject in a style that conveyed information in a pleasing and popular manner that was duly appreciated by his audience.

Next week will be the last of the season of M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre. On Tuesday another Gounod night was given, on Wednesday the Balaclava programme was repeated, and Thursday was a Welsh Festival.

The clever young American pianist, Mdlle. Anna Bock, gave an evening concert on Thursday at the Steinway Hall; assisted by Herr Ludwig on the violin, and Herr Daubert on the violoncello; Madame Antionette Sterling being the vocalist.

The programme of the opening performance of the twenty-second season of the Monday Popular Concerts, which takes place next week, comprises Haydn's String Quartet in B flat (No. 1 of Op. 50), given for the first time here, Rubinstein's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violoncello (Op. 18), Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (from Op. 70), and a Chaconne for Violin Solo by Vitali. Miss Lilian Bailey is to be the vocalist, and Mdlle. Janotha the pianist, the quartet partly consisting of Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. The first of the afternoon performances takes place on Saturday next.

The forty-eighth season of the Sacred Harmonic Society will begin on Dec. 5; this series of concerts being the last that will be given in Exeter Hall. The oratorio chosen for the opening performance is Handel's "Judas Maccabæus." Sir Michael Costa continues in the office of conductor.

At a meeting of the general committee of the Oswestry Musical Festival, held on Monday, under the presidency of Lord Harlech, it was stated that the total receipts amounted to about £577, and that the balance in hand was £126. Votes of thanks were passed to Mr. Henry Leslie, the promoter and conductor of the festival, to Mr. Gaffe, the choir-master, and to all who had taken part in it. Mr. Leslie explained a scheme for establishing an elementary school of music, which was adopted, and a committee was formed to carry it out.

It has been reported to the provisional committee appointed to prepare for the next Leeds festival (to be held in 1880) that the guarantee fund has already reached £5450. Mr. F. R. Spark, the secretary, states that this amount is larger than the sum guaranteed in a similar space of time for the festival in 1877. This result has been obtained without any effort beyond the issuing of circulars, and, therefore, is most satisfactory.

The ninth season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society opens on Thursday next with a performance of "Elijah," Madame Albani being announced as the principal soprano, among the other vocal artists being Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Herr Henschel. Mr. Barnby conducts, as heretofore. During the season—which is to consist of eight concerts—Handel's "Messiah" and "Judas Maccabæus," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Haydn's "Creation," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Verdi's "Requiem," Goetz's psalm "By the Waters," and Hiller's "Song of Victory" will be given.

An opéra comique, entitled "Marigold"—the music by Leon Vasseur, the libretto by Arthur Matthison—was produced at the Olympic Theatre this week. Of the work and its performance we must speak hereafter.

THEATRES.

The week's dramatic register presents few important novelties. The Surrey has produced an original drama by Messrs. G. Horncastle and R. Ogilvie, entitled "Danger." The title, we believe, is not new, having been used for a drama formerly played at an East-End theatre. It possesses a story of the old-fashioned type, one particularly acceptable to transpontine audiences. Two villains are necessary for the development of the interest, which is decidedly of a sensational character. The hero, George Middleton, being falsely accused of a murder, escapes to the diamond-fields of South Africa. Here he is pursued by Jabez Wormley, who has the means of proving George's innocence and establishing his identity as the son of the Squire recently deceased. Attempting to assassinate the hero, Wormley is lynched by the diggers, and narrowly escapes strangulation. On George's return to England the papers are recovered, Jabez, while struggling for their possession with one Dick Wardle, being thrown from the top of a ladder, which furnishes the crowning sensation of the drama. Ultimately the real murderer is discovered, and the whole arrives at a satisfactory termination. The piece, which was acted for the first time on the occasion of the benefit of Mr. J. H. Woyne, was well received by the audience. The men's characters were ably supported by Messrs. Taylor, Fawn, Lilly, Hinde, Ford, &c.; the woman interest being well sustained by Misses Kate Carlyon, Sallie Turner, and N. Phillips. The whole is well mounted.

On Monday last a new farcical comedy, in three acts, by F. C. Burnand, founded on the "Trente Millions de Gladiator," and entitled "Unlimited Cash," was produced at the Gaiety. The popularity of the French play is beyond question; the success of the present English version cannot be tested by a first representation. It belongs to a school of comedy bordering on burlesque, and the spectators are edified by the exhibition of artists rolling on the floor and tumbling over tables. The story is also somewhat bewildering. Much of the uproarious fun was laughed at by the audience. Some impatience was also manifested. The cast included Messrs. Terry, Royce, Elton, T. Squire, and Miss E. Farren.

At the Alhambra "La Petite Mademoiselle" has been supplemented by a grand ballet-d'action, founded on the well-known opera, entitled "Carmen." The story is highly dramatic, and affords especial scope for the display of the artists' abilities. The dancing of Mdlle. E. Pertoldi as Carmen, the beloved of Don José, is graceful and agile; and Mdlle. Th. De Gillert, as the impassioned hero, exhibits pantomimic powers of a high order. The scenery, by Mr. A. Callcott, is exceedingly effective, the final tableau, representing the "Arena at Seville," being highly graphic and picturesque. The entirely new music is by M. Georges Jacobi, the ballet itself being arranged by M. Bertrand.

The "Poor Gentleman" has been withdrawn from the Imperial, and Sheridan's brilliant comedy of "The Rivals" has been substituted in its stead. The cast includes Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. William Farren, Mrs. Stirling, and Miss Litton.

Tom Taylor's popular play "'Twixt Axe and Crown," has been revived at the Park, Miss Amy Steinberg taking the character of the Princess Elizabeth. Messrs. Douglass have placed it on the stage of this commodious theatre with great care, and have taken evident pains to secure for it a worthy representation.

Mr. Irving produces "The Merchant of Venice" this (Saturday) evening at the Lyceum.

Mr. George Rignold, having taken Drury-Lane Theatre for the autumn season, will produce this (Saturday) evening Shakspeare's historical play, "Henry V."

Dr. Carver the great American marksman is nightly astonishing overflowing audiences at the Canterbury Theatre of Varieties, with his wonderful rifle-shooting. The other entertainments comprise a Legendary Musical Sketch, with Miss Nelly Power in the chief part, and in which an elegant ballet is given; a clever table performance by Messrs. Jackley and Garnett; the drolleries of Lawrence, the double-headed nigger; clever posturing and bell-ringing, and some really good comic songs. The decorum and propriety which mark the entertainment are worthy of special note.

POETRY.

Dramatic poetry, whether for acting on the stage or reading in a book, is the highest form of imaginative entertainment. When fitly exhibited by theatrical impersonation, with proper scenic accessories, it commands attention from the largest audience. But, if presented as a purely literary composition, those who can appreciate its charm are comparatively few. It needs a more active mental grasp of the ideal conceptions of plot and character than ordinary readers of fiction are able to exert. Many, who can relish some of the scenes and passages in Shakspeare's works, have scarcely an intelligent comprehension of one entire play—unless they have seen it performed. This greater demand upon the intellectual energy of the reader will account for the slower attainment of popularity in the case of new plays issued through the press and the publisher's shop. The class of persons who are competent to enjoy good poetry in this shape is always but a fraction of the number capable of reading good narrative poems. An author of singular merits, bearing the assumed name of "Ross Neil," has for some years past won the well-weighed critical suffrages of this limited circle of cultivated minds, but has not yet become widely known to the general public. It is just because the Plays by Ross Neil, a fourth volume of which has just come out (the publishers are Ellis and White, of New Bond-street), are plays of classical excellence in their kind that the world at large does not hasten to greet them. They would rapidly become popular, no doubt, if they were simply tales in verse or romances mixed with songs. There is considerable variety in their range of subjects, and in their tone and manner of treatment. Several of them deal with grave and noble themes of English history, such as the fate of Lady Jane Grey and the virtuous constancy of Lord and Lady Russell. In others, like "The Cid," and "Inez, the Bride of Portugal," there are strange adventures or sudden vicissitudes of fortune, with the development of passionate emotion in romantic situations. A lighter, almost sportive exercise of humour and fancy, though with a serious moralising purpose, is shown in such plays as "The Angel" and "Duke for a Day," which are comedies of the Shaksperean poetical type, and in the beautiful dramatised fairy-tale of "Elfinella." The last-named piece, which as a poem is charming equally in sentiment, in conception, and in style, was played with approval at the Edinburgh theatre and at the Princess's in London. The contents of Ross Neil's new volume are not dissimilar in kind to those above mentioned, except that in "The Heir of Linne," a comedy in verse founded on the well-known old English ballad story, we find a less successful attempt to satirise mean and sordid vices of worldly character. That play alone is weak, it seems to us, in some parts of its business. We mean in the portraiture of those worthless, time-serving guests, the parasites and flatterers of Lord Lionel till his riches are exhausted, but who coldly turn away from him when he is ruined by the machinations of John o' the Scales, his treacherous steward. His consequent fit of abstract misanthropy is a crude and forced copy of the latter mood of Timon of Athens. And in the instant cure of this malady, by a few words of commonplace wisdom from the supposed guardian spirit of his house, there is a limp facility, an absence of remorseful struggle, which is fatal to the sense of reality. The inward conflict of emotions is not sufficiently worked out. But in the other plays of the new volume, "Arabella Stuart" and "Tasso," we are delighted again to recognise the true strength of Ross Neil's proper genius. Here is the triumph of consummate poetic art, bestowed on subjects of a more congenial nature. With this accomplished author, as with Schiller, it is in setting forth characters and motives kept at a certain degree of moral elevation, sincere and strenuous, devoted and determined, if not transcendently heroic, that full dramatic strength comes out. Such powers find their fittest employment in historical tragedy; and here we get some of Ross Neil's very best work. "Arabella Stuart" is a worthy companion piece to "Lady Jane Grey" and to "Lord and Lady Russell." These three plays ought to be printed in one volume, as the volumes are sold separately; and it may be so arranged, we hope, in a future edition. The misfortunes of Lady Arabella, cousin to King James I., and secretly married, against the King's will, to William Seymour, a scion of the Tudor family, thereby incurring twofold royal and political jealousy, have often been related. Their harsh forcible separation, her attempted escape and recapture at sea, and the sorrowful end of her life in a languishing confinement, are here treated with great pathetic impressiveness. The type of womanly love represented most effectively in Ross Neil's plays is that of constancy in wifehood. It is not the newborn rising affection of the maidenly bosom, with its fluttering tumult of mysterious desires and fears; but the fixed resolve of personal self-devotion, purely intent on living solely for the happiness of the beloved object. This noblest phase of human attachment, which is capable of firmly allying itself with sentiments of public duty and religion, is admirably displayed in Ross Neil's conceptions of such characters as Lady Russell and Lady Jane Grey. That of Arabella Stuart has the pure human element brought out with not less force of expression than refinement of chastened tenderness, but here not accompanied by the same enthusiasm for the public good and the cause of truth, in the spirit of the patriot or the Christian martyr. Examples of this high order, which may be found in the history of the English Protestant Reformation and likewise in Scottish history to a later date, would be very suitable materials for Ross Neil's dramatic art. We would propose the death of Sir Thomas More. Passing on now to the play of "Tasso," we are unable to approach quite freely this fresh work upon a subject already treated by Goethe in one of his most perfect creations. Still, the moral tragedy of that highly-gifted, but vain and self-deluded votary of poetic fame, whose life was wrecked by his misinterpretation of the deceptive favour of a Princess, is here truthfully displayed. An egotist of this disposition being incapable of constancy in love, Tasso's culpable error not only leads to his own ruin and confinement in a madhouse, but leaves the true-hearted Laura, his early betrothed, to mourn both her own loss and his unhappy condition. Her character is beautiful, simple, and natural, as represented in the play before us, while there is much vivacity and originality also in those of subordinate personages, both at Mantua and at the ducal court of Ferrara, not to mention Alfonso and his sister Leonora. Ross Neil's "Tasso," in short, is decidedly a successful recasting of the subject. It is a suggestive lesson upon the danger of inordinate thirst for worldly renown, as the prize of the laurel crown, sent by the Pope to the dying poet in his last hour, seems a paltry recompense for wasted life and love perverted from its truth. We trust that the author will continue to work in this masterly style on ideal representations of historical or biographical subjects; and we hope that many of them will be chosen from the examples of public virtue in England of past ages. No more worthy application of the highest literary art can be proposed to any writer; and it is as surely within the reach of Ross Neil as of any writer living in our day.

Taste in selection, quaintness and ease in execution, are the qualities chiefly characteristic of Gottlob et Cetera: by William Young (C. Kegan Paul and Co.), a pleasant, readable volume of verses, about half of them translated from the French, whether of François Coppée, or of Victor Hugo, or of some other among the sweet singers of France, but principally of the first mentioned. "Gottlob" and other pieces bound up with it have a tragic stamp, and are sufficiently forcible to create no little impression, and one of the translations, entitled "The Night Watch," is extremely pathetic, though the effect is marred by the concluding lines. There is great variety, however, in the collection; and the light, airy, playful style is employed to good purpose. The author ends with a few original "charades" in rhyme. They are not very remarkable for their poetical attributes nor for their difficulty as puzzles, if it be fair to judge of all by one, the following short one:—

When Richard of the Lion Heart
In arms the Paynim sought,
I of his panoply was part;
And, wielding me, he fought.

When ladies on a different field
With men their skill assay,
I am the weapon that they wield,
If they would gain the day.

When cooks in certain dishes show
Their culinary art,
I am on hand—the masters know
What flavour I impart.

It is impossible to prevent the word "mace" from leaping to the lips at once, notwithstanding the popular saying which represents "tears" as woman's most effectual "weapon." In conclusion, it must be remarked that stress of rhyme may excuse a great deal, but that it is a very strong measure indeed to make "hanker" chime with the two last syllables of "Salamanca," as in "The Mountebank."

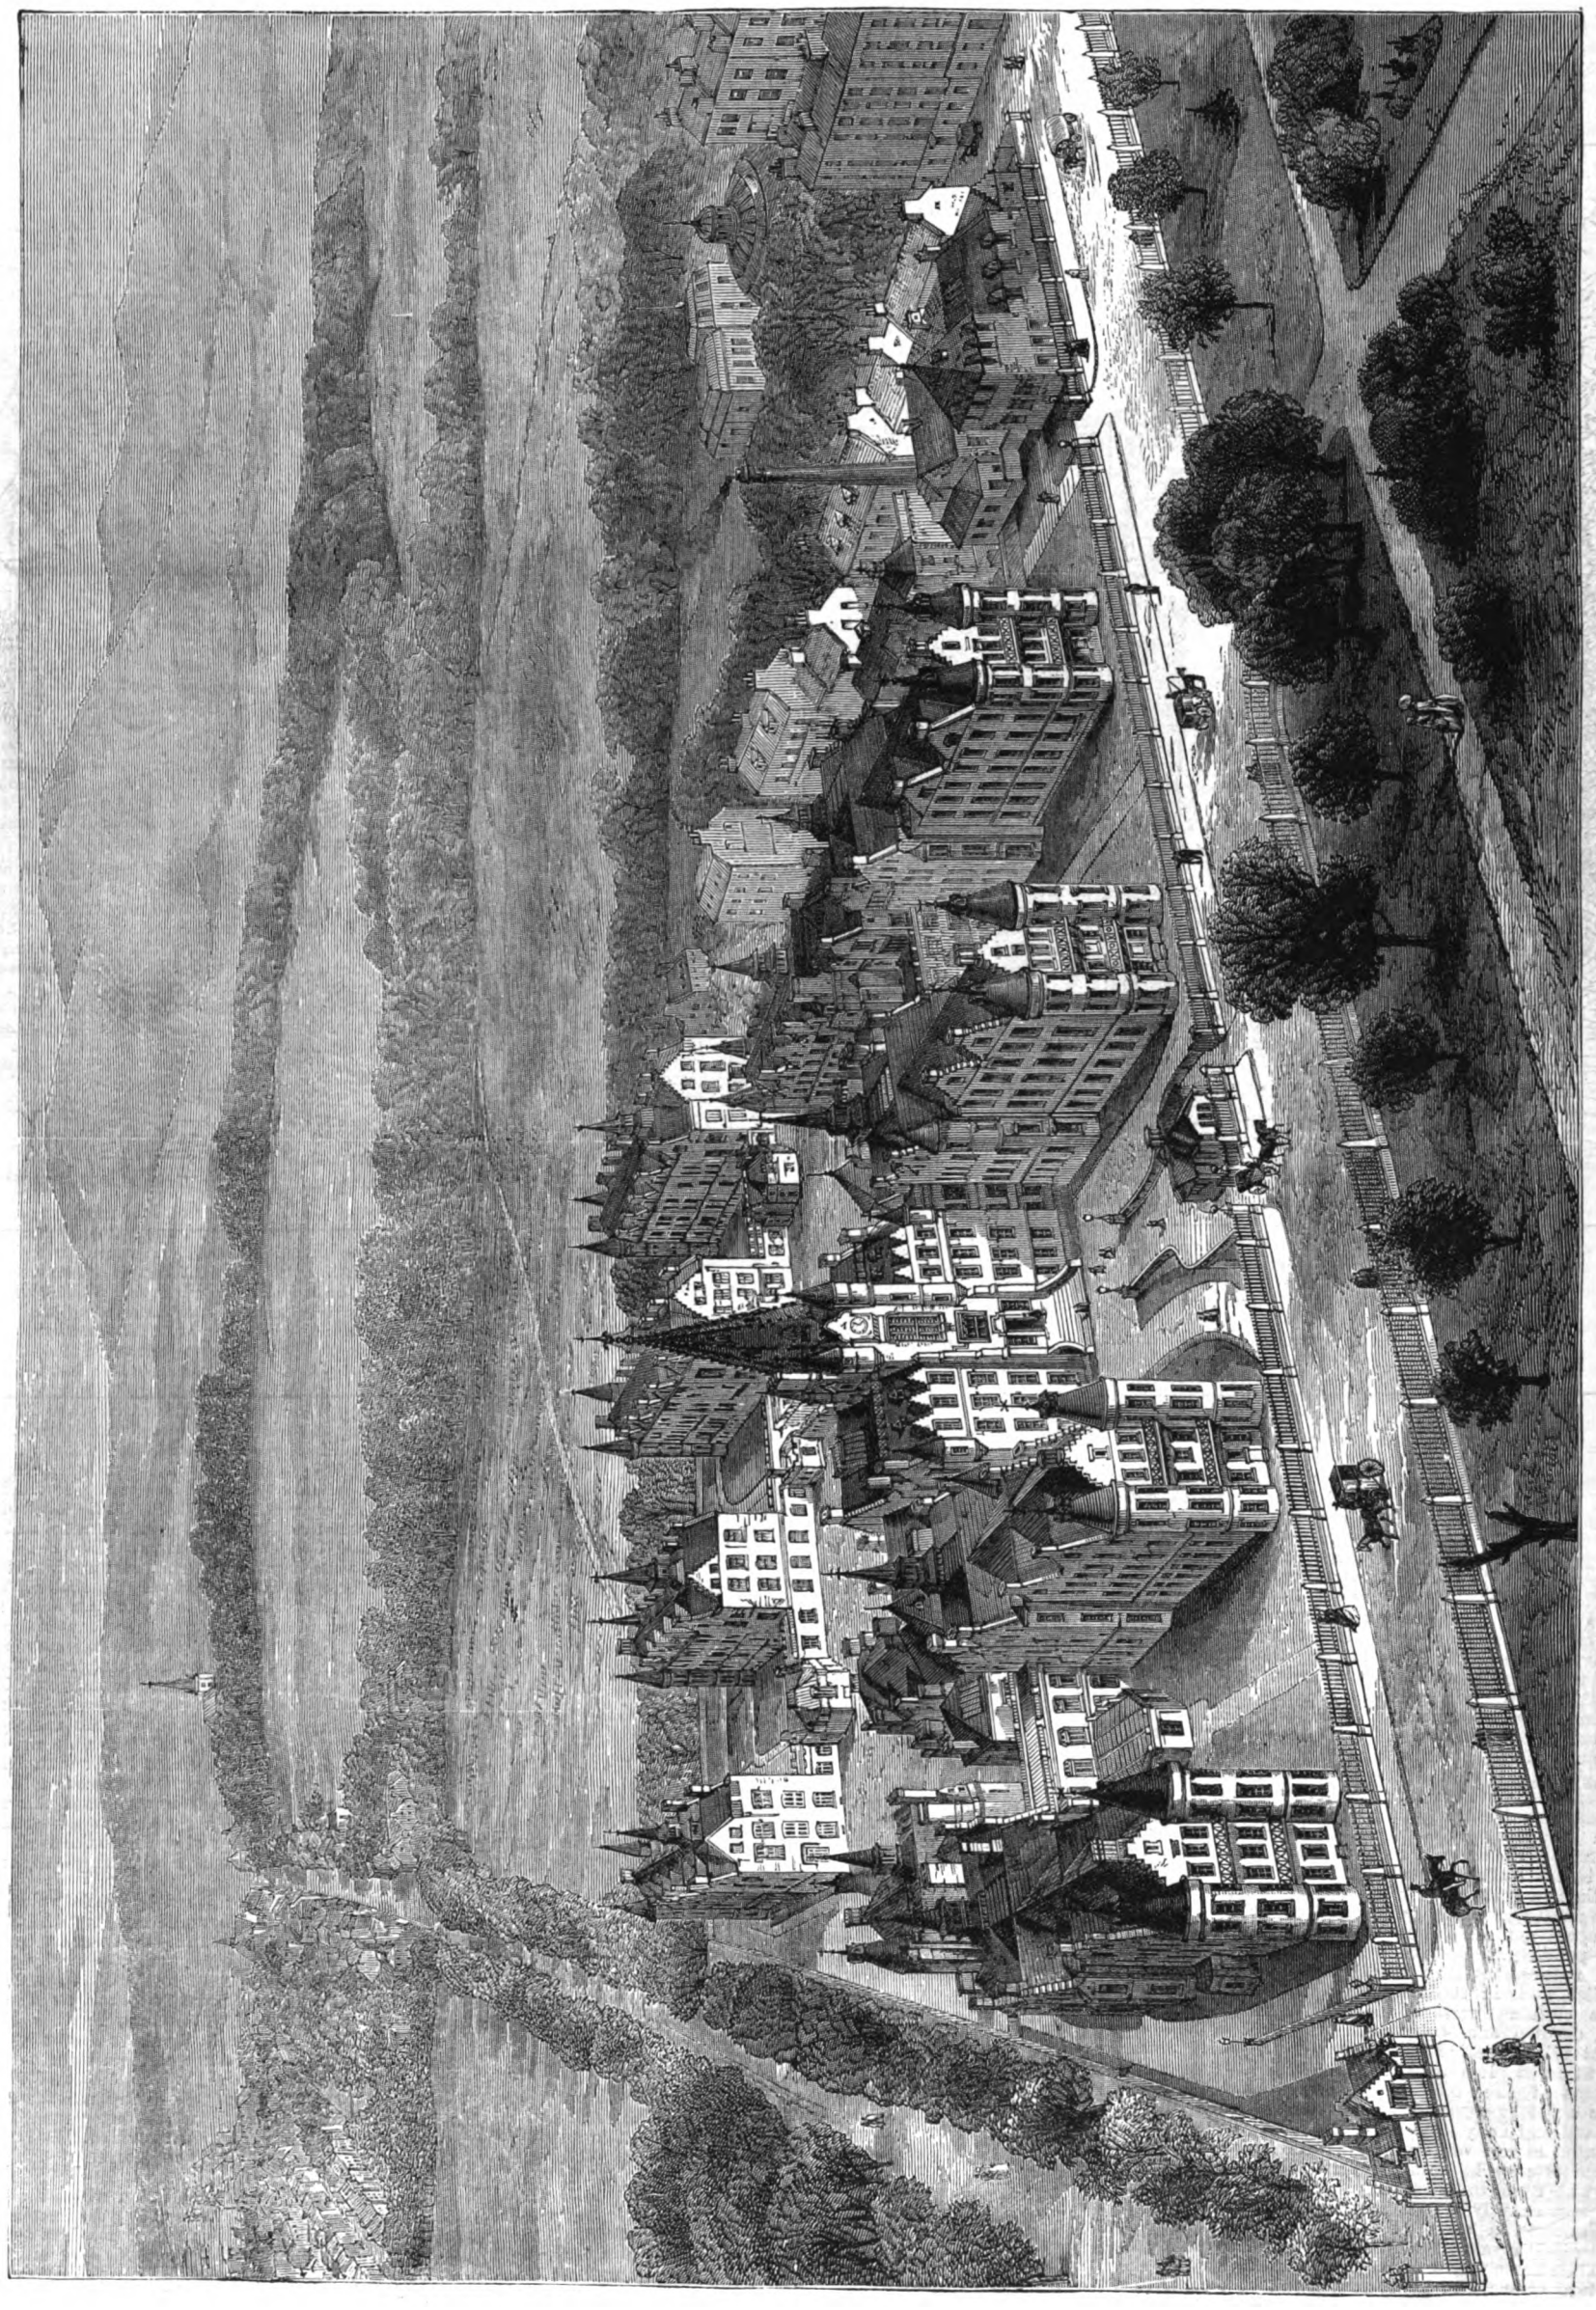
The true spirit, the true music, the true lilt reveal themselves over and over again in Poems and Ballads, by Mrs. Toogood (Chapman and Hall). There is a simplicity, a freshness, a grace, a touch of nature, something altogether of Wordsworth's manner now and then. There are no high flights, no majestic images, no striking utterances, which fix themselves instantaneously and indelibly upon the memory; but there are, though they may recur with undesirable infrequency, sentiments which stir the feelings, passages which come upon one like an agreeable surprise, lines which are the melodious expression of touching conceptions. It may appear occasionally that the writer is a little deficient in ear, so that the metre seems to halt; but, on the other hand, the deficiency of ear may, of course, be the reader's own. At the end of the volume there is a collection of sonnets, and they, chiefly on account of the religious tone conspicuous in most of them, will probably commend themselves in a special manner to a certain class of readers; but, if a single judgment be worth anything, it is in the ballad that the writer is most successful, and particularly when the theme is illustrative of the domestic affections, of the love and devotion exhibited by the young towards their elders.

Very pretty, indeed, are many of the compositions contained in Poems and Sonnets, by Harriett Stockall (Simpkin and Marshall), and their worth is fully established in some cases by the fact that several of them appeared in All the Year Round, a publication over which very careful supervision is understood to be exercised, especially as regards the quality of the verses admitted into its columns. The writer's muse is inspired chiefly, it would seem, by appreciation of flowers and by sentiments of loyalty and personal esteem; twenty, more or less graceful, little effusions are devoted to various flowers and the associations connected therewith, and the stream of melodious panegyric flows freely and fervidly in honour of the Queen and the Royal ladies related to her either by birth or marriage, and in glorification of the Poet Laureate, the late Mr. Charles Dickens, Mr. Charles Reade, and other more or less considerable personages. The Prince Imperial, whose late tragic fate moved all England to sympathy, is the theme of a complimentary dirge; and, though no exception may be taken to the somewhat exalted strain in which the sad event is commemorated, the writer would have done well to find a fitter epithet than that of "great" to describe the illustrious lady who has been left childless and desolate, for, even if we should be disposed to modify the French orator's impressive admonition, "Dieu seul est grand, mes frères," there would be something ludicrous in applying to the ex-Empress of the French an epithet reserved for quite a different sort of character. The four "memories" of St. Valentine's Day are fair samples of the writer's quality, pretty and sweet, tender and plaintive, resigned and melancholic, with an effort towards cheerfulness.

There was good reason, perhaps, for the spelling adopted in Jepthah's Daughter, a "lyrical tragedy," to which are added "other poems," by Welbore St. Clair Baddeley (Pickering and Co.); but neither ear nor eye can be said to gain anything by this departure from the old practice, with which our English version of the Scriptures has made us familiar. Orthography, however, is a small matter in comparison with the poetical mood and expression discernible both in the "lyrical tragedy" and in the "other poems." In form, the "lyrical tragedy," with the herald, messenger, and chorus, with the quaint dialogue bristling with apophthegms, with the constant repetition of dolorous ejaculations, appears to have been fashioned upon the model of the ancient Greek tragedians. The treatment of the story is original and inventive, but not creditable to a "man of God," a priest or prophet, or both, by name Abihu. He is represented as having brought about the sacrifice of the victorious Gileadite's daughter from motives of revenge, as having performed a preliminary deed of murder on his own account, and as having himself fallen by the hand of his own sister. There is, therefore, quite enough of the tragical element, and the claim of the tragedy to be called "lyrical" is fully vindicated both in other ways and by a somewhat unusual freedom in the metrical handling of the blank verse. Among the "other poems" the longest and the most noteworthy is one called "Evelyn Esmond," a "novelette" in verse of exceptionally musical movement here and there, containing passages of no little beauty, as regards both thought and utterance, scene and description.

An eye to appreciate scenery and a pen to describe what the eye has seen and what the sight has suggested are manifest in The Exile (Sampson Low and Co.), and great facility in composition characterises the "other verses," including "translations from some of the Greek and Latin poets," with which the Hon. Thomas Talbot has made up a volume of much variety and no inconsiderable merit. There are, no doubt, readers who will regret that his muse should have been employed to sing the glories of Pope Pius IX. and the "Immaculate Conception," and it is only right that such readers should be told what they have to expect; but, on the other hand, there are other readers to whom such themes will be especially acceptable. Simonides, of Amorgos, is among the ancients whom the author has thought worthy of translation; but the brevity which is essential in the case of a "gnomic" poet has not always been sufficiently studied by the translator. For instance, the two iambic lines in which the contrast between a good and a bad wife is set forth are expanded in the English version into eight, though the latter are certainly shorter than the former. One of the translations best worth reading, whether the reader be able to interpret the original or not, is that of the long piece in which the aforesaid Simonides, not the most gallant of men, if he may be properly appreciated from his writings, describes the sources from which women are represented to have derived their various, and, according to him, generally bad, qualities. The volume, altogether, may be described as a collection of verses sufficiently good and diverse to gratify many tastes.

In soft, low notes, a little sad but sweet withal, such notes as are best for woman's voice, the gentle muse pours out her tale in Lays from the Land of the Gael: by Anna Louisa Hildebrand (Belfast: M'Caw, Stevenson, and Orr), a volume brim full of easily-flowing verse. Many of the productions have an Irish theme and an Irish sound, like that of the harp which once was heard in Tara's hall; but the majority have no special connection with the "land of the Gael." The prevailing key is the minor, and the prevailing attribute is tenderness, though there is also from time to time a flash of fire, a gleam of passion. Religion, moreover, inspires many of the lays; indeed, it is a question whether the very best of them will not be found among the "sacred poems," all elevated in tone, some pathetically and sympathetically impressive.



NEW ROYAL INFIRMARY, EDINBURGH.

The opening of the fine range of buildings constructed, at a cost of £340,000, for the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, took place on Wednesday. The foundation-stone was laid nine years ago by the Prince of Wales. The architect who designed this structure was the late Mr. David Bryce, R.S.A., who died two or three years ago, and it has been completed under the superintendence of Messrs. David and John Bryce, of George-street, Edinburgh. It is, like St. Thomas's Hospital, London, planned on the system of separate blocks; but whereas in St. Thomas's Hospital there is one range of blocks, in the Edinburgh Infirmary there are two, comprising four distinct blocks in each range. Another point of contrast is the difference of material. The St. Thomas's Hospital is built mainly of brick; the Edinburgh Infirmary is built, externally, entirely of stone, and therefore presents solid masses of masonry which possess an architectural character of a special kind. Each of the eight blocks is surmounted by an elegant turret; and over the central hall and doorway there rises a graceful tower, which, in more ways than one, gives point and unity to the general design. The internal arrangements are admirable. The wards, of which there are three in each block, are wide, lofty, well ventilated, and supplied with every convenience and contrivance that science has suggested or experience has sanctioned. Not only each block, but even each ward, is self-contained, having its own waiting-rooms, nurses' room, physicians' room, bath-rooms, lavatories, and kitchen. In each block there is a "lift" for conveying patients in bed from story to story independent of the ordinary "lift" for stores. Spacious corridors or open galleries connect block with block. The administrative departments are accommodated in a massive central block, with which are incorporated the remains of George Watson's Hospital—a foundation school now transferred to a building a quarter of a mile to the west. Here also are the general kitchen, the nurses' dining-hall, and lecture-rooms and theatres.

The wards have been furnished by special voluntary effort. Different professions, trades, and interests in Edinburgh have been induced to undertake each its own ward. One ward has been undertaken by the managers, another by the medical practitioners, another by the Faculty of Advocates, another by the Writers to the Signet, another by the chartered accountants, another by upholsterers, another by brewers, another by ladies, another by domestic servants, and so on. The furnishing of each ward cost from £400 to £480. The Infirmary will accommodate between 550 and 600 patients. The sum of £340,000 stated above includes the cost of site, buildings, and furniture; of which, after the sale of the old buildings, £25,000 remains to be provided. It is the largest hospital in the United Kingdom, and probably the best planned.

Besides the superior accommodation which the new buildings will afford, the institution will gain immensely by its removal in the matter of free air and pleasant surroundings. In its former site it was built in by streets of tall houses, and surrounded by a dense population. At Lauriston it has open spaces on all sides, and stands within its own pleasure-grounds; on the south it has the broad expanse of the Meadows; and from every ward fine views are obtained either of the picturesque Old Town or of the distant country. The chief advantage of the old site was its proximity to the University. But in this respect the removal will involve no disadvantage; for, on the opposite side of the central Meadows' walk from the new Infirmary, the new medical and science schools of the University are now in course of erection. These also give promise of being a splendid building, which will make a prominent addition to the architectural beauties of Edinburgh.

HOLIDAY SKETCHES IN GERMANY.

In the Middle Ages, if story-tellers in prose and verse are to be much believed, Germany was a land of romance. The ruins of many an old Castle perched upon a rocky height, where some fierce Baron, Graf, or Ritter used to guard a wide domain for his own private plunder, and of many a Kloster dedicated to Roman Catholic saints, whose votaries, male or female, kept house for centuries with frequent dole of alms to the poor, and with daily and nightly hours of repeated prayers, bear witness in Germany to feudal and ecclesiastical institutions of the past. Some fifty years ago, about the same time as the revival in England of a taste for tales of mediæval chivalry aroused by Sir Walter Scott, there was a vehement fit of romanticism, as it was called, among the German poets, novelists, playwrights, and artists of different classes. Does anyone now read the works of Tieck and his contemporaries of that outworn fashion? Only the student of literary and artistic tendencies, who knows that these afford indications of the moral tone of society and the prevailing habits of mind. In German literature, more abundantly than any other, from the time of Lessing and Jean Paul, through the æsthetic, classical, and metaphysical phases of Wieland, Goethe, and Schiller, to the aforesaid Romantic school, and to that of the latter-day Realists, the changes of national temper have left their peculiar expression. An English visitor, who does not read the once popular German authors, may find the essence of this rich and varied mental history preserved in Longfellow's charming little tale of "Hyperion," which is the best pocket companion for the intellectual tourist, following our Artist through the scenery of his "Holiday Sketches." We may therefore discharge our present office, instead of commenting more particularly on the wayside shrine in Westphalia, the Saxon peasantry and townsfolk, and Auerbach's Cellar at Leipsic, where Faust and Mephistopheles played their tricks with the students, by referring to Mr. Longfellow. If he will not serve the turn, we know several other pleasing writers who will.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Secretary of State for War, having in view the objections offered by Volunteer commanding officers, and acting on the power vested in him, has decided to adopt and carry out at the end of the present month that part of the Report of the Committee on the Organisation of the Volunteer Force which concerns the consolidation of administrative brigades and battalions, and the amalgamation of corps not forming part of administrative regiments, as recommended for the good of the service.

At the Purley Downs Range, near Croydon, on Saturday last, the excellent shooting-team of the 1st Battalion Scots Guards met the 2nd Surrey (Croydon) in friendly rivalry. The Guardsmen used the Martini-Henry, while the Volunteers relied upon the ordinary service weapon, which, however, did not stand them in such good stead on this occasion as it has done in three matches already won this year against the Guards dépôt, the superiority of the small bore being conclusively proved at the longest range. At the conclusion of the shooting at 500 yards both teams had made the same number of points; but at 600 yards the Guards distanced their antagonists and won by 28 points.

The annual repository competition of the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Brigade was brought to a close last week, under the supervision of Colonel Waller, R.A. Sergeant-Major Hinckley's detachment (No. 9 Battery) was declared to be the winner of the first prize, Sergeant-Major Hall (No. 10 Battery) took the second prize, and Sergeant Herin (No. 1 Battery) the third.

The Company Silver Badge holders for the present year of the 2nd London fired for the honour of being premier shot and Gold Medallist, at the Rainham ranges, with the result that Lance-Sergeant White, who was successful in 1878, upheld the position gained upon that occasion. Next in succession to the winner were Sergeant Cuttriss, Private Richardson, and Colour-Sergeant Rayner.

The annual prize-meeting of the 20th Middlesex took place on Wednesday week at the Stanmore range, near Harrow. The following were the principal winners:—Lance-Sergeant Merrell (challenge cup), Lance-Corporal Dukes, Corporal Thackray, Sergeant Rata, Sergeant Boucher, Private Myers, Sergeant Gray, Colour-Sergeant Hembrow, Lance-Sergeant Maffey, Quartermaster Davidson, Lieutenant Jordan, Colour-Sergeant Morgan, Bugle-Major Barrow, Colour-Sergeant Berridge, Corporal Crozier, Private Sherlock, Colour-Sergeant Firth, and Colour-Sergeant Edwards. The final competition for the Monthly Cup was held at the same time, and resulted in a tie between Sergeants Gray and Merrell, which has not yet been decided, other prizes being won by Corporal Thackray, Sergeant Gray, Colour-Sergeant Edwards, Lance-Sergeant Merrell, Lance-Sergeant Maffey, Colour-Sergeant Morgan, and Colour-Sergeant Berridge.

A match between teams of six men from the South London and Midland Clubs was held yesterday week at the Welwyn range, when the former were successful by 15 points. At the first range London led by 13, but the Midland Counties men put 39 more than their Southern opponents on at 900. At 1000 yards, however, they broke down, and London went to the fore and won.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A fairly numerous company remained at Newmarket for the close of the Houghton week, and, on the Friday, the curtain finally fell on a most interesting week's sport, which had been witnessed under wonderfully favourable conditions as regarded weather, while the high character of the racing was maintained to the last. On the Thursday, Lord Clive at last managed to earn another winning bracket, and, though it was gained in a comparatively unimportant race, it was pleasant to see Sir George Chetwynd's luckless colours first past the post in any description of contest. Odds were laid on Strathardle for the Troy Stakes, but she was beaten by Petronel, a nice filly by Musket — Crytheia, who carried the once famous hoops of Badminton, which are now, unfortunately, so seldom seen upon a race-course. The great event of the day was the Free Handicap, in which Rayon d'Or was asked to concede 7 lb. and 16 lb. to Chippendale and Out of Bounds respectively. Those who freely accepted 5 to 4 about the French crack could have scarcely reflected that they were backing him to be good enough to have won the Cambridgeshire with 9 st. in the saddle. In the dip, however, he appeared to have matters pretty much his own way, but directly he began to ascend the hill, for which he has always shown such a marked dislike, he was in trouble, and Out of Bounds beat Knight of Burghley (7 st. 2 lb.) easily by a neck, Rayon d'Or being eased when Goater found that he could not win. Lollypop made a sad example of Kaleidoscope over five furlongs, and thus reflected additional glory on the St. Leger winner, who beat him so easily a fortnight ago.

On the Friday Pride of the Highlands did another good turn for Prince Charlie, by upsetting a hot favourite for the Glasgow Stakes. This was a colt by Adventurer—Devotion, in the Manton stables, upon whom all Fordham's efforts were useless. The Home-Bred Foal Stakes enabled Mask to win his second race during the week, and he cut down Canny Chiel in such style that, though he has distinctly shown himself to be inferior to the best of his year, he is sure to find supporters for the Derby. La Merveille (8st. 5 lb.) was backed against the field in the Houghton Handicap, but it is probable that her desperate race for the Cambridgeshire had taken all the steel out of her, for Cradle (7 st. 2 lb.) had the race in hand a long way from home, and the Russley filly did not even obtain a place. Lollypop and Custance made mincemeat of Hackthorpe and Archer over the Bretby Stakes Course; and the race was noteworthy from its being the last appearance on the turf of the winner, and also of the jockey who has ridden him so often. Custance is becoming too heavy for his profession, and will carry into retirement the good wishes of all who can respect talent in the saddle, combined with the strictest honesty of purpose. "Facilis descensus Averni" must have been the thought of many who saw Charibert just scrambling home first for a selling race, over part of the same course in which he scored his gallant victory in the Two Thousand just six months ago; and then came the Jockey Club Cup, for which a distinguished half dozen cantered down to the post. Out of Bounds certainly looked a pretty good thing on paper, but she was unquestionably stale and jaded after her two previous races, and, moreover, the Cesarewitch course was scarcely adapted to a filly that had been trained for a mile race. The pace was far too slow to suit Thurio, who was forced to make his own running, but, even then, little Insulaire found his 9 st. 10 lb. too much for him by the time that they reached the Bushes, and a fine struggle between Jannette, Out of Bounds, and Thurio, resulted in their passing the judge in the order named. We believe that Jannette will now be sent the stud, and this victory makes a fitting wind-up to a brilliant career. Abbott, an own brother to Charon, by Hermit—Barchettina, completely ran away with the Houghton Stakes from four opponents, and the meeting was concluded by Fordham landing a Post Sweepstakes on In Bounds, from a couple of very moderate opponents, the three being only separated at the finish by two heads.

At the time of writing the Lincoln Meeting had not begun, and nothing specially noteworthy has transpired either at Worcester or Brighton.

There seemed plenty of money in the market when Lord Anglesey's stud was offered for sale at Newmarket on the Wednesday, and this is not surprising when, ever since his Lordship's intended retirement was announced, his horses have seemed almost unable to lose a race. It may be remembered that about a fortnight ago Beaudesert was sold for 7000 gs., and Preston Pans, having been privately purchased by Mr. Gretton for 6000 gs., has again joined his old stable companion, both being under the care of Porter at Kingsclere. Early Morn (2000 gs.), Caxtonian (1300 gs.), Zeltinger (950 gs.), and Dunmow (860 gs.), did best at the auction. On the following day, Silvio, Childeric, Kingcraft, and others of Lord Falmouth's were put up, but, as the reserve price in each case was a stiff one, none of them changed hands.

The South Lancashire (Southport) Meeting occupied coursing-men for five days last week, and some splendid sport was enjoyed, as the weather was all that could be wished, and hares were strong and plentiful. Glenlyon, by Hayberry Mill—Reckless Kate, won the South Lancashire Derby for dog puppies; while the Oaks, the corresponding stake for puppies of the opposite sex, went to Red Rose by Bedfellow—Moss Rose. A piece of plate was given to be run for by these two winners, for which Glenlyon was ungallant enough to beat his fair opponent. Meols Boy was about the best known of those entered for the Scarisbrick Cup; but he only won a couple of courses, and in the final ties Tory, by True Blue, beat Title Deeds, by Bacchanal—Somebody's Pet, and won. Mr. Hedley's decisions, as usual, gave the greatest satisfaction; and Wilkinson was in great form with the slips.

POLITICAL.

The political firmament is studded with eloquent stars this week; but, alas! only those of magnitude can be reflected within the narrow compass of this mirror. The Marquis of Hartington, fresh from the hospitality of the Earl of Derby at Knowsley (where there has been quite a gathering of Liberal peers), was welcomed with heartiness to the Manchester Reform Club yesterday week, and was greeted with enthusiasm when he entered the Free Trade Hall the same evening. His Lordship, presented at the latter place with an address of confidence signed by two hundred and forty-nine Liberal Associations of Lancashire, repaid his supporters by making a long speech. The hall was thronged. Sir U. J. Kay-Shuttleworth presided. The listeners were liberal with their cheers, and they heard with evident satisfaction that Mr. F. W. Grafton would be Lord Hartington's colleague in the contest for the north-eastern division of Lancashire. Solid as usual was the argument of Lord Hartington. Experience of the new Foreign Policy of the Government rendered it imperative for the Liberal Party to unite itself to reverse the decision given at the last election. As regarded the Marquis of Salisbury's defence of his Circular and of the Berlin Treaty, his Lordship, item by item, considered the points raised, and contended that neither with respect to Cyprus, Bessarabia, Batoum, Bourgas, or Eastern Roumelia had the reputed objects of the Foreign Secretary been carried out. In his accustomed sledge-hammer style, the Hope of the Liberal Party attacked one phase after another of Lord Salisbury's "immoral" and "inconsistent" policy, applying these epithets particularly to the indulgent tone adopted towards Turkey. How readily political hits were seized upon by the audience will be seen from one quotation:—

> Lord Salisbury says you mistrust the Turkish soldiers you cannot mistrust the Austrian sentry whom we have placed at the gate; and he goes so far as to say he has discovered a new gospel (laughter and cheers)—glad tidings of great joy—in the fact of the Alliance between Germany and Austria for this purpose. Lord Salisbury is not quite sure about this Alliance—a confession which is somewhat strange in the mouth of the Minister who has settled Europe according to his will (laughter), and from whose language one would suppose that this new, happy, blessed combination was entirely his own doing. But it turns out that Lord Salisbury has only read it in papers like the rest of us (laughter).

If Germany and Austria had united to resist the advance of Russia the Marquis of Hartington agreed that this would be good news. But he feared the Foreign Secretary's "glad tidings" would yield no encouragement to the budding States of the emancipated Turkish Provinces; and the noble Lord was not disposed to place implicit faith in Austria's ability to govern alien peoples. Lord Salisbury having put the blame of the Afghan trouble on to Lord Northbrook's shoulders, Lord Hartington shifted it back to the Foreign Secretary, and the abdication of Yakoob Khan was cited in proof of the impracticability of the Ministerial panacea. The International obligations undertaken, however, by the Government would have to be respected by their successors. And there seemed to be the ring of the metal of an incoming Minister in the patriotic tone of one of the noble Lord's concluding sentences:—

> I believe the resources of England are so great, her naval power is so great, that her alliance will be always courted by Europe (cheers); I believe the alliance ought to be given and to be used for the purpose of forming and joining in a combination of all the States of Europe for the purpose of preserving the peace and the independence of Europe (Hear, hear), for the purpose of repressing the aggressive ambition of any Power (cheers), for the purpose of protecting the weak against the strong (loud cheers), for the purpose of protecting the free against the oppressor—that is the policy which has always been, in the main, the characteristic of the Liberal party, and the gentlemen who have been the conductors of the Liberal party (Cheers).

The Liberal demonstration at Manchester was continued on Saturday in the spacious Pomona Gardens, the assemblage being so large that the Pomona Palace, wherein Lord Hartington and Mr. Bright spoke, overflowed with people, and two overflow meetings, each many thousands strong, had to be held. But, numerous as was the gathering, the keen interest taken in the proceedings was shown by the respectful silence (broken now and then only by enthusiastic acclamations) preserved during the speech-making. Mr. R. N. Phillips, M.P., presided over the principal meeting; and the address of the Marquis of Hartington was commendably brief, incisive, and to the point. Despite the warnings of the Ministerial press, his Lordship rejected the appeal and accepted "the challenge thrown out that the Prime Minister would appeal to the country were the conduct of the Government to be again impugned. Comparison between the acts of the past and the present Administration would not be feared, but courted. Lord Hartington, resigning his old prolixity, tersely said, and what followed was but an amplification of this text:—

> We shall remind the country that five years ago, when we resigned the reins of office, we left peace abroad and contentment at home (Cheers). We left trade and manufactures flourishing, we left the revenue daily increasing—increasing at a far greater rate than the expenditure of the country. Since the advent of the present Administration we have had apprehension of war in Europe; we have had actual and unnecessary war in Asia and Africa (Cheers). Trade and industry have been at a standstill. Confidence is gone—(Hear, hear)—the burdens of the people have been increased—(Hear, hear)—and as to the finance of the country, there are no words of mine which can adequately describe the condition to which it has sunk (Cheers). Gentlemen, it is a degradation of the term finance to call the administration of your revenues by the present Government by that name (Cheers). If the finance of the Conservative Government deserves to be called finance, then the reckless expenditure of every spendthrift who spends large revenues without knowing from what source the money is to come, then that course, I say, is equally worthy of the term finance (Cheers).

The cheering which greeted Mr. John Bright's rising ended in the multitude's singing (a band giving the cue) "Like a fine old English gentleman" out of compliment to the right hon. gentleman. Mr. Bright was in unusually good voice and spirits, and did not spare the rod. He was not surprised the Government feared to face the country, because "conscience does make cowards of us all." The old familiar theme of Free Trade was plunged into, apropos of the Marquis of Salisbury's speech to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce; and once again did Mr. Bright lustily do battle against the enemy, Protection (now christened "Reciprocity"), which he and Mr. Cobden did their best to demolish in the Anti-Corn-Law days. Quite one half Mr. Bright's speech was devoted to answering the Reciprocity argument of the Foreign Secretary, the other half to an animated contrast of the Home Legislation of the Gladstone Ministry with the restless Foreign Policy of the present Government. His conclusions were then compressed into a nutshell. Had the Liberal party remained in power there would have been "no war between Russia and Turkey," "no Zulu War," "no war against the Ameer of Afghanistan;" and neither would the finances of India have been disorganised, nor would there have been any "juggling" or "thimblerigging" in the finances of England, whilst the Income Tax would long since have been repealed, and depression in trade "would not have been aggravated by a policy reckless and wicked in three quarters of the globe. Finally, adapting a simile of Macaulay's, Mr. Bright ended his energetic speech in these words:—

> If at some distant period, it may be centuries remote, an Englishman—one of that great English nation which is now so rapidly peopling the American continent—if such an Englishman should visit and explore the sources of his race and the decayed and ruined home of his fathers, he may exclaim, "How are the mighty fallen! whence comes this great ruin?" And the answer will be that in the councils of England of the past—I pray that it may not be said in the days of a virtuous Queen—wisdom and justice were scorned, and ignorance and passion and vainglory directed her policy and wielded her power (Loud and prolonged cheering).

Mr. Bright, with the Marquis of Hartington, afterwards addressed a few words from a balcony to the enormous gathering outside, which Mr. Bright pronounced to be the greatest meeting of the kind he had ever seen.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach gave a smart and effective answer, from a Conservative point of view, to Mr. Bright's philippic on Monday at Birmingham. But a brief notice must first be bestowed on the speaking which took place in the Aston Lower Grounds at the same time that the Liberal addresses were being delivered at Manchester. The occasion was the "National Union of Conservative and Constitutional Associations," alluded to more fully and illustrated in another part of the paper. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was the Ministerial star that cast radiance over the principal meeting, and sought to illuminate the doings of the Government, and place them in the best light; and the Secretary for the Colonies gave practical effect to his speech by urging Birmingham Conservatives to return Major Burnaby as Conservative member for the town. It was to his hosts of the Birmingham Conservative Club, at luncheon on Monday, that Sir Michael made his most noteworthy speech. He boldly challenged Mr. Bright's assertions, and said that had a Liberal Ministry been in power Constantinople would have been in the hands of Russia, and the Ameer of Afghanistan the vassal of that great Power. The six millions spent were a "mere fleabite" to check the aggrandisement of Russia. Liberal as well as Conservative Governments before now had had to wage wars to maintain our Colonial Possessions. The violence of the language used both by Lord Hartington and Mr. Bright was stoutly protested against, but the Secretary for the Colonies would not imitate the intolerant tone of his opponents. As for the management of the finances, the Chancellor of the Exchequer had but done as Mr. Gladstone did in 1860 and 1861. Proceeding to Irish affairs, the right hon. Baronet regretted Mr. Bright's remarks on the land laws as calculated to foster agrarian agitation; and cited the Irish University Bill of the Government as having been welcomed by Irish members, whereas they rejected Mr. Gladstone's scheme.

There will be a pause now in public speaking on the part of Ministers until the 10th inst., when the Prime Minister and his colleagues are to address the assemblage of civic notabilities at the Lord Mayor's banquet. The most casual reference, meanwhile, can be made here to the multitudinous addresses now being delivered. Waning space will not permit us to add more than that Sir Henry James's two speeches at Taunton this week smacked not at all of nisi prius; that Mr. Chamberlain at Birmingham on Monday and Tuesday essayed to neutralise the deliverances of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; that the Duke of Somerset on Saturday launched a spiteful couplet against Mr. Gladstone; that Mr. Rowland Winn on Monday showed his linguistic ability as "whip" at Gainsborough; and that the annual addresses of Mr. J. Holms and Mr. Fawcett to their constituents on Tuesday were worthy the reputation of both hon. members for sound sense and wide views of public affairs.

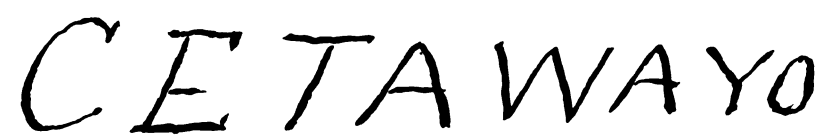
POLITICAL MEETINGS AT MANCHESTER AND BIRMINGHAM.

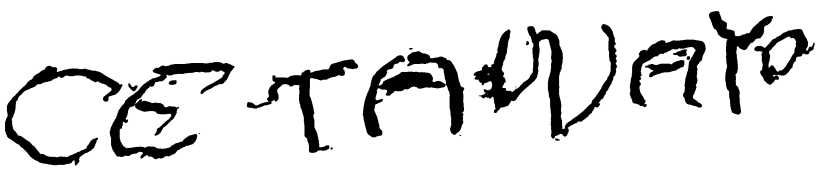
The mass meetings simultaneously held, on Saturday, by multitudes of the Liberal party assembled at Pomona Gardens, Manchester, to hear the Marquis of Hartington and Mr. John Bright, and at Birmingham, in the Aston Park Lower Grounds and Great Hall, by the National Union of Conservative Associations, were of extraordinary magnitude. Each of these vast gatherings is, therefore, made the subject of an Illustration in our Journal.

At Manchester, the immense buildings available for various public entertainments and exhibitions in the Pomona Gardens, which have been used, of late years, for some important political demonstrations, afford such an extent of accommodation as can nowhere be exceeded. The so-called "Palace," which was erected by the proprietor of the Gardens in 1869, was first employed for a purpose of this kind on Easter Tuesday in 1872, when Mr. Disraeli, accompanied by Lady Beaconsfield and supported by the Lancashire Conservatives, there received an enthusiastic welcome. But so early as June, 1869, before this building existed, the Gardens witnessed an immense Conservative demonstration against Mr. Gladstone's measure of Irish Church Disestablishment. The site has, therefore, come to be historically associated with the most strenuous conflicts of the two great political parties at present contending for ascendancy in England, whose forces in South Lancashire are nearly equally balanced. Hence it was that Lord Salisbury and Colonel Stanley had to speak at this place a fortnight ago. The dimensions of the "palace" are 220 feet long and 180 feet wide under one roof, divided by six rows of pillars, and having a floor space of 45,800 square feet, so that it can hold above 20,000 persons. There were seats for 6000 in this hall. There is another large building, the Agricultural Hall, which covers an area of 10,000 square yards. Both these vast halls were filled at the same time on Saturday afternoon, besides which there was a third assemblage of many thousands in the open air to hear speeches from a balcony. Lord Hartington and Mr. Bright first spoke to the meeting in the "palace;" then his Lordship went to the Agricultural Hall and there made a short speech; finally, both he and Mr. Bright appeared on the balcony and addressed a few sentences to the outdoor meeting. Mr. R. N. Philips, M.P., was chairman of the first and principal meeting, and Lord De Tabley, Lord Lymington, Lord Frederick Cavendish, and twenty members of Parliament, with the leading Manchester and Salford Liberals, were on the platform. The tenor of the speeches here delivered is noticed in another column.



At Birmingham there was the annual conference of the National Union of Conservative Associations, held at the Masonic Hall, under the presidency of Earl Percy, in the morning of the same day. In the afternoon there was a banquet in the Hall at Aston Lower Grounds, at which eight hundred members of those Associations sat down to table. The Marquis of Hertford was in the chair. In the evening there was a public meeting, of at least five thousand persons, in the Great Hall, where Lord Hertford again presided; and there were supplementary meetings, at the same time, in the adjacent skating-rink, and in the open grounds, as there were at Manchester. The Secretary of State for the Colonies, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. H. Chaplin, M.P., and Sir Hardinge Giffard, Solicitor-General, were the chief speakers. The secondary meeting was addressed by Sir H. Drummond Wolff, M.P., Lord Claud Hamilton, and Major Burnaby. The numbers gathered here could not be so large as at Manchester, but it was a very effective party demonstration.

Remissions of rent continue to be made. The agent of the Duke of Devonshire has issued a circular to his tenants stating that he would attend at Lismore Castle on Nov. 28 to receive the rent due, and adding, "If your rent is paid on that day, I am authorised by his Grace to make you an allowance of 20 per cent on a year's rent of the land held by you."—Mr. Robert J. Carew, who only lately came into possession of the property, allowed the tenants on his estate, near Cahir, 7s. 6d. in the pound on the half-year's rent due March last.—Mr. James Myers, of Suir Island House, Clonmel, has made a reduction of 25 per cent.—Sir John Ennis, Bart., landlord of extensive estates in Westmeath, Roscommon, and adjoining counties, in a letter to his solicitor, says: "I am reducing my rents, although never too high, and doing all in my power to assist my tenants to meet the present bad season. I think, after the hard winter, the poor must be very badly off."—Lord Darnley has announced a reduction of 15 per cent. on the rents of his Irish tenantry; and Lord Louth has granted a similar reduction to the tenants on his Monaghan and Louth estates.—Viscount Cranbrook has intimated to the tenants on his estate in Kent that he will allow them a reduction of 20 per cent at the rent audit to be held in December.—The Earl of Rosse has allowed his tenants on the Tipperary and King's County estates an abatement of 20 per cent on the half-year's rent due in November. His Lordship's rent-roll amounts to £18,000 per annum.—On the extensive estates of the trustees of the Marquis of Downshire there will be a general abatement of 10 per cent on the current year's rent of all agricultural holdings on their estates, if paid before Feb. 1 next. In addition, the turf-bog rents for the past season will not be charged.—Sir Thomas Bateson, M.P., has also made a reduction of 10 per cent on his estates, both in the county of Down and in the county of Londonderry.—William Kennedy Marshall, Esq., the owner of extensive estates in North Tipperary and in the county of Antrim, has allowed his tenants 25 per cent abatement on their current half-year's rents.—A reduction was made of 10 per cent on the last half-yearly rents of Lady Oglander's property in the Isle of Wight. A similar reduction has been made to the tenants of the Compton estates in the neighbourhood of Dorsetshire.



CETEWAYO'S WRITING LESSON.

His Majesty the ex-King of Zululand, like some of the Norman Kings of England (but not Henry Beauclerc), was unable to write his own name. But nobody has ever yet been able to spell it. Cetewayo, Cetywayo, Ketshwayo, Ketchwhyo, and several other phonetic or conventional variations have been tried in vain. We believe that the last of those given above is nearer than the others to the actual sound of the whole name, but it is not exactly right. The Zulu language has three "click" consonants of its own, or rather common to most of the Kaffir and other Bantu languages of South-East Africa. These different "clicks" are produced by smartly thrusting the tongue against either the palate, or the roots of the front teeth, or the side teeth. In the first syllable of the King's name, there is a double click, which passes from the palatal to the dental. No letters of the European alphabet will precisely represent such sounds; but the attempt to utter "Kt," as a double consonant, makes a certain approach to this part of the name. The second portion is "whyo" or "wyo," not "wayo," according to the ordinary use of vowels in English. It is of no great consequence; but since he is now taking pains to learn how to write his name, we may as well try to speak it, barring the impossible "clicks," till he and his affairs can be safely forgotten, and there be no need to speak of him any more.

During his late voyage from Port Durnford to Capetown on board H.M.S. Natal, transport-ship, he expressed a wish to know how to write. Having recovered from sea-sickness, which he endured with patience and good-humour (only wishing he had brought his "big stick" or sceptre, to have thrown it into the sea and made a calm), the captive monarch was ready to take his first lesson. This was kindly given him by his friend Commander Crawford Caffin, R.N., who, with Captain Ruscombe Poole, R.A., had joint charge of the illustrious passenger on board. We have been favoured with facsimile copies of the writing. Commander Caffin first inscribed the King's name, spelling it as he thought fit, in printing capital letters, which the Royal pupil imitated as well as he could. The result is shown in our Engravings herewith annexed.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"A Dictionary of Music and Musicians" (1450—1880), edited by George Grove (Macmillan and Co.). The completion of the first volume of this valuable and interesting work has already been recorded. The most recent part issued is the eighth, forming the second portion of the second volume. This number ends with the commencement of an article on Mendelssohn by the editor, who has contributed some of the most important biographies in the work, notably that on Beethoven. The article on Mendelssohn will doubtless be of pecular value, from the writer's possession of special sources of information, some of which are derived from a recent visit to Berlin expressly on that account.

The "Organists' Quarterly Journal of Original Compositions," edited by Dr. Spark (Novello, Ewer, and Co.). The eighth volume of this work is now half completed by the issue of the forty-fourth part. This current number opens with three short pieces, by Gustav Merkel, the first of which is a pleasing andantino in G major, No. 2 being a spirited "Allegro" in C major, and No. 3 a similar movement in D major—all being well written for the instrument. Then follows an "Andante Religioso" by W. Mullineux, of Bolton—a movement containing much variety of character; and this is succeeded by an "Idylle" by L. Sampson (op. 36, No. 2), a piece in a flowing and pastoral style. The number concludes with a well-written sonatina, consisting of three movements—a "Moderato" in C major, an "Andante Larghetto" in F, and a Rondo in the original key. The contents of the part are altogether up to the usual average.

Waldstein's "Giant-note Method" for the pianoforte, published by Messrs. Wood and Co., of Great Marlborough-street, has already been noticed by us as a cheap and useful instruction-book for juvenile students—and we need now only say that its success is proved by the recent issue of the ninth edition.

Among recent publications of Messrs. Neumeyer are Heinrich Hofmann's twelve pianoforte pieces, op. 46, for two performers. We have several times spoken in praise of this composer's music, and recently of his orchestral symphony, entitled "Frithjof," performed at the Crystal Palace. The pieces now referred to are full of varied interest, each answering to the characteristic title with which it is headed. They will be found both pleasing and improving in practice.

Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., distributed the prizes at the Mechanics' Institution, West Vale, Halifax, on Saturday night.

The annual simultaneous collection on behalf of the Commercial Travellers' Schools was made on Wednesday in the commercial room of every hotel in the United Kingdom.

Lord Carnarvon on Tuesday evening presented the prizes to the students of the Winchester School of Art, in the presence of a large audience, presided over by the Mayor, and gave an address on the national utility of such institutions.

A valuable gold watch and an illuminated address were presented at Margate on Monday to Mr. H. E. Davis, who recently resigned the captaincy of the borough fire brigade. The presentation was made by the Mayor.

The Cyfartha Ironworks at Merthyr Tydvil, which employ 4000 hands, were reopened on Monday after having been closed for five years; and on the same day the puddlers at Earl Granville's New Shelton Bar Ironworks, Hanley, who had been on strike for four or five weeks against a reduction of 6d. per ton, resumed work at the old rate of wages.

ON THE HEIGHTS.

On a hot August day we sat beside the snow at the mountain-top. The air was cool and light, and exquisitely pure; it had blown freshly in our faces as we climbed up, though in the valley below there was no wind. As we looked round, on each side lay a quite different view; but each was equally grand. In front of us, to the north, were spread out, as it seemed, "the kingdoms of the earth and the glory of them"—we looked between descending hills at a wide country, rough but yet fruitful, with a small distant river, and towns and bridges far away; shadows of the clouds moved slowly across the landscape—the fields seemed to shudder under them, as beneath some vast bird of prey, and to rejoice doubly when they were past. On our right, close to us, were the tops of lower hills: one, the crater of an extinct volcano, was as it were shaved off, and a little lake filled it to the brim—in the sunlight it must have glittered like an eye among the mountain-tops, a landmark to the birds soaring highest over the region. Beyond, there stretched a vast unbroken plain, over which hung a light mist; in the furthest distance a chain of mountains was faintly seen. In this view, the least beautiful, there was perhaps the greatest charm of mystery: it was so boundless, so wonderful—there were not hills and forests to distract one, there was only the immense plain, the home of a million people one had never seen, invisibly toiling below, living different lives, surrounded by different universes, each one thinking himself (with equal reason) the Centre of Things. A mist overhung them—but it hid nothing from us. Looking down on them all, we saw none; and they were as unconscious of our survey. One thought of the old indifferent gods of Lucretius; one understood the pagan conception of their home, above cold and heat, joy and woe, where could never

> Sound of human sorrow mount to mar
> Their sacred everlasting calm.

With a sigh, one turned and looked south: into a nest of mountain-tops, cleft with valleys and ravines. Here was the "Mouth of Hell," a rough gorge of grey stone, not covered with grass like most of the hills round it; and all on this side seemed to speak of that other life of the mountains, during half the year a snow-bound solitude, unapproachable by human foot. Somewhere hidden here too, were, I believe, the sources of the two little streams that run to the hill-foot and there join into a rivulet, which, rolling down the valley, spreads gradually into a wide and splendid river.

Down this valley, lastly, we look westwards towards the little town whence we have come. The lines of the mountains on each side are bold and square, the hilltops do not melt into each other, gently rounded off; each has character and decision. Nearly to their summits reaches the dark green of the trees; but the rough cowl of "the Monk," the bold top of the "Great Peak," stand out above it. Between the spurs of the mountains the valley stretches along, smooth and even, of a rich green, lighter than that of the surrounding woods; down the middle runs the river, its bends marked by cottages and trees, dark dots upon the plain; there is a sense of firmness, of solidity, in this tranquil land, and of human companionship in the squares of cultivated ground and the paths that make narrow lines along its sides. The valley lies much higher than the plains we have seen to north and east, and we can distinguish the herd of cows near us, wandering slowly home; as we go down the hillside and pass them in the meadows we shall hear their bells ringing, each with a different note, and the sunburnt cowboy calling them all by their names.

The wind blows, the sunlight is still brilliant, without heat; we take a handful of snow and eat it, though it is almost too cold to be refreshing. Then we start down the long, rough zigzag which takes us half-way into the valley, and which we may make longer, if we choose, by trying short cuts across wavy slopes covered with grass, mere hillocks to look at, but steep enough on their further sides. By our path little streams of the purest water constantly spring from the hillside; we see a few butterflies of familiar kinds; now and then a frog jumps into the grass; there are little yellow and purple flowers, lower down blackberries, and in the woods small wild strawberries of delicious flavour. Half-way down we meet an Englishman with a guide, evidently bent on "doing" the mountain in the shortest possible time; and near the town old countrywomen salute us, walking with packs on their backs and woolwork in their hands, or trotting along, man-fashion, astride wiry little horses.

The town, well known to French tourists, though hardly heard of in England, is called Mont Dore; it lies in the centre of the great volcanic district of Auvergne, and is visited chiefly for its baths—to the town-loving French the scenery is quite a secondary matter. Seven hours of mountain travelling from the nearest railway station, it has not all the comforts—nor half the cleanliness—of civilisation; nor, shut in as it is by the surrounding mountains, is its air by any means as clear and healthy as that from which we have just descended. Yet it is in the midst of beauty, and it has a quaintness—even a picturesqueness—of its own. There is a square, grey market-place, of which one side is formed by the low stone arches of the Etablissement des Bains, backed by the steep hillside. The baths were known to the Romans, and there is a Roman sternness about the building, with its heavy iron doors to imprison the luckless Frenchmen who discover too late that a bath means washing. The west side of the square is occupied by what might be a townhall, but is only another Etablissement—this time of vapour baths. Here, in a damp, oppressive atmosphere, gangs of invalids—they look exactly like convicts—tramp wearily round, and surely lose as much by depression of their spirits as they can gain from the unpleasant flavour of the air they inhale. The entrances of these buildings are thronged with grey sedan-chairs, trotted in and out with hapless patients at all hours of the morning from three till about eleven, and looking like bees in half-mourning about a hive-door.

Hotels and dingy half-underground shops make up the remaining sides of the square; and through it, at morning and evening, pass long lines of goats—to English eyes the most picturesque of animals—and, all the day, carts drawn by cows, men, and even dogs. At midday, during the tourist season, there is a sort of horse fair—horses, ponies, and donkeys are let out for the afternoon, with much excited bargaining in broad Auvergnat. Children sell switches; tourists mount, with more or less difficulty; at every window heads are looking out, for the start of the horsemen is one of the daily matters of interest at Mont Dore, ranking even before the arrival and departure of the clumsy diligences from Clermont. Afterwards, those who remain settle down in the Terrace, sitting under the trees to chat or read novels, and making believe to listen to the band, which plays those old, old "Selections" which, after all, give the greatest happiness to the greatest number of listeners.

But the wise go up the mountains; and the wisest go alone. Those silent heights, that pure keen air, are so unlike what we from the cities, we dwellers in the plain, commonly know: we are right to seek either their majesty or the vastness of the sea when we go from town, as we say, "for a change." There is reason underlying this fashion of foreign tours; Stoke Pogcs has its beauty, as well as Switzerland—but the latter is better for a tired Londoner.

THE WINTER EXHIBITIONS.

In the forthcoming winter "season" we can hardly expect a repetition of the brilliant hibernal art-display of last year. The practically inexhaustible riches of the country in Old Masters will doubtless again be exemplified at the Royal Academy; but we shall not, we cannot, again see such a gathering of drawings by those giants of old as was shown with such lavish prodigality at Burlington House and the Grosvenor Gallery. The projected exhibition of water-colour drawings by living artists at the last-named rooms seems to be unnecessary and ill-advised. It can hardly be very attractive in itself, though it may impoverish the show at the Dudley and weaken that of the junior society—where divided counsels appear to prevail. It will, however, probably receive no support from the Old Society, that body having, we understand, resolved to abstain en masse from appearing in Bond-street. The remaining exhibitions at Suffolk-street, and still more those organised by dealers, will probably continue for some time to reveal the effects of the long-continued depression,—Art being naturally one of the interests the soonest affected by, and the slowest to recover from, a decline in the national prosperity.

THE FRENCH GALLERY.

The experienced proprietor of this gallery—Mr. Wallis—would probably be among the first to admit the justice of the remark just made. The exhibition which opened on Monday last may be regarded as of a somewhat provisional character. The former prestige of the gallery will doubtless be far better supported by the ensuing collection in the spring. M. de Neuville's great picture, "Le Bourget (October 30, 1870)," reappears—representing the survivors of the handful of men of the dépôts de la garde, and mobiles de la Presse, surrendering after their desperate defence of the village church of Le Bourget to an overwhelming force of the Prussian Guard. Having described the work at length on its previous exhibition, we may content ourselves by strongly recommending all who have not seen it to pay a visit to the gallery. It seems to have lost some crudeness in the interval since it was first shown, and it gains likewise in breadth of effect in the quieter light of the west wall.

After this in dramatic interest, but superior in some artistic qualities, is the picture by Professor L. C. Müller of an assemblage of Mohammedan pilgrims encamped outside the walls of Mecca in motley and picturesque groups of men and camels, and girls bringing provisions from the City of the Prophet. The character in the swarthy visages of the Arabs and other races, relieved against turban or white bournous and haikh, is very finely rendered. Solid, broad, admirably drawn, rich, mellow, and harmonious in colour, this is a masterpiece. A brilliant effect of Eastern sunlight is obtained without resort to violent oppositions of yellow lights and purple shadows. Nor is there any other technical artifice. Above hangs a still-life composition by Madame Muraton, noble in execution as in colour. The "Arab Horsemen," by Schreyer, has the painter's familiar merits in this oft-repeated subject, but the general effect seems to be more than usually embroiled in the liquid browns of the preparatory painting. A large cattle-piece by De Haas exemplifies the customary excellences and defects of the artist. Less sound in draughtsmanship, and less happy in expressing the movements of cattle than many other animal painters, his gray, aerial Dutch meadows are always an agreeable foil to the colour of his beasts, and he is unsurpassed in the bold impasto of his handling.

The remaining foreign pictures are generally small domestic scenes, single-figure studies, or landscapes of modest dimensions, and, although respectable average is maintained, few can be regarded as hors ligne. The French school is very sparingly represented by painters of the Ecouen school, such as Dargelas, Seignac, and Aufray—the first in his schoolboy subjects coming nearest the master, Edouard Frère. Also by V. Chevillard, in a little picture of a priest strolling at twilight in the midst of a plain, probably near Barbizon; and Le Loux in "The Vestal Tuccia," holding a sieve as she calls upon Vesta to aid her in filling it with the water of the Tiber in proof of her chastity—a smoothly-painted picture, curiously unlike in the inharmonious greys the local colour of the Tiber and its banks. There are also some clever sea-pieces by the Belgian, T. Weber, sketches silvery in tone by Gabriel, and a pathetic picture by T. Sadee, of a woman with her two children returning from the Schevening beach whence her fisherman husband has just set sail.

The German pictures are much more numerous, and their provenance, whether from Munich or Düsseldorf, is generally recognisable by their heavy bituminous shadows or blackness of tone respectively. Where there is so much honest, sound, capable workmanship it is unfortunate that these peculiarities should so persistently adhere. Take, for example, the "Mid-day Rest" and "A Hungarian Fair," by G. von Bochmann: both works are remarkably delicate and truthful, yet how much more satisfactory would they be—the latter especially—if they approached the effect of open air. H. Heffner is free from this defect, though fond of a cold key of colour, and the promise given in former works, in which conditions of cloudland dominated, is fully redeemed by those in the present exhibition, which embrace a much wider range of effect from the brilliant daylight, or bleak grizly haze, or lifting rain-cloud of the "Rhenish lowland" views, to the scene "Near the German Coast," with a clear autumnal sunset sky reflected in the shallow of an estuary or of the alluvial deposit at some river mouth, perhaps a branch of the Rhine. There are examples also of Windmaier, Heinish, Poschinger, and other German landscapists. L. Munthe's snow-piece, with the copper-hued light of the declining sun struggling through snow-cloud and brown fog, betrays no falling off, although he has painted the almost identical subject and effect scores of times. We may mention here also (the artist having studied in the Düsseldorf school) the moonlight view of the "Port of Beaulieu, near Nice," by the Swedish artist Wahlberg, a fair, moderate-sized example of an original and powerful painter.

German figure-pictures commonly commend themselves to the English public by their domestic homely sentiment, and careful unaffected realistic treatment. But they almost invariably fall short of the higher idyllic and æsthetic attributes, for, with very few exceptions, the German artist seems incapable of hitting any mean between absolute literalism and supernatural unreality or pseudo-historic, vague, generalisation. "Grandfather's Darling," by A. Spring—an old man dressing a little child—will bear out what we mean. The pathos is genuine enough, but it is merely sad and sorry; the peevish-looking child has none of the beauty, and the old fellow none of the venerableness which are often found in the lowest station of life. The remark applies no less to "Official Instructions," by Laupheimer, the humour of which is simply pitiful, and to H. Schloesser's "Village Politicians." We commend to notice, for the capital character-painting of the face, a little picture, by H. Kauffmann, of an old peasant or burgher smoking his long German pipe, and G. Kuhl's "Literary Researches."

A proportion of English pictures always diversify the winter exhibitions at this gallery, but our school is seldom so well represented as to render comparison with the foreign works fair or profitable. On this occasion they consist, as usual, of works by old-established favourites of the public, such as Messrs. Leader, James Webb, R. Ansdell, T. F. Dicksee, and E. Hayes, and by younger aspirants. Mr. Leader is at his best in two Welsh river landscapes, and the same may be said of Mr. Webb's "Rotterdam" and "Pinks Going Out." Mr. Dicksee (father of the young painter of "Evangeline," in the last Academy Exhibition) challenges more detailed observation, both by the arduous subjects and scale of his two pictures of "Madeline" disrobing in the moonlight, from Keats's "Eve of St. Agnes," and "Juliet at the Balcony," also of course under moonlight effect. Distinguished by a delicate sense of refined female beauty, highly wrought, and accompanied with appropriate accessories, these figures undoubtedly please the eye—the end the artist sought, apparently, rather than completely sympathetic poetical interpretation, or that higher charm to be won from closer contact with nature, and the artistic rendering of moonlight. Here moonlight is suggested by degradation of tone, not realised by opposition of hues, such as gave magical effect to Mr. Millais's "Eve of St. Agnes." And the mature and somewhat haggard "Juliet" is hardly the heroine of Shakspeare, that "had not seen the change of fourteen years." Mr. Tom Lloyd was justified in appending the title "A Pastoral" to his landscape, bathed in mellow sunlight, so agreeable is it in feeling, with some of the grace of the late Mr. Mason. Miss Hilda Montalba is original and charming in her view of the quaint buildings and turrets of "Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, Canada," gilded by the declining sun, with snow lying on the ground. Two pictures by Miss Clara Montalba, "Southwark Bridge" and "Off Erith" are remarkable for their robust impasto and brushwork, but we fear the gifted young artist is in danger of falling into mannerism and conventionality by the very facility with which she has mastered the means of art. "Raising the Wind," by Mr. Savile Lumley—an anxious cavalier in treaty with a wily money-lender—is a marked advance in solidity and colour. We have seen better work by Mr. F. Morgan than "Love me, love my dog."

MR. M'LEAN'S GALLERY.

The Winter Exhibition at this gallery in the Haymarket consists as usual of a well-selected collection of drawings by members of the various societies and some foreign artists. It is not necessary to review the English works in detail, as we shall meet with most of the artists again shortly in their own respective galleries. A feature of the exhibition is a series of over twenty flower-pieces by that able painter of still-life Mrs. Helen Angell. The most important drawings are "The Battle of Marston Moor," by Sir John Gilbert, and "Alice Bridgnorth, an early scene from 'Peveril of the Peak,'" by J. D. Linton. There are also good though generally small examples of G. Dodgson, G. Fripp, Birkett Foster, E. Duncan, G. Clausen, Cuthbert Rigby, James Webb, James and T. B. Hardy, Mrs. Allingham, T. Collier, E. K. Johnson, Seymour Lucas, Tom Lloyd, C. Green, and others—a few works having been previously exhibited The foreign drawings are of more novel interest. "The Fisherman's Family, Venice," by Silvio Rotta, is in all respects excellent. By E. Tofana there are two very pretty female studies. "The Blind Beggar," by Dyckmans, though different in composition from the National Gallery oil-picture, has some of the same photographic precision with greater artificiality. There are also chalk drawings tinted by Edouard Frère and studies by Mdlle. Henriette Brown, neither artist, however, is seen to advantage out of their customary medium.

MESSRS. TOOTH AND SONS' GALLERY.

The exhibition of cabinet pictures in oil at this gallery (also in the Haymarket) suffers from the absence of "leading pictures." The average may be regarded as respectable, albeit including a good deal of the mediocrity which too generally characterises an ordinary English picture show. Here British art preponderates much more largely than at the French Gallery; and it will suffice to say (our space being limited) that there are fair samples of Messrs. T. S. Cooper, Seymour Lucas; Marcus Stone—"Discord," exhibited at the Academy last summer; Beavis, Leader, J. Webb, Vicat Cole, G. Cole, Hamilton Macallum, J. Peel, Syer, S. E. Waller, E. Crofts, W. T. Richards, J. L. Tissot (who may be regarded as naturalised among us), and several others. M. F. Holl's "Daughter of the House," from the Academy, is also here; and a picture entitled "Widowed," a cottage interior, with a young mother and child, the face of the former hidden from view in a passion of grief. There are, however, a few pictures by foreign painters which merit eulogy or provoke criticism. Foremost among these is a little gem by Boldini of a young gallant and lady, in costumes of the last century, promenading on the Pincio at Rome, which is marvellously brilliant and dextrous: the crispness, brio, and certainty of the touch are really amazing on so microscopic a scale. A picture of two ladies, confidantes, perusing a letter, by R. Madrazo is, we need hardly say, very skilful in execution, but it suffers from the excessive use of cold blue (cobalt) tones which injures so many of the artist's recent works. Two or three Duvergers are unusually good, particularly one of a couple of boys filling the absent dominie's snuff-box with ink. We would also commend to the visitor the pictures by Toulmouche, Sadée, Blommers, Hublin, Breling, T. Weber, Peyrol Bonheur, &c.

At Messrs. Dowdeswell's rooms, 36, Chancery-lane, there is a collection of most of the principal etchings by Méryon, which we regret we are unable to review in this Number. Next week we hope to do some justice to the works of this long neglected but original artist. An exhibition of Méryon's work is also being arranged at the Burlington Fine-Arts Club.

The "Institute of Art," 9, Conduit-street, has opened an exhibition of various kinds of works, artistic and ornamental, chiefly by amateur ladies.

Mr. Robert Dunthorne, of Vigo-street, Regent-street, has issued a large etching by M. Lhuillier, after the picture by Mr. J. S. Noble, entitled "Lazy Moments," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1878. The etching, which is of unusual size, represents two noble hounds reposing in the kennel under a strong effect of light. M. Lhuillier has proved in this masterly work that he is as much at home in pictures of animal life as in the other works produced by him for the same publisher.

Mr. C. H. Jeens, the steel engraver, died on the 22nd ult. M. Edouard Theophile Blanchard, a pupil of Cabanel, and first-class medallist at the Salon of 1874, died on the 24th ult. The death of Mr. Powell, the American artist, is announced.

The formal proclamation of the Welsh National Eisteddfod for 1880 was made at Carnarvon yesterday week, with much ceremony. After the proclamation of the "gorsedd" by the bards, there was a public luncheon, presided over by Mr. Alderman Rees, chairman of the committee.

OAKS AND ACORNS.

Our favourite works by Sir Walter Scott are "Kenilworth" and "Ivanhoe," and in the first chapter of the latter book we are introduced to a forest scene, where, surrounded by hundreds of gnarled old oaks Gurth, the herdsman, is blowing his horn to collect his scattered swine, which there are feasting on beechmast and acorns; and in the last exhibition at the Royal Academy this scene was so well rendered in a picture called "The Swineherd" that it was purchased by the council from the artist, Mr. Johnson, as, apart from its merits as a work of art, it had for its subject an ancient custom—a custom which October brings to mind—the olden grant of "pannage," by which term was meant the forest right of feeding hogs on "mast." This right, with which monasteries were endowed, and which often constituted, according to Burnett, the dowry of the daughters of the Saxon Kings, had, of course, to be paid for, and the money received for it, which was called "agistment," was collected by men who were termed "agistors," who had to bring before the Lord Chief Justice of the Forest a true and just account of the sums received by them "for the Pannage of the King's woods from Holy-Rood Day to the feast of St. Martin"; and so strictly were the conditions of this right enforced, that men, when driving swine to woods of their own that lay beyond the forest, were allowed but one night's rest for their herd therein. "If the swine lie one night within the forest, no trespass; the agist of swine is for the pannage."

This paid-for privilege had, however, its drawback, in the shape of the crippling of the dogs, that they should not hurt the deer; and in the chapter in Ivanhoe to which we have referred, we read how Gurth, seeing the helplessness of his good dog Fangs, heaps maledictions on the ranger "that cuts the fore-claws off our dogs, and makes them unfit for their trade;" and also, how his master disputes afterwards the right of such disabling, lawing, hambling, or expeditating, because the wood, where Fangs went, had been "disforested;" thus showing that Cedric the Saxon was well up in that law which affirmed, "In purlieus or places disafforested, a man may keep a mastiff without being expeditated." But Gurth had this consolation, that though, through the law, the claws of his dog could not be fixed in the swine, Fangs might yet, legally, hold on to their ears; as it had been adjudged in a case where an action was brought against a man for keeping a mastiff, knowing the dog was in the habit of biting hogs—that the action would not lie, "because 'tis not only common, but in many cases necessary for dogs to bite hogs." So, as the law was thus dead against them, the pigs of that day must have had a bad time of it, in that acorn month, October.

It would seem, by-the-by, that our word "pigs," was a term not then in vogue, as it is not mentioned in ancient records, nor indeed by modern writers. Thus, when Wamba demands, "How call you those grunting brutes?" "Swine, fool, swine!" says Gurth. And "Swine is good Saxon," is the jester's comment; "while we have the authority of Dame Quickly that 'hog is Latin for bacon.'" Now, acorn-fed bacon is, they say, the very best of bacon, and cottagers still think so; but their pigs will now fare badly, as acorns, which as yet are no bigger than berries, are this year very scarce. Pigs, like sheep, thrive well upon them; deer, too; and at this season of the year scores of rosy rustics may be seen in woods and lanes hunting for acorns for his Lordship's keeper, who pays the youngsters something for their trouble, and so fond are the deer of this food that they will shake down acorns from their own oak-trees for their does and dappled fawns.

English acorns are of two kinds, the "sessile," which grow on the branch, and the "peduncled," which have long stalks to them; and the oaks that bear them will grow side by side, as may be seen in a lane at Dulwich; while at Kew may be found on the Turkey oaks acorns that are in mossed cups. Jesse speaks of "sweet" acorns, which he found in Richmond Park, that had a taste like filberts. If such acorns existed in olden times, when roots and berries had to supply most wants, our ancestors fared less badly. "Why," asks Timon of the banditti, "why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots, the oaks bear mast, the briars, scarlet hips. Want! why want?"

Now, it is singular that for the proper pronunciation of good Saxon terms we should have to go to unlearned districts, where young Hodge—who, until School Boards burst on his bewildered vision, "never had no schoolin' o' no sort"—smacks out his words with full Saxon flavour. One of such words is that which, softened in sound by our civilisation, we call "a-corn;" but young Hodge says "ac-orn," and young Hodge is right, as was maintained by that stickler for correct pronunciation, the late Mr. Charles Kemble; and that acorns were called ac-orns in Shakspeare's time, is very evident. Take any hackneyed quotation where that word occurs—say, "creep into acorn-cups," and "acorn-cradled," and see how the rhythm of the line fails with "acorn," but swings with "ac-orn"—the corn of the oak.

The oak is well known to like a strong deep soil, and it is a tree which, as sacred to Jupiter—who gave the power of augury to the oaks of Dodona—is called "the tree of Jove." Thus, when Celia says, alluding to Orlando, "I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn"—note here the ac-orn—Rosalind replies, "It may well be called Jove's tree, when it drops such fruit." No tree has been more written about, from Shakspeare, on the oak of Herne the hunter, to Cowper's fine poem of the Yardley-Oak, and the Talking-Oak by Tennyson; and few have been connected oftener with regal honours in old and modern days The leaves, too, of the oak supplied the Romans with material for their civic crowns; while from its branches the Druids cut mistletoe, though its growth on that tree is now so rare that a mistletoe oak is a curiosity.

Of oaks, a hundred and fifty species have been well made out, one hundred of which have been introduced into this country. Amongst them are the Turkey oak, the cork-tree, the evergreen oak, the Fulham and Liscombe hybrids, and the tribe of American ones, whose large leaves turn scarlet in the autumn. When oaks have been pollarded in early years they will make great handsome trees; and a group of stag-horned ones, that are well worth seeing, may be found at Streatham Common. The length of time to which oaks will live is truly wonderful—as witness the Fairlop, the Conqueror's, the Parliament, and the Salcey—the latter being stated to be 1500 years old—and so is the girth to which oaks have attained. Thus, the width at the butt of the Cowthorpe oak is 78 ft.; of the Damary, 68 ft.; of the Merton, 63 ft.; of the Baddington, 54 ft.; of the Hempstead, 53 ft.; and of the Salcey, 46 ft. Kings of the forest, truly!

Such data as these are indeed remarkable, when we come to the fact, that the oak, that monarch of the woods, has more insect enemies than any other tree—2000 even, say the entomologists. Amongst them, are the green grasshopper, and the larvæ of the lobster and the swallow-tailed moths, while that of the stag-horn, our largest beetle, may be found in its rotten wood; and it is to a cynips, or gall-fly that we owe the formation of "oak-balls," and the pink "oak spangles." But it has its glories, too, in many butterflies; and on the topmost branch of this king of trees may fittingly be found the "Purple Emperor."

ALL HALLOW AND ALL SAINTS.

The close of the last day of October is known as Halloween, or All Hallow Eve, the hallowed evening of All Saints' Day, Nov. 1; and it is regarded, even now, with much superstition throughout Great Britain and Ireland. It is the evening for spirits to appear and for ghosts to wander; and the child who is born on that night is believed to possess the power of seeing supernatural objects—a superstition that was turned to account by Sir Walter Scott in "The Monastery." Spirits are invoked by sowing hemp-seed and by winnowing three weehts of nothing. The witches were warded off the corn at Halloween, both in Scotland and England, by the waving of a lighted brand or straw; and, similarly, lighted candles were used to drive them from the Malkin Tower, in the forest of Pendle, Lancashire. In Wales, bonfires were kindled on Halloween, and white stones cast into the ashes, and if any stone was not visible on the next morning, it was considered that the person who threw it would not live to see another anniversary of the day. The same practice and belief exist in the Scottish Highlands, and I met with it in Argyleshire only a few years since. The bonfire at Balmoral, on Halloween, is on a large scale, and has often been witnessed by her Majesty, who has carried a lighted torch—her Royal children doing the same—to toss upon the fire, in which a grotesque figure is burnt, whose supposed cries are presumed to be drowned by the sound of the bagpipes.

Whoever has seen Maclise's large picture of "Snap-Apple Night; or, All Hallow's Eve," will be aware that, in Ireland, the rustic celebration of the last night in October is attended with sports in which apples have a prominent place, and hence give to that evening the name of "Snap-Apple Night." The apples are put into a tub of water, whence they must be taken by the mouth only, the head being ducked in a way that gives rise to much merriment; and they are also fixed on one end of a stick, suspended horizontally from the ceiling or rafter, its other end having a lighted candle. As the hands are not allowed to be used, the apple has to be snapped at with the mouth; and, unless this is done with dexterity, the stick swings round, and its candle-end is brought into unpleasant contact with the face. Another use of the apple on this night is for an unmarried girl to eat it before a looking-glass, in which she will see the reflection of her future husband peering over her shoulder. If she is careful to do this when a favoured suitor is behind her, the divination has a fair chance of fulfilment. There was also the Halloween superstition of the three luggies or dishes, one of which was empty and the two others filled respectively with pure and foul water. The lads and lasses were led blindfolded to these basins, into one of which they dipped their hands; a dip into the pure water signified marriage to a maiden; a dip in the foul water, marriage to a widow or widower; and a dip into the empty bason showed that the person would die an old maid or an old bachelor. In Cornwall, Halloween is called Allan Day or Allan Night, and Allan apples are purchased at the Allan market, for children to eat, and also to hide one apple beneath their pillows, to bring them good luck for the next twelvemonth. In the Isle of Man the word has been corrupted to Hollandtide eve; and bonfires were lighted to drive away the evil spirits. Not only were the apples used, at Halloween, for amusement and divination, but their pippins were brought into requisition for a similar purpose. The poet Gay describes a girl placing a pippin on each of her cheeks, one for Lubberkin and the other for Booby Clod, and seeing which pippin will drop first to the ground. Booby Clod's pippin falls first, thereby showing that his love is unsound;

> While Lubberkin sticks firmly to the last;
> Oh! were his lips to mine but joined so fast!

Nuts were also in great request on Halloween, for the purposes of divination, so much so that in the north of England this night is called "Nutcrack Night." If two nuts that had been put before the fire by a lad or lassie kindled and burned together, it was a sign that their courtship would end in marriage; but if the nuts started away from each other, it foretold that their courtship would soon come to an end. Burns describes this fully in his poem on "Halloween;" and it is also mentioned by Gay, and by Goldsmith in "The Vicar of Wakefield." Another Halloween custom in Scotland is to go into the kailyard blindfold, and there pull a stock of kail; if it be long, short, or crooked, so will be the shape of the future wife or husband; and if much or any earth stick to the root, so will be the amount of the dowry. Another method of performing this divination is to pull three stalks of oats.

One of the Northampton churches is dedicated to All Hallows, and its bells are supposed to ring out on Shrove Tuesday the following jingle:—

> Roast beef and marsh mallows,
> Says the bells of All Hallows.

In Charles I.'s reign All Hallow was considered as the beginning of the Christmas season, and in the Memoirs of Bulstrode Whitelocke a very graphic account is given of the way in which the barristers of the Middle Temple observed Halloween in the year 1629 with gay proceedings, then called revels, in which favourite dances, such as galliards, corantos, and brawls were performed, and when even "the grave Lord Keeper led the brawls."

All Saints' Day—for which Halloween is supposed to be the preparation—has been observed on the first day of November for more than ten centuries, and is kept in the English Church calendar as a day for the commemoration of all those saints and martyrs for whom, individually, no special day has been set apart. Keble's thoughts, on this day, will be found, not only in his beautiful poem in "The Christian Year," but also in the poem on "Church Windows," in the "Lyra Innocentium." Among older poems on the subject, I may mention one in Hicke's "Devotions," and a sonnet by Drummond of Hawthornden. Up to the year 837 All Saints' Day had been observed on May 1, and was instituted by Pope Boniface IV., when the Emperor Phocas permitted him, in the year 610, to dedicate the Pantheon at Rome to the Virgin and all the martyrs. But, in the year 837, Gregory IV. altered the celebration of the day to Nov. 1, as it was supposed that, by this later date, all the harvest would be gathered in, and the faithful would not be inconvenienced by journeying to Rome to participate in the festival.

The names of Saints and Martyrs are held in popular remembrance by the greater number of churches, in this country, being dedicated to God in their names and in memory of their lives, professions, and deaths. Of Saints in other countries who are commemorated on Nov. 1, we have the names of St. Benignus of Burgundy, St. Austremonius, St. Cæsarius, St. Mary, martyr, St. Marcellus, Bishop of Paris, and St. Harold, King of Denmark, martyred in the year 980.

As the close of All Saints' Day is All Souls' Eve, it is the custom in many parts of England for village children to "go a-souling," as it is termed, which commonly is asking for apples and beer, and whatever they can get, either in money or provisions; though the cake that is made specially for that evening, and is called the soul-cake, is, presumably, what the children ask for. Doggerel verses are sung on these occasions; those that I have heard in the midland counties—including the "one for Peter and two for Paul," and other lines—were but a slight variation of what I have also heard them singing, a little later in the month, when they came "a Clemmening" on St. Clement's Day, Nov. 23, as described and illustrated by me in this Journal some twenty years since. In some places the evening of All Saints' Day is called "Cake Night," from the provision of these "Soul-cakes," which have also been known as Psalm-cakes, dirge-loaves, and dole-bread. Two centuries ago, when John Aubrey, the antiquary, saw piles of these soul-cakes heaped upon plates in a Shropshire farmhouse on the evening of All Saints' Day, he said that he was reminded of the pictures of the shewbread in old Bibles. MAJOR W. KNOX LEET, V.C.

We lately noticed an official announcement in the London Gazette that the Queen has been graciously pleased to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on this worthy officer of her Majesty's Army, whose claims were submitted for her Majesty's approval, for his gallant conduct during the recent operations in South Africa, as recorded against his name—viz., "Major William K. Leet, first battalion 13th Regiment.—For his gallant conduct on March 28, 1879, in rescuing from the Zulus Lieutenant A. M. Smith, of the Frontier Light Horse, during the retreat from the Inhlobane. Lieutenant Smith whilst on foot, his horse having been shot, was closely pursued by the Zulus, and would have been killed had not Major Leet taken him upon his horse and ridden with him, under the fire of the enemy, to a place of safety."

The testimony of Major-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., C.B., in his speech at the Fishmongers' Hall banquet on Sept. 28, may also be quoted. After naming Lord William Beresford, Colonel Redvers Buller, and Major Leet, who had gained the Victoria Cross, he said, "I am proud to claim them as comrades. You all know how they got their crosses. In each case they carried off soldiers who must else have fallen under the Zulu assegais. You probably do not know, however, that when Major Leet took up, on a tired pony, a double burden, he incurred a double risk; for he went into the fight so crippled by a sprained knee that, once dismounted, he could not have made an effort to escape."

We published an exact narrative of this brave action in our paper of Sept. 20, and a letter from Lieutenant Smith, giving a similar account of it, and expressing his gratitude to Major Leet as his preserver, appeared in this Journal on May 31. Major Leet had previously had his own horse shot under him, and the one he then mounted was a pack-horse, or rather a pony, without bridle, riding-saddle, or stirrups. He and two other officers, Lieutenant Duncombe and Lieutenant Smith, were separated from the rest of the party retreating down the mountain, which was very steep and rocky, and they were stopped by a precipice. A numerous band of Zulus, firing and throwing assegais, rushed upon them. Lieutenant Duncombe was struck down, and Lieutenant Smith, who was on foot, became utterly exhausted. The situation was certainly much worse than that of Lieutenant Carey and the Prince Imperial, with their party of horsemen, on June 1. But Major Leet, alone as he was with the helpless comrade exposed to instant death, had a noble spirit of self-devotion. He halted in riding off along the edge of the precipice, and, by an effort of main strength, lifted up the breathless man clinging to the pony's pack-saddle, took him up behind, and carried him safely away. On the very next day, in the defence of General Evelyn Wood's fortified camp at Kambula Hill, the most obstinately fought battle of the Zulu war, Major Leet held command and performed the most important services, which were duly acknowledged in that General's despatches.

This exemplary officer is a son of the late Rev. E. S. Leet, Rector of Dalkey, Ireland, and is the youngest of five brothers, all of whom have served in the Army or Navy, and have received medals for war services. He entered the Army in July, 1855, and was with the 13th Light Infantry through the Indian Mutiny campaign, where he showed distinguished gallantry in the field. He was six years Adjutant to his regiment, and subsequently an Instructor of Musketry, Captain Instructor of the Staff at Hythe, and five years Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General at Cork. In South Africa, after serving with his regiment against Secocoeni in the Transvaal, he was appointed to command the two battalions of irregular troops, with native auxiliaries, forming part of Brigadier-General Wood's movable column. No one did better service throughout the Zulu War, or is more deserving of substantial promotion in the ranks of the Army.

THE HAMILTON COURT-HOUSE, CANADA.

Their Excellencies the Marquis of Lorne, Governor-General of Canada, and her Royal Highness Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, visited Hamilton, in the province of Ontario, on Sept. 15, and stayed there two days. The ceremony of formally opening the new Court-House and Shirehall for the county of Wentworth and city of Hamilton was the main feature of the public proceedings. We give an Illustration of this building. The corner-stone was laid in August, 1877, by Mr. James Seymour, Past Grand Master of Freemasons, under the directions of the Masonic body in that district; and the contract was carried out by Mr. E. Van Allen, from the designs of Mr. C. W. Mulligan, architect. The building has cost about 125,000 dols. The interior is magnificently fitted up, the desks, rails, architraves, and panelling being all of solid walnut.

The fresh meat landed at Liverpool during last week from the United States and Canada was in excess of any week for some few months past; while the arrivals of live stock, on the other hand, were extremely limited. With the approach of the winter months and the prevalence of turbulent weather, the consignments of live cattle and sheep become materially smaller; whereas the conveyance of fresh meat is conducted on a much larger scale as the warm weather departs.

At the Croydon Sanitary Congress on Thursday week Captain Douglas Galton read a paper on Engineering and Sanitary Construction, in which, among other things, he strongly condemned the practice of those persons who, having purchased a building site, removed from it the healthy, clean gravel and sand which it contained, afterwards filling it up with rubbish, which often contained the germs of disease, and proceeded to build upon it. Dr. Corfield gave a lecture on Sanitary Fallacies. Yesterday week Mr. Symons gave an address in which he referred to the unhealthiness of our places of public assembly, and showed what means should be adopted to remedy it. A supplementary sitting was held last Saturday, at which the ventilation of buildings and the provision of scientific quarters for soldiers were amongst the subjects discussed.

CANADA.—INDIAN SUMMER.

October. The blood-red sun is shining from an unclouded sky; but there is a rosy haziness pervading the atmosphere that leaves one in doubt whether the heavens are blue or pink or purple, and which throws a veil over distant scenery: a haziness that must not be confounded with mist or fog, for it is very much thinner and far more transparent than an ordinary mist, bringing with it, too, a feeling of rest and gladness—which mists and fogs most certainly do not. Nature is in a state of delightful repose: the air is balmy and tranquil, save for a zephyr that now and then floating lazily down the city streets murmurs a fitful sigh, and lingeringly sobs in the forest. It would be difficult to say which of the seasons' deities is now reigning. Ceres and Pomona, with their attendant nymphs, have left for warmer climes. There is no sign, however, of the approach of the ice-king. It is an interregnum; and, so pleasant is the state of the atmosphere, we heartily wish some kind aerial spirit would drug rude Boreas so that he might sleep on for ever—a charming dolce far niente kind of weather, when we would fain rest from our daily toil, for work seems out of place, and we pursue our vocations with a feeling of ennui; we should much prefer to fling ourselves into our easy-chairs by the open windows under the green verandahs, and read a novel, light a cigar, or be otherwise luxuriously idle.

We said there is no sign of the approach of winter. In some years, however, there is an ominous hint just before the Indian Summer commences. As a rule, when winter once begins he stays persistently until the spring; but in some years what is termed "squaw-winter" has a spasmodic existence for about a week or ten days. After a short struggle for life, this suspicion of frost vanishes as quickly as it came; and then follows a delightful spell of three weeks or so—the Indian Summer, with its blood-red suns and, as Longfellow puts it, its "dreamy and magical light."

It is not our intention to attempt to explain the cause of this ever-recurring atmospheric phenomenon. There has been much discussion regarding it, one reason given being the burning of the distant prairies. After the scorching heat of summer the prairies—those vast natural meadows that abound in central North America—are highly inflammable; and, now that there is a railroad stretching from ocean to ocean, the sparks and glowing cinders shot forth from the smoke-stacks of the hurrying engines cannot fail to swell the list of prairie fires. But long before North America was girdled by a railroad these fires were of periodical occurrence during the autumn months. Should a strong wind be blowing at the time, the flames devour the tall coarse grass with appalling rapidity; unhappy, then, the herds of buffalo that may be browsing in that rank grass; there is no hope for them and the other animals of the prairie, unless they can reach water or a belt of naked earth before the running fire has been there arrested. Of course the burning prairies produce a haziness in the atmosphere for many miles around; but it is very improbable that they affect it to the extent of producing the delightful Indian Summer weather. However, the popular belief is that they do, and this notwithstanding the fact that often the prairie and bush fires occur long before October. Moreover, during these charming October days, there is no smell of burning in the air; and the rosy haziness pervading it is altogether too pleasant and balmy to be associated with fire and smoke.

Not only have many statements been made regarding the cause of the Indian Summer, but various opinions have been mooted as to the reason of the few weeks being so called. But it seems very probable that this sweet brief spell of autumnal warmth owes its name to the fact of the Indians going forth into the prairies at this time to hunt the buffalo and other wild animals, that they may be supplied with provisions for the winter. Longfellow says, in his "Evangeline," that the "pious Acadian peasants" call this season the Summer of All Saints.

> Shade deepening over shade, the country round
> Imbrown: a crowded umbrage, dusk and dun,
> Of every hue, from wan declining green
> To sooty dark.

Thus the poet of the "Seasons" on an English October. But he who sang so sadly of the "pale descending year," would surely have burst into his most gladsome numbers, had he gazed on the glory of Canadian woods at the close of October. Their splendour for a short time in October and the beginning of November is something so brilliant and imposing, that those who have not been in the Dominion at this season of the year smile incredulously at descriptions given, and regard them as gross exaggerations. Looking at a sketch of American scenery, an Asiatic once exclaimed, "What a strange country must America be, where the people live in wooden houses, and the trees are painted!" And truly the trees are painted, but so that no human hands can portray them on canvas. The wealth of colour is simply sublime; not merely "dusk and dun" or hues varying between "wan declining green and sooty dark;" but all shades of red from crimson to pink, all shades of yellow, russet, purple, brown, and green—not merely sickly faded greens, but bright and fresh, for the night-frosts come on so suddenly that the leaves change colour, not gradually as in England, but often in a single night, so that much of the foliage is still a bright green while the rest is red and yellow. During the greater part of the Indian Summer the foliage remains almost as bright and green as in July and August; therefore the sudden coming of the frost not only produces brighter colours on the leaves than at home, but presents the woods in gold and crimson before the leaves have begun to fall, whereas in dear old England the colours, such as they are, come when the trees are half naked.

Most of the birds, as if jealous of the richly-coloured woods, have by this time left for warmer lands. These summer visitors have the gayest plumage; but they cannot sing. Ah! what would not the colonists give to have some of the sweet songsters they heard long ago on the other side of the Atlantic; how willingly would they part with the beautiful orioles, scarlet-tanningers, and blue-birds, if they could but hear once more the joyous carols of thrush, blackbird, and nightingale, whose melodious warblings belong to a dream that is past—like the soft perfume of the primrose and woodbine, for the gorgeous flowers of the Canadian forests have scarcely any scent. And so, since the birds that have flown to the south are voiceless, they are little missed in those painted woods of October. Always silent—except for the tapping of the woodpeckers, the scream of an eagle, or the ring of an axe—the woods seem more than ever silent now; and the subdued light cast forth by the blood-red sun leaves them all that could be desired. For towards the close of the Indian Summer the sun remains all day long the most sanguine of reds, perhaps because he is angry at the appearance of the night frosts, but more probably that he may produce the best effect, since the full blaze of the sunbeams on the foliage would be altogether too dazzling.

We have been led to speak of the sylvan metamorphoses, because the Indian Summer seems to us inseparably connected with the haunts of the Dryads, and because woodlands are inseparably connected with Canadian scenery. Besides, the great frost is so very close at hand, we linger lovingly over this supreme effort of nature to smile though on the eve of descending into her long wintry grave.

* If Black play 1. Q to Kt 4th, or 1. Q to B 5th (ch), White captures the Queen with Knight, and mates next move; and, if 1. Q to Q R 6th, or Q R 8th, then 2. Q to B 5th (ch) and 3. Kt to B 7th. Mate.

The members of the City Chess Club held high festival on Monday last, in celebration of the ninetieth birthday of one of their number, Mr. Murton. There was a large attendance of the leading metropolitan amateurs, and letters from several involuntary absentees congratulating the guest of the evening were read by the chairman, Mr. H. F. Gastineau. Mr. Murton's address in response to the toast of his health proved that advancing years have affected his faculties only to strengthen them; and he concluded with a recitation, delivered with a vigour that delighted his younger confrères.

Mr. Blackburne visited Glasgow last week, and on Wednesday, the 22nd ult., he gave an exhibition of simultaneous play at the Working Men's Club, Trongate. The proceedings opened with an address from Sheriff Spens, who eulogised the remarkable chess genius of Mr. Blackburne, after which that gentleman opposed twenty-one selected players simultaneously. In the result, Mr. Blackburne won nineteen games, lost one to Mr. Court, of the Working Men's Club, and drew one with Mr. Gourlay. On Friday he played ten games sans voir against some of the most skilful Glasgow players, winning eight games, losing one game, and drawing one.

Mr. Blackburne proceeded to Edinburgh on Monday last, and on that afternoon played eight games sans voir, his opponents on the occasion being Drs. Cappie and Smith, Messrs. Boase, Fraser, Meikle, and Gloag. After a contest extending over five hours, the champion won three games, lost one to Mr. Boase, and drew against Messrs. Fraser and Gloag.

The Dublin Gazette contains the offer of a reward by the Government of £500 and a free pardon to any one concerned in the attempt on the life of Mr. Sidney Smith, Lord Sligo's agent at Mulrany, or £200 for such private information as may lead to the conviction of any of the guilty persons.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Mr. Thomas Longman, of 39, Paternoster-row, and of Farnborough Hill, has just been proved, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000.

The will (dated April 16, 1874) of Armand Cyriaque François Fouche, Duc d'Otrante, late of Stockholm, Sweden, who died on Nov. 26 last, was proved in London on the 16th ult. by Adolphe Hyacinthe Joseph Comte de Madre, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. Subject to legacies and annuities to executor and servants, the testator gives the usufruct of all his property to his brother, Paul Athanase Fouche d'Otrante, for life, and then appoints his nephew, Gustave Armand Fouche d'Otrante, his universal heir.

The will (dated July 31, 1874) with two codicils (dated Aug. 7, 1874, and March 3, 1876) of Mr. George Smith, formerly of Pimlico, builder and contractor, but late of Paddockhurst, Sussex, who died on Aug. 27 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by John Clutton and Henry Skrine Law Hussey, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £200,000. The testator devises the Paddockhurst estate, with part of the Balcombe estate, to the use of his wife, Mrs. Charlotte Predice Smith, for life, with remainder to his eldest surviving son, David Macdonald Smith. After making bequests to his executors, nephew and niece, medical attendant, brother and sister, he leaves the residue of his property, real and personal, upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his five surviving children, with a share, upon trust, for the husband and children of his deceased daughter.

The will (dated March 12, 1879) with two codicils (dated March 12 and June 4 in the same year) of Mr. George Perkins, late of Park-street, Southwark, and of San Remo, Torquay, Devon, who died on June 30 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by Augustus Frederick Perkins, the nephew, Reinhard Castendieck Sewell, and Thomas Fish Marson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Perkins, £500, his property at Watton, Norfolk, a house in Ashley-place, Buckingham-gate, and his house San Remo, with the furniture, plate, pictures, horses and carriages; to his grandson, Algernon Edward Perkins, the second son of his late son George Perkins, all his parts or shares in the capital, stock-in-trade, and goodwill (except his note account) of the firm of Barclay, Perkins, and Co., subject to the payment thereout of £1000 per annum to his (testator's) wife for life, in addition to the provision made for her by settlement; upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Irene Scholl, £50,000; to the eldest son of his said late son his property at Chipstead, Kent; an annual sum not exceeding £400 for the widow of his late son; and other bequests. The residue of his property is to go to his grandson, the said Algernon Edward Perkins.

The will (dated March 23, 1877) of Mr. Daniel Cooper, late of Elmington House, The Boltons, South Kensington, who died on Sept. 24 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by Mrs. Susannah Maria Cooper, the widow, and William Dossa Whitehead, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator leaves to his wife his plate, jewellery, household furniture, and effects, £500, and an annuity of £1400 for life, to be reduced in the event of her marrying again; and legacies to his sister, executors, and servants who have been five years in his service. The residue of his estate is to be divided between all his children in equal shares.

The will (dated July 3, 1876) with a codicil (dated Dec. 4, 1878) of Mrs. Henrietta Cookesley, late of No. 88, Inverness-terrace, Hyde Park, who died on Sept. 26 last, at Eastbourne, was proved on the 13th ult. by Mark Noble Buttanshaw, and Miss Mary Anne Catherine Caldecott, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testatrix bequeaths £2000 upon trust to pay the dividends to the Rev. William Bullen Morris, a Priest at the Brompton Oratory, for life: at his death the capital sum is to be handed over to the Superior Priest for the time being of the congregation of the said Oratory; £1000 to the Father Superior of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Mary of the Angels at Bayswater, to be applied at his discretion for the benefit of the said church; and there are considerable other bequests. Should there be any residue after payment of these, she appoints as her residuary legatees Miss M. A. C. Caldecott and Miss Fanny Pamphilon.

The will (dated July 30, 1877) of Colonel Henry Charles Fletcher, late of Kenward Yalding, Kent, and of Spencer House, Putney, who died on Aug. 31 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by Lady Harriet Fletcher, the widow, the Hon. Robert Marsham, and Charles Edward Fletcher, the brother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator gives all his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his children.

The will (dated Sept. 20, 1875) of Mr. John Grey, late of East Stonehouse, Devon, formerly Commander of one of H.M. packets, who died on Sept. 16 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Henry David Grey, the son, the sole executor, to whom he leaves all his real and personal estate. The personalty is sworn under £25,000.

A bequest of £42,000 has been left to the town of Brighton for charitable and public purposes by the late Mr. W. E. Davis, once known as the "Leviathan bookmaker," who resided there for twenty years until his death. The widow intends to dispute the codicil by which the bequests were made.

The Board of Visitors appointed to inquire into the interior economy and management of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, have concluded their inspection and examination, with, according to the Times, perfect satisfaction.

Lord Chelmsford was on Thursday week entertained by the members of the Bath and County Club at a private banquet at Bath, and, in the course of his speech, defended Sir Bartle Frere's action in South Africa, and declared that the war in Zululand was not only justifiable but necessary. — The members of the Bar of England have invited Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., to a complimentary dinner, which will take place to-day (Saturday) in the Middle Temple Hall. The Attorney-General (Sir John Holker) will preside, and will be supported by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Hatherley, and several of her Majesty's Judges.

The number of shipwrecks, casualties, and collisions on and near the coasts of the United Kingdom during the twelve months from July 1, 1877, to June, 30, 1878, was 3641, which number is less than that of the previous year by 523. Of the casualties 422 cases involved total loss, and there was loss of life from 126, or about one in twenty-nine of the vessels thus lost or damaged. The rest of the catalogue is made up of 936 serious casualties and 2283 minor disasters. During the last twenty-four years 46,320 vessels have been wrecked on the British coasts, involving a loss of 17,829 lives. The loss of life would, undoubtedly, have been greater by thousands in the absence of the noble services of the life-boats of the National Life-Boat Institution. Thus the "Wreck Register" reveals the fact that by their means 4070 lives were saved from the wrecks which took place the past year in our seas and on our coasts.

ON an average about every seven days OPPOSITION VELVETEENS to the LOUIS are started and endeavoured to be introduced to public notice, under one name or another. Not only is the style of making up, and the stamping of the name on the back of every yard resorted to but they are actually asserted to be equal or superior.

The Proprietor of the LOUIS Velveteen, whilst admitting that "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery," cannot but caution the public that the genuine article is stamped Every Yard at the Back the "Louis Velveteen," in plain letters.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade Mark "Anti-fat," registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article.

It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.
There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair, never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. Second—Its easy application without any previous preparation of the hair; without that sticky and disagreeable sulphur odour found and complained of in other preparations. It never stains the skin or linen. It retains the hair in any desired position, and is cooling and cleansing to the scalp.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.

A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Depôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcule," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London. Retailed everywhere.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for "The Mexican Hair Renewer," price 3s. 6d. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1879.

Many of our readers have recently returned from one or other of the various seaside resorts which dot the coasts of the United Kingdom. The Season has not been generally propitious. But, no doubt, they gained from their annual excursion sufficient pleasure and recreation to recruit them, body and soul, for the sterner business of life. They have looked upon the Sea in its angrier as well as its calmer moods, and they have watched the shipping passing and repassing within sight. They have noticed, perhaps, how in almost all weathers Commerce steadily spreads its wings, and, peradventure, especially on delicious days, they may have fancied, and almost wished to share, the charms of a sailor's life. Well, for some people (happily for the rest) it has charms peculiar to itself. But it has dangers also—hardships, privations, disasters, which casual visitors do not see, or catch glimpse of but very rarely. After they have reached home, refreshed by their autumnal outing, it may be a useful discipline to them to look over the next "Wreck Chart" of the British Isles or study the Board of Trade "Register" from which it is compiled. They will then gain some notion of the darker side of the picture. We have before us the "Wreck Register," lately published, from July 1, 1877, to June 30, 1878—not the present year, be it observed, which we are afraid may tell a gloomier tale; and, in accordance with our practice for several years past, we shall aim to give the pith of the information therein presented to us by official authority, together with such suggestions as it more obviously calls up to mind.

The number of British vessels alone entering inwards and clearing outwards to and from Ports of the United Kingdom in one year averages 600,000, representing a probable tonnage of 102,000,000. During the course of the voyages pursued by these ships, within the period above specified, the number of shipwrecks, casualties, and collisions on and near our coasts was 3641—less than those of the preceding year by 523. Only 422 of these cases involved total loss, and only 126 of them loss of life. 795 of them, however, were collisions, which necessarily affect two ships at least, and hence the casualties reported comprise 4436 vessels, or 581 less than in the previous year. Taken as it stands, the account is startling enough; but, happily, some considerable deduction has to be made. The casualties of which we have given the total number were not all of them wrecks, as we understand the term. 1753 of them were minor accidents; 698 were mishaps resulting in serious damage, and 363 were wrecks involving total loss; but from this statement we purposely exclude collisions. The East Coasts of England and Scotland witnessed 1007 of these calamities; the South Coast, 604; the West Coasts of England and Scotland and Coast of Ireland, 944; the North Coast of Scotland, 106; and other parts, 185. The greatest destruction of human life occurred off the South Coast of England by the foundering of H.M.S. Eurydice off the Isle of Wight, when 318 persons perished.

We regret to be obliged to notice the number of accidents at sea traceable to heedlessness of shipowners, sea officers, or men, as contrasted with that of casualties produced by "stress of weather." Thus, during the year under notice, 34 English ships foundered or were otherwise totally lost (excluding collisions) in consequence of defects in the ships or their equipment; 69 cases of total loss happened through the errors or ill-conduct of Masters, officers, crews, or pilots; 138 through stress of weather, and 53 from other or unknown causes; while of casualties resulting in serious damage 33 are traced to defects in the construction or equipment of the ships, 138 to errors, 298 to stress of weather, and 127 to other causes. The winds which have been most fatal to shipping on and near the Coasts of the United Kingdom during the year were as follows:—N. to E., inclusive, 286; E. by S. to S., inclusive, 188; S. by W. to W., inclusive, 600; and W. by N. to N. by W., inclusive, 278. Our Rivers and Harbours have been the sites of very numerous casualties—not fewer than 1072; 29 of which were total losses, and 291 involved very serious damage. Of these, collisions were answerable for 759 cases.

It will not be necessary to the purpose of this Article to enter into any further analysis of the "Wreck Register," curious and interesting as is much of the information to be extracted from it. We wish in the first place to express our gratification at the recorded diminution of loss, both as to property and as to life, during 1877-8 as compared with 1876-7. We rejoice, too, that new Rules of the Road at Sea, calculated to lessen the number of disasters by collision, have just been issued by the Board of Trade, the preventive and protective force of which will, we trust, become manifest in future reports. There is but too abundant reason to conclude that very much of the damage done to our shipping round and about our coasts happens from preventible causes, and, therefore, ought to be proportionably lessened by the intellectual and moral improvement of those whose engagements are mainly of the seafaring kind. Meanwhile, however, we are thankful for the establishment and the efficient management of appliances having for their object the saving of life imperilled at sea, both by the National Life-Boat Institution and by the Board of Trade. From the wrecks to which we have adverted 4670 lives were rescued by these and other agencies during the year. No words of ours can over-estimate the worth of these agencies, foremost among which must be placed the National Life-Boat Institution. It is "twice blessed." Its object and its method of prosecuting it are alike excellent. The training to which the crews of its boats are subjected not only improves them in the art of saving their fellows from impending doom, but tends to develop in themselves the manlier virtues. They learn to risk their own lives willingly that they may rescue those of others. They do battle with perils in the deep in the cause of humanity. The process is invigorating, elevating, purifying. It encourages a high tone of unselfishness. And, so far as it succeeds in compassing its primary object, who can measure the blessings it confers and diffuses? Ask our seamen what they think of the life-boat. Ask their families and friends in what view they regard it, when the tempest sweeps ruthlessly over our coasts. It is one of the philanthropic institutions in which all can unite irrespectively of religious creeds, political parties, or economic theories, and in the expanding usefulness of which we can all take pride. May it flourish as long, and in proportion as, the need for it remains!

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice witnessed the celebration of Hallowe'en by the servants and tenants of the Royal Highland estates, who formed a torchlight procession from the West Lodge to Balmoral Castle, in front of which a huge bonfire had been erected, which was lighted by Princess Beatrice. The traditional witch was represented drawn in a car by a dragon, attended by a band of masquers, and accompanied by pipers. After the burning of the witch, those assembled (about 500 in number) were served with refreshments. Her Majesty and the Princess, with the Royal household, remained out of doors during the performance. Sir Stafford Northcote dined with the Queen. On Sunday her Majesty and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service at Crathie church. The holy communion was celebrated by the Rev. Archibald Campbell. Sir Stafford Northcote joined the Royal dinner circle. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove to Allan Quoich and the Linn of Quoich on Monday. Sir John and Lady Clark arrived at the castle and dined with her Majesty. Sir Stafford Northcote left Balmoral for town. The Queen and Princess have continued to make daily excursions, and have visited Glen Gelder Shiel and other localities. Captain Rodon, Lieutenant Hallewell, and Lieutenant Farquharson (1st Royal Scots, forming the guard of honour at Ballater) have dined at the castle, and were presented to her Majesty.

The Queen, through the Viceroy of India, has requested the Commander-in-Chief to convey to General Roberts and the troops engaged under his command the expression of her Majesty's warm satisfaction with their noble conduct in the very successful and important action at Charasiab, which the Viceroy lost no time in reporting to her Majesty.

"The Queen-Empress desires to express to her gallant troops her sorrow for those of their comrades who fell in this action and in the recent brilliant exploit at the Shutargardan, and the Viceroy is commanded to make known to the Commander-in-Chief her Majesty's anxiety for further information as to the condition of the wounded."

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales received at luncheon on Thursday week at Marlborough House the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louis of Lorne, and Prince Leopold. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards took leave of the Grand Duke and Hereditary Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, who left in the evening upon their return to Germany. The Prince accompanied their Grand Ducal Highnesses to Charing-cross station. His Royal Highness, accompanied by Prince Ferdinand of Glücksburg, went out shooting yesterday week in Windsor Great Park, and afterwards lunched with Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge. The Princess visited the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Eastwell Park, and returned to London in the evening; after which the Prince and Princess, with Princess Louise of Lorne, went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre; and on Saturday their Royal Highnesses went to the Criterion Theatre. The Prince and Princess opened a new library, class-room, and museum at St. Bartholomew's Hospital on Monday, and were afterwards present at a luncheon in the great hall. Their Royal Highnesses went to the Court Theatre in the evening. On Tuesday the Prince, accompanied by Prince Ferdinand of Glücksburg, went shooting in Windsor Great Park, and afterwards lunched with Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge. The Princess, accompanied by Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, left Marlborough House for Sandringham. The Prince has left for Lord Hastings's seat, Melton Constable, Norfolk, for a few days' shooting. Mr. Wallis has submitted to the Prince and Princess Professor L. Müller's oil painting, "Pilgrims at Mecca."

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Prince Leopold went to St. James's Theatre on Monday evening. On Tuesday the Duke and Duchess visited Brighton to open a grand fancy bazaar in aid of the Royal School for the Daughters of Officers of the Army at Lansdown, Bath, and Clarence House, Roehampton. Their Royal Highnesses travelled from the Victoria station by a special train, which was attended by Mr. J. P. Knight (general manager of the London and Brighton Railway Company). Their Royal Highnesses arrived at Brighton at noon, and were received by the Mayor and Corporation, a guard of honour of the 1st Sussex Rifle Volunteers being in attendance. An address was presented, and responded to by the Duke, and the Duchess received a bouquet. A procession being formed, the Royal party, escorted by a detachment of the 16th Lancers, drove to the Aquarium and inspected the building, after which they proceeded to the Pavilion, where they were entertained at luncheon by the Mayor. The Duke and Duchess afterwards entered the Dome, where the bazaar was arranged. Bishop Claughton opened the proceedings, and the Duke then, in an eloquent speech, set forth the claims of the charity. The Duchess afterwards received purses in aid of the funds from ladies, after which their Royal Highnesses made a tour of the bazaar, and patronised most of the stalls; after which they visited the picture-gallery and library, and returned to town from Brighton at five o'clock. The town was en fête and gaily decorated with flowers and banners, and in the evening was brilliantly illuminated. There was also a torchlight procession and a firework display; and the day's proceedings closed with a soirée given by the Mayor to about 1000 of the townspeople at the Pavilion.

The Lord Mayor (Sir Charles Whetham) and Lady Mayoress yesterday week entertained the Court of the Fruiterers' Company, the General Purposes Committee, many of the inhabitants of Bridge Ward, of which the Lord Mayor is the Alderman, with their wives, at dinner in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. The guests numbered about 150.

The cost of the shell of the new City fruit and vegetable market at Smithfield is to be £109,800; but the total outlay, which includes the cost of a new street, &c., will not be short of £400,000. The size of the new market will almost exactly correspond with that of the present poultry market, having a total area of 44,000 superficial feet. When the building is finished Farringdon Market is to be closed, pulled down, and sold as building land.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the fourth week in October the total number of paupers was 81,253, of whom 44,046 were in workhouses and 37,207 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 3593, 2622, and 2833 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 918, of whom 635 were men, 229 women, and 54 children.

A tastefully designed drinking-fountain was opened to the public last Saturday in Exchange-avenue. The Aldermen and members of the Court of Common Council for the ward of Broad-street were present. The actual cost of the fountain is £852. At the outset Mr. Alderman Ellis, having offered a large contribution for the purpose, was liberally supported by Mr. Deputy Hartridge and by a grant by the wardmote, and since then the Drapers' and the Merchant Taylors' companies have each contributed fifty guineas.

Yesterday week at the Metropolitan Board meeting the works committee reported that, having considered the memorials presented to the Board last week as to the construction of a bridge across the Thames below London Bridge, they did not consider it advisable to apply to Parliament in the next Session in reference to the subject. Mr. Dresser Rogers, in moving the adoption of the report, said the committee had come to this conclusion with regret; but considering that a general election could not be far off, they thought it better not to act further in that matter until a new House of Commons had been elected. Mr. Munro seconded the motion, believing that this was the prudent course. The resolution was passed.

An effort is being made to extend the movement of the St. John Ambulance Association in a part where it is much needed—the docks at the east end of London. Last January a branch was formed at the East and West India Docks, and many of the employés have obtained certificates. It is hoped this good example will be followed at the London Docks, where a preliminary address has been delivered by Mr. John Furley, chairman of the City and Port of London District, at the St. Peter's Working-Men's Club, the Rev. C. F. Lowder, the Rev. R. Linklater, and other gentlemen being present. Fifty-three persons put their names down for instruction.

Sir Thomas Chambers, M.P., addressed the Board in support of the prayer of the memorial, which was signed by upwards of 18,000 persons. On the motion of Mr. Roche, the memorial was referred to the works committee, and the chairman (Sir J. The prize-list represents a total sum of over £3000. The president of the Smithfield Club this year is Colonel Kingscote, C.B., M.P.—The winter session of the Farmers' Club was opened on Monday at the Inns of Court Hotel, Holborn, when there was a full attendance to hear a paper by Mr. J. S. Edwards on The Future Aims of the Farming Interest.—A resolution was passed at a meeting of the Central Chamber of Agriculture on Tuesday expressing thanks to the Government for acceding to the request of the Chamber by appointing a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the existing depression in agriculture. It was also resolved that a committee be appointed to prepare evidence to be submitted to the Royal Commission.

THE FLOODS IN SPAIN.

Our last publication contained views of several towns in the southern provinces of Spain, where great loss of life and of property has been caused by the overflowing of the rivers, from the sudden increase of mountain torrents by the great storms of rain, after three months of continued drought. Murcia and Orihuela, towards the south-eastern shore of the Peninsula, have suffered more especially from the inundation occasioned by the river Segura and its tributaries having burst their banks. The scene in the first-mentioned place, when the gendarmes or Civil Guards, with boatmen, carters, and others were employed in the work of rescuing many families, whose dwellings had been overwhelmed by the flood, is shown in our Illustration. There was another visitation of the same kind on the 29th ult., which prevailed in the valley of the Ebro, and in the north-east parts of Spain.

The death of this accomplished physiologist and comparative anatomist, at the early age of thirty-three, is a considerable loss to the service of scientific investigation and exposition. He was born in London, May 15, 1846, eldest son of the eminent physician, Dr. A. B. Garrod, F.R.S. He was educated at King's College, London, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, but obtained a qualification for medical studies in 1868, before going to Cambridge. At that University, in 1871, he was senior in the Natural Sciences Tripos. He settled in London next year, and was appointed Prosector of the Zoological Society. After having won a Fellowship at St. John's College, Cambridge, he obtained, in 1874, the Professorship of Comparative Anatomy at King's College, London. From 1875 to 1877 he was Examiner in the Cambridge Natural Sciences Tripos. In 1876 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was also appointed Fullerian Professor of Physiology at the Royal Institution. His proficiency in mathematics, but especially in mechanical science, enabled him to make valuable investigations into the physical causes affecting the circulation of the blood, and to improve the construction and application of the sphygmograph. The mechanics of animal locomotion were also treated of by Mr. Garrod in an interesting course of lectures. His dissection of many of the animals that died in the Zoological Society's collection furnished materials for reports and dissertations of great value upon the anatomical structure of the higher vertebrates, more particularly of birds, with regard to the muscles, the nervous system, and the viscera, thereby confirming or modifying the deductions from their osteological structure and external features. These inquiries would have been prolonged to yet more important scientific results, tending to an improved zoological classification, but unfortunately Mr. Garrod's labours were interrupted last year by pulmonary disease, which has at length put an end to his life. He died on the 17th ult. at his father's house in London.

THE NEW LIGHTHOUSE AT GALLEY HEAD.

A Parliamentary Paper has recently been issued by the Board of Trade respecting this new lighthouse. It has been erected, from the designs of John S. Sloane, Esq., C.E., Engineer to the Commissioners of Irish Lights, near Cape Clear, on the south coast of Cork. That is a most important position for a lighthouse, which will be of great service to mariners making the land from America. From this paper it appears that Dr. Tyndall, of the Royal Institution, who is scientific adviser to the Trinity House, has recently inspected the lighthouse. He has pronounced it in one of its forms as "surpassing any other in the world." Dr. Tyndall also gives the opinions of the Inman, White Star, and Cunard lines of steamers, all of which speak highly of the light. He says:—"The light has been named by Mr. Wigham the 'group flashing' light, the flashes being produced by a method perfectly novel in lighthouse illumination. In ordinary weather," he states, "a single burner of sixty-eight jets is employed; four tiers of such burners are erected at the foci of powerful lenses; and as the weather thickens these burners are ignited in succession, the power of the light being thus doubled, trebled, and quadrupled. The power of this enormous quadruple light is such that its effect upon the sky was observed after the light has dipped below the horizon."

The Extra Supplement.

AN ERUPTION OF ETNA.

That tremendous convulsion of nature, the outbreak of subterranean volcanic forces, which has been observed to take place at some four hundred different localities on the surface of the globe, has not yet lost its power to astonish and alarm mankind. Europe and the neighbouring islands have their Vesuvius, Etna, and Hecla, burning mountains of old renown; but the Hawaian or Sandwich Islands archipelago boasts one of far more exceeding force and magnitude; while those of Central America, which have become extinct within historical memory, and those of the Malay Islands, still active and destructive, exhibit this phenomenon in an amazing manner. There is however, a certain degree of romance belonging to the volcanic furies of Southern Italy and Sicily; and this not only from the memorable fate of two Roman cities which were suddenly overwhelmed, the one by lava streams, the other by showers of ashes and cinders, thrown out of the gullet of Vesuvius in his most tragical fit of rage. The mythological fancy of early Grecian colonists on the coasts beneath the mighty shadow of Mount Etna conceived that it was by the frantic struggles of imprisoned Titans, in the deep caverns under its base, where they lay bound and prostrate, that all this tumult and torture of the earth was produced. Modern professors of science are not so minded.

MILITARY BALLOONING.

During the Revolutionary War, about ten years after the first balloon ascent, the French Academy of Sciences recommended balloons as a means of military reconnaissance. An aeronautic school was then established at Meudon, where M. Guyton de Morveau, the celebrated French chemist, and Colonel Coutelle superintended its operations. The original plan of decomposing water with vitriol and iron borings in order to produce hydrogen gas was here superseded by another method, as sulphur could ill be spared for the production of sulphuric acid, it being most in need for gunpowder. The new apparatus consisted of several iron cylinders fixed in masonry in a simple kind of furnace; these were charged with iron-turnings and brought to a red heat, so that the water in them was instantly converted into steam, the expanded particles being decomposed by the oxygen uniting with the red-hot iron, forming an oxide of iron, while the hydrogen passed through a washer of lime into the balloon. Balloons inflated with gas produced in this way were used in the different divisions of the French army. In June, 1794, Coutelle ascended at the battle of Fleurus. Balloons for military service were further employed until nearly the end of the last century. They have been used during the present century at Solferino and in America and elsewhere.

In England Mr. Henry Coxwell early in his aeronautic career drew public attention and that of the Government to the importance of war-balloons. In Lieutenant Turnor's able work on Ballooning, the author very justly observes that "it is due to Mr. Coxwell to state that he has steadfastly advocated the employment of balloons for military as well as scientific purposes. His letters and lectures on this subject, and his ascents in 1854, when he invented and used his telegraphic war signals, sufficiently attest his zeal in this branch of aerostation."

Our engravings represent Mr. Coxwell's method of adapting semaphore arms of various shapes and symbols to convey, according to a preconcerted arrangement, any required information to those below. It must be obvious that no more difficulty would be found in this plan if adopted with a captive war balloon, than was formerly experienced by the naval and military authorities, when such a system was in vogue previous to electric telegraphy. A cloudy day makes the heliographic communication impossible, and Mr. Coxwell argues that balloon-signalling should be independent of the sun's rays, and that the signals should be so clear and unmistakable that no doubt could exist as to their import.

In our Engraving the balloon is being let up by windlass machinery such as might be improvised near a fortress or in the field, and the military aeronaut is signalling intelligence.

This plan could be utilised with small balloons that would not raise a man, but merely the signals. The arms could be worked by lines and a mechanical contrivance, so that the signals could be seen at a great distance.

Mr. Coxwell states that they would be applicable to hot-air balloons as well as to gas, and he suggests a due provision of each kind for signal purposes, as well as for means to effect an escape in case of forcible detention in foreign cities.

Another Engraving represents Mr. Coxwell's work-room at Seaford, Sussex, where balloons were made. This Sketch was taken by our Artist during the commencement of hostilities in South Africa, when Mr. Coxwell was expecting that private enterprise and long personal experience would be called upon to provide balloons for the seat of war. Since then, however, military aeronautics have become a recognised branch of army equipment, and various experiments of a tentative character have been made from the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich.

In our View of Mr. Coxwell's manufactory, a new balloon lying in the centre of the floor is just undergoing the sewing of the last seam by the sempstresses. A workman is in the act of turning the wheel of a wind-machine, the effect of which is to separate the gores and to throw the balloon into an elongated form preparatory for examination. The appendages to his aeronautic machines are in close proximity, in the shape of netting, grapnels, cars, and other appurtenances. Laid up in a packed condition are six of the celebrated aeronaut's balloons, which include the Research and another in which ascents were made on behalf of the British Association with Mr. Glaisher, when an elevation of seven miles was obtained. Green's famous old balloon, The Nassau, is also here in dock, and several others, with which Mr. Coxwell frequently ascends.

The Military Balloon Committee, whose operations were much retarded by unpropitious weather during the late summer, have been making satisfactory progress during the last few weeks. By means of a newly-contrived double furnace they have succeeded in producing hydrogen gas much more rapidly than heretofore, and of very superior buoyancy, some which was manufactured last week having a lifting power of 71 lb. to the 1000 feet, which is about 40 lb. better than coal-gas. Captain Elsdale, Royal Engineers, one of the officers upon the committee, on Saturday ascended alone in the Saracen. He journeyed towards the seacoast, and, not being prepared for a trip to the Continent, he descended at Rye; but finding the spot unsuitable for alighting, he threw out ropes, by which the people below towed the balloon to a space near the railway-station, having to cross some telegraph-wires and a foot-bridge en route. The balloon was safely landed and packed off by rail to Woolwich. The military aeronauts are about to make a balloon with a lining of goldbeater's skin, and believe that it will be perfectly gas-tight.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

La France states that the Government has decided to summon the Chambers to meet on the 24th or 25th inst.

M. Gambetta on Monday took formal possession of the Palais Bourbon, in which the sittings of the Chamber are henceforth to be held, and tested the acoustic conditions of the building. He was accompanied by a large number of Deputies.

The first of a series of monthly united meetings of English-speaking congregations in Paris to promote the progress of Evangelisation was held on Monday afternoon at the Mission Hall, Avenue des Ternes. The Rev. R. M'Call gave an account of the operations commenced by him eight years ago, and spoke warmly of the aid rendered him by the English and American ministers, but especially by the French pastors, fifty of whom had during this year paid 1200 visits to his twenty-three Paris stations. He stated that the Evangelistic mission stations in this city numbered thirty, and in all France between sixty and seventy, nearly half of them having been opened in 1879. An account was also given of the Belleville mission, conducted by Miss de Broen. Nearly all the English and American ministers in Paris were present; and Dr. Forbes, who presided, eulogised Mr. M'Call's mission as the most useful Evangelistic work ever carried on here.

A further deficit of 8,744,514 marks on the current financial year will also have to be provided for. The Minister also introduced the bills for authorising the purchase of the Berlin-Stettin, Berlin-Magdeburg-Halberstadt, Cologne-Minden, and Hanover-Altenbeken Railway lines. These lines represent a joint-stock capital of 359,370,000 marks, and they have contracted a debt of 737,114,700 marks in preference shares. For the whole of this sum, amounting with some incidental items to 1,116,633,570 marks, Consols are to be issued in exchange for the shares, and the preference shares are to be given up by the holders. In addition to the purchase of railways the Government propose to construct some minor branches, chiefly forming strategical links between existing lines. TURKEY.

Admiral Hornby has been instructed to take his squadron into Turkish waters by the 8th inst. The news that the British fleet has been ordered to Turkish waters is said to have produced a feeling of alarm at Constantinople, and the Sultan has remonstrated against the appearance of so large a naval force as unfriendly and menacing. A Reuter's telegram says that, in reply to a question from the Turkish Ministry, Sir Henry Layard has semi-officially stated that the British squadron would remain for the present at Vourlah, but that eventually it might proceed to some other Turkish port, as England would not tolerate the oppression of the Christian population in Asiatic Turkey, and intended to insist upon the execution of reforms in those provinces. The Porte, it is announced in a telegram from Constantinople, has decided upon promptly carrying out all the reforms which it considers necessary, as well as those to which it is bound by treaty stipulations. Sir H. Layard has received from Sawas Pasha positive assurances that Russian influence is not predominating at the Porte.

The Governor-General of the Lebanon has sent a telegram to the Porte contradicting the statement that disturbances had broken out between the Druses and the Maronites. GREECE.

The Chamber of Deputies was opened last Saturday by the King, who said in his speech that the negotiations with Turkey were shortly expected to have a favourable issue. At the sitting on Monday the House divided itself by ballot into committees to verify the elections.

AMERICA.

In the State elections held on Tuesday the Republicans carried Massachusetts by a majority of 15,000 votes, and Pennsylvania by a majority of 45,000, showing in the latter state a gain of 20,000 votes. In Wisconsin the Republican candidates have been elected by a majority of 20,000, or a gain of 10,000 votes. The Republicans have obtained increased majorities in New Jersey and Connecticut, and have been returned with strong majorities in Minnesota and Nebraska. They also made large gains in the county and municipal elections in Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan. The Democrats carried Mississippi and Maryland by heavy majorities, thus securing the election of two United States senators—a gain of one as compared with the last election. In Virginia, the election hinged on the payment of the State Debt, and the result of the contest between the partisans of the readjustment or funding of the debt is doubtful, although present appearances favour the former. Owing to a split in the Democratic party Mr. Cornell, the Republican candidate, has been elected Governor of the State of New York by a plurality of 15,000 votes, but notwithstanding the heavy gains obtained by the Republican party, the Democratic candidates will probably be elected to all the other State offices. The Republican party have secured a large majority in the Legislature of New York State.

The medical men who made a post-mortem examination states that death was caused by cerebral hemorrhage. Mr. Chandler was sixty-six years of age. His remains have been removed to Detroit with great ceremony. A suspension of public business on the day of the late Senator's funeral has been ordered by President Hayes and the Governor of the State of Michigan.

The Quebec Legislative Assembly on Wednesday week adopted the amendment proposed the previous day by the Opposition in favour of the formation of a strong conciliatory Ministry, and, on the motion of Mr. Joly, the Premier, adjourned until the following day. The vote in favour of the amendment was 35 against 25. On Thursday Mr. Joly, the Premier, announced that the Ministry had tendered their resignation in consequence of the refusal of the Lieutenant-Governor to comply with their request for a dissolution of the Legislature. About seven years ago the Ontario Society of Artists exhibited a collection of their pictures in Toronto, which proved so popular, both in respect of the number of visitors and of pictures sold, that the annual exhibition of the society has grown into an institution. The stimulus thus given to the pursuit of art as a profession led to the establishment of an Art-School in that city a few years ago. Now Ottawa has followed the example of Toronto, and established an Art-School, in which the Governor-General and Princess Louise are taking the greatest interest. The Princess has undertaken to select a competent instructor for it during her visit to this country.

Zululand was quiet, but there was much excitement and discontent in the Transvaal. For some time past permits for the purchase of ammunition have been refused to those who are in arrear with their taxes. The Boers in the district of Middleburg have broken through the restriction, and have helped themselves from the stores of a local trader, without violence, and paying for what they took. Colonel Lanyon, with the 1st Dragoons, had been ordered to Middleburg. Moirosi is receiving reinforcements, and, it is said, was resolved upon attacking our camps.

Her hull was riddled, and it was thought doubtful whether she would reach port.—The armies of the hostile Republics are advancing to meet one another, and a battle was believed to be imminent when the despatch left Buenos Ayres on the 10th ult.

The annual summary of British contributions to sixty-seven societies for foreign mission work during the financial year 1878 has just been completed by Canon Scott Robertson, of Sittingbourne. It shows an increase in the sums contributed to the majority of these societies; but seven or eight societies have received so much less than in 1877 that the grand total is £28,000 less than that of the previous year. The separate details for each society are too numerous for quotation, but the summary of the whole is as follows:—Church of England missions, £473,110; joint societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists, £164,900; English Nonconformist societies, £290,844; Scotch and Irish Presbyterian societies, £133,601; Roman Catholic societies, £9489: total British contributions in 1878, £1,071,944. THE AFGHAN DIFFICULTY.

The position of General Sir Frederick Roberts in the occupation of Cabul seems to be one of tolerable military security. A telegram of last Tuesday from the Viceregal Government of India states that no difficulty is expected in his opening communications with the Khyber column, which is now advanced to Jugdulluk, under General Bright. The head-quarters of all the British troops at Cabul have been moved to the Sherpur cantonments, north-east of that city. The combined brigades of General Macpherson and General Gough are preparing to clear the Ghilzai passes. The city is quiet; and buried treasure of the late Ameer, or of his wives, to the amount of £80,000, has been found, by information voluntarily given to the British Commander. The route over the Shutargardan has been closed for the winter.

There is no further sign of the political inclinations of the Afghan chiefs. By order of Lord Lytton, General Sir. F. Roberts has proclaimed to the people of Afghanistan that, under present circumstances, the British Government finds itself compelled to occupy and administer their country. He confirms the district authorities in their offices; and states that they will be summoned to consult as to arrangements for the permanent administration of the country.

FINE ARTS.

We proposed in our last Number—in anticipation of having more available space this week—to review in detail the remarkable collection of etchings by Méryon which have been brought together in Messrs. Dowdeswell's gallery, Chancery-lane. And the collection is so fine, and includes so many "rare states" of the plates, that we should have had ample materials for indicating the leading characteristics of the artist. We understand, however, that the committee of the Burlington Fine-Arts Club, in accordance with a suggestion made by Mr. Wedmore in an article on Méryon, in the Nineteenth Century for May, 1878, are endeavouring to form a still more complete collection of the etcher's works; we shall, therefore, postpone our notice till the exhibition in Savile-row is accessible. Meanwhile, we may recommend those who may not be able readily to obtain an admission to the Burlington Club to pay a visit to Chancery-lane.

At the little "Burlington Gallery," 191, Piccadilly, is being exhibited about sixty drawings and sketches by Mr. Walter Severn. This artist, together with his brother, Mr. Arthur, are already known to many of our readers as members of the committee and exhibitors at the Dudley Gallery, and also as sons of the late Mr. Severn, formerly Consul at Rome, and the friend of Keats. These works by Mr. Walter Severn comprise views in England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Channel Islands, the Mediterranean, Italy, and Egypt. They are invariably distinguished by conscientious adherence to fact, and by fairly adequate technical ability—the artist seldom attempting a pictorial modification or "treatment" of his subject, or aspiring to attain the more subtle qualities of colour, effect, and execution. Nor does he, like his brother, evince sympathy with nature under exceptional conditions, or in her more solemn, grand, and poetical moods. But he brings the same faithful spirit and intelligent care to the representation of the rocky coasts of these sea-girt isles, to the haunts of the sportsman in Scotland, to the topography of Rome, to the busy life of Cairo, and to the reposeful antique air of the scenery of the Nile valley. On this account each drawing is individually interesting, and, as a whole, the collection is well worth a visit.

An exhibition of the pictures, water-colour drawings and etchings, of the late Mr. Edwin Edwards will be opened on Monday next at 168, New Bond-street.

The elaborate picture upon which Mr. Frith has been engaged for a considerable time represents a sitting of the Central Criminal Court, and it may be expected to be finished for the Academy Exhibition next year.

The opening meeting of the Institute of Architects will not take place till the first week in December, owing to somewhat important alterations which are being made in the building where the Institute is located.

The mania for wholesale restoration in Italy seems to have received no check from the remonstrances recently made in this and other countries. It is now the west front of St. Mark's, Venice, that is in jeopardy—the most beautiful, interesting, and one of the most historic façades in Europe; indeed, it is altogether unique. The Italian Minister of Public Works is said to have decided to appoint a Commission, which is to meet next month, to examine the condition of the front of the church and to resolve whether it is necessary to proceed with the project of rebuilding it immediately, or to postpone the operation till next year! Already some extensive repairs had been made at the south-west corner; and, after a careful examination of the entire front last year, we were convinced that nothing more was immediately required. Owing to the irregular subsidence of the soil, the perpendicular and other lines of the architecture have, it is true, everywhere lost some of their original symmetry and relation, as the floor of the interior has acquired an undulation like a "swell" at sea, and this even where no weight of adjacent wall would account (as in the Pantheon at Rome) for the unevenness. But such irregularity may be seen at the cathedral of Pisa, and we believe it is nowhere so great at St. Mark's as to imperil the stability of the building, and consequently necessitate the contemplated rebuilding of the front. There is nearly always some compensating influence in such settlements at the foundations. Certainly no danger arose from the undulations of the elaborately patterned tesselated pavement, yet some parts of the pavement have been renewed in crude, tasteless colours, with an effect that is hideously discordant with the rest of the interior. We need not add that, if the façade be rebuilt, it will undoubtedly lose every particle of its venerableness, and necessarily the best part of its beauty.

An international exhibition is to be held in Madrid in May, 1881. M. Colibert, a French architect, has been requested by the Spanish Government to furnish a design for the building.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

We have all been reading in the newspapers how on Friday night the festival of Hallowe'en was celebrated at the Royal Castle of Balmoral with "weird effect" (as the Times puts it); how two large processions, picturesquely attired, met on the castle lawn; how there was a bonfire which was kindled by the hands of H.R.H. Princess Beatrice; how there was a "witch-hunt"—the wicked sorceress being caught, tried, condemned, and burnt in effigy;—and how the festive proceedings concluded by the drinking of her Majesty's health and the singing of the National Anthem. It must have been a brave spectacle. The rites, ceremonies, and superstitions connected with Hallowe'en are so numerous and so curious that they fill three closely-printed pages in that copious repertory of antiquarian lore, Chambers's Book of Days (vol. ii., pp. 519—522). Therein you may read that All Hallows Eve, or "Nutcrack Night," or "Snap-Apple Night," as the festival is called in different parts of the United Kingdom, is the time above all others when supernatural influences are supposed to prevail; that it is the night set apart for the perambulation of spirits, both of the visible and the invisible world; and that divination and second sight are believed to attain their highest power on the thirty-first of October.

All this, at the same time, fails to satisfy the exhaustively-inquisitive antiquary whose longing it is to trace superstitions to their source. What is the raison d'être of Hallowe'en? Chambers says that it is clearly a relic of Pagan times, for there is nothing in the Church observances of the ensuing day of All Saints to have originated such extraordinary notions as are connected with this celebrated festival, or such remarkable practices as those by which it is distinguished: the special characteristic of this mystic evening being "the faculty conferred on the immaterial principle in humanity to detach itself from its corporeal tenement, and wander abroad through the realms of space."

But has not the learned editor of the Book of Days, I ask with deference, been somewhat hasty in making this assertion? Hallowe'en is the eve of All Saints' Day, a festival which derives its origin from the conversion, in the seventh century, of the Pantheon at Rome to Christian uses, and its dedication by Pope Boniface IV. to the Virgin and all the Martyrs. Now we are entitled to assume that when the Pantheon of Agrippa was consecrated as a Christian church the bones of very many saints found sepulture in its vaults; and what could have been more natural in the Dark Ages, and in the times of mediæval superstition, than to believe that on the eve of All Saints the spirits of the "holy blissful martyrs" were floating about? Sublime spirits are very frequently degraded by popular imagination into the vulgarest of ghosts. Hallowe'en may be of pagan origin; but, on the other hand, it may date only from the time of the consecration of the Pantheon as the Church of Sancta Maria ad Martyres.

Mem.: Please to observe likewise that, although the Feast of All Saints has been retained in the Church of England, scarcely any secular notice is bestowed upon its occurrence in this country. On the Continent, especially among the Russians and the Slavs, the case is widely different. The Toussaint in France, the Ogni Santi in Italy, is the grandest of popular holidays. It is the "Jour des Morts" or "Day of the Dead," when people of all classes flock to the cemeteries to deck the tombs of their deceased relatives with wreaths and floral crosses. This practice, to my thinking, does really tend to give some meaning to the Feast of Hallowe'en. On the eve of All Saints thoughts concerning the departed whose tombs are to be visited on the morrow are almost inevitable, and it is a very easy transition indeed from pondering over the dead to conjuring up their images in our mind's eye, and eventually persuading ourselves that we behold their apparitions.

I read the other day, in an excellent article in the Standard on the conviction of the unspeakable libeller Rosenberg, the following remark. "There have been such papers before, and their proprietors, like Rosenberg, have thriven on their disreputable business. Holt, of the Age, made a large income until a criminal information laid him by the heels." I think it due to the memory of a very well known and very high minded journalist, upon whose death I recently commented in this column, to point out that "Holt, of the Age," was not by any means the late Mr. Thomas Littleton Holt, some time proprietor of the Iron Times and editor of the Morning Chronicle, and was in no wise related to my deceased friend. There was a Mr. Holt who was publisher of the defunct and objectionable Age, but its editor and evil spirit was the late Charles Molloy Westmacott.

Mem.: There is a portrait of C. M. Westmacott in the "Maclise Portrait Gallery," originally engraved for Fraser's Magazine, and lately republished in complete form by Messrs. Chatto and Windus. In Daniel Maclise's etching the truculent editor appears in the act of trampling on a couple of volumes, supposed to be the works of Mr. Edward Lytton Bulwer, afterwards Lord Lytton, and in his hat, which lies on the floor, is visible a horsewhip. In the letterpress (Maginn's) appended to the portrait Charles Molloy Westmacott is described as "the Great Captain of the Age," and as "a plucky little fellow, who has pushed his way actively in the world," and "who fought in his paper the battle of the Tories as open-mouthedly and as freely as he could." As a matter of fact, the Age under Westmacott's management was an extremely disgraceful newspaper, and its editor a most disreputable person. The author of the "notes" following Maginn's complimentary letterpress states that the "Great Captain of the Age" and "plucky little fellow" received on one occasion the sum of £5000 for suppressing the publication of some scandalous transaction, with the details of which he had got hold.

I spoke last week of two wonderful school-books—the Flaxman's Classical Outlines, edited by Mr. Sparkes, of the South Kensington School of Art, and Mrs. Fenwick Miller's Atlas of Anatomy. A bland American gentleman called on me the other day to show me an educational production even more astonishing. He brought with him a very long thin volume, something like what bibliographers call a "pot folio," but of abnormal dimensions. Opening this tome, he proceeded to unfold a longitudinal sheet, which very speedily extended from one end of my drawing-room to the other, say five-and-twenty feet. This, the bland American gentleman proceeded to inform me, was Adams's Panorama of History, just published by Messrs. Walker, of Ludgate-circus. In this enormous chart the efflux of Time is marked by a black wavy line flowing horizontally uniformly from left to right, and embracing 4004 years B.C. and 1878 A.D. The dark river is divided into periods of a hundred years each by perpendicular lines, which the author calls "century posts" or "Tombstones of Time."

Imagine Haydn's "Dictionary of Dates," plus Calmet's "Dictionary of the Bible," plus the "Complete Gazetteer," plus all Maunder's "Treasuries," made graphic, and you gather some idea of the nature of this portentous pictorial roll, which seems to have been suggested by the picture-writing of the ancient Mexicans. Specimens of those very early precursors of the Bayeux tapestry (and, for the matter of that, of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS) are yet preserved in the National Museum in Mexico City.

My dear old friend, John Baldwin Buckstone, passed away quite tranquilly on Friday morning last. His last days, I am thankful to say, were not rendered additionally bitter by actual indigence. Thanks to the generous and charitable bounty of many kind readers of this column, I was enabled to make provision for all the requirements of my poor friend and his family, and to hand over a sum of nearly £220 more to Sir William Fraser, to be invested, with other sums collected by Sir William, for the benefit of Mr. Buckstone's widow and children.

SKETCHES IN AFGHANISTAN.

Our Artist lately in the Khyber Valley and at Jellalabad, with the British army corps that advanced from Peshawur a twelvemonth ago, still furnishes characteristic examples of the Afghan people, their costumes, manners, and habits of life. The pomp of Oriental chieftainship, half military, half patriarchal, is displayed by the sedate leader of a tribe, wrapped up in robes and turban, with an air of profound gravity, slowly riding on his road, preceded by two of his most trusty servants, armed with long matchlock guns and with several daggers or other weapons, his main bodyguard, whose bearing is rather more soldier-like, marching in the rear. The interior of a mill at Gundamuck, which is the subject of Mr. Simpson's other Sketch engraved for this Number, presents one mechanical peculiarity. The mill-wheel is horizontal, and is kept revolving by water-power; this wheel is placed underneath, its shaft being simply fixed in the upper millstone, so dispensing with cog-wheels to communicate the movement. The woman and boy, seen in the Illustration, have just poured the contents of as mall bag of Indian corn into the hopper above, and are waiting to get the flour.

The Bishop of London has resumed his attendance at London House on Mondays from eleven till two o'clock. Clergymen or others desiring an appointment should write to the Rev. W. M. Sinclair, Fulham Palace.

The Mercers' Company have sent a contribution of fifty guineas to the National Committee for the restoration of Tewkesbury Abbey. A sum exceeding £5000 is still required to complete the necessary work.

Canon Ryle, the Rector of Stradbroke, has restored his chancel at a cost of £700, as a memorial to his father, who for some time was M.P. for Macclesfield. Mr. Ryle had taken in hand the restoration of the church as a whole seven years ago, and at different times sums amounting to £5000 have been laid out upon it.

The Bishop of Worcester, assisted by the Bishop of St. Albans, yesterday week consecrated a new parish church at Wribbenhall, near Kidderminster. The church has been erected mainly through the munificent contributions of Mrs. Hemming, of Spring-grove, in memory of the late Mr. Hemming.

Yesterday week the local committee of the Evangelical Alliance gave a free supper to about 1600 of the poor of Edinburgh, admitted by ticket, and chiefly selected by district visitors and city missionaries. They were all comfortably seated on benches in the Drill-hall, and served with bread and meat and tea by an active set of stewards. At intervals a choir sang hymns.

A report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the law and existing practice as to the sale, exchange, and resignation of ecclesiastical benefices has been issued, in which the Commissioners propose the abolition of sales of next presentations and of advowsons by public auction; and they further propose a series of restrictions on the private sale of advowsons.

On Saturday (All Saints' Day) a very large congregation assembled at Croydon parish church to witness the consecration of the Rev. Acton Windeyer Sillitoe, formerly Chaplain to the British Legation at Darmstadt, as Bishop of New Westminster, British Columbia. The solemn rite was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was assisted by the Bishops of London, Rochester, Columbia, and Antigua, and Bishop Tuffnell, who has recently been appointed Vicar of Croydon.

The new house of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, in Northumberland-avenue, was opened on Monday afternoon by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The building has been erected by Messrs. W. Cubitt and Co., from the designs of Mr. J. Gibson, of Westminster. Upon the ground floor is a spacious retail shop; above it is a handsome room for the board meetings, adjoining which are the necessary rooms for the officers carrying on the business of the society. The outlay upon the building, the front of which is of Portland stone, has been £42,000, some £11,000 below the limit fixed by the general meeting of the society which decided that the late premises were inadequate.

The Bishop of London yesterday week delivered his charge to the clergy of his diocese at St. Paul's Cathedral. He said he thought the best way of supplying the deficiencies of the past and providing for the growing wants of the metropolis would be to persevere in the policy of judiciously subdividing overgrown districts, building new churches, and intrusting each to the care of a responsible Incumbent. He referred with satisfaction to the work of lay-helpers; but regretted the adoption in some of the sisterhoods of rules and regulations which were alien to the mind and practice of the Church of England. He also spoke of the necessity of maintaining Church schools, but said that they had been but little effected by the operations of the School Board.—The Bishop of Lichfield (Dr. Maclagan) presided over the Shropshire Archidiaconal Conference held the same day at Shrewsbury.

The concluding sitting of the third annual conference of the diocese of Truro was held yesterday week, under the presidency of the Bishop of Truro. Mr. Edmund Carlyon brought up the report of the Cathedral Committee, from which it appeared that the sum now promised to the cathedral fund amounted to £35,000, of which £13,565 had been received and invested. The architect proposed to build the cathedral in sections. The first section to be undertaken was the choir, which was estimated to cost £35,000. The land necessary to be purchased for the site would cost about £10,000, and the purchase of this property, it was hoped, would be completed by Lady Day next. They would then have about £4000 left in hand, and he thought there would be very little difficulty in obtaining £4000 or £5000 a year. Besides the amount promised, about £12,000 would be required to finish the first section of the cathedral, which would take about five years to build. The report was generally considered to be satisfactory. A discussion followed on free and open churches.

St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, the most important ecclesiastical building in Scotland connected with the Scotch Episcopalian Church, was consecrated on Thursday week by Bishop Cotterill, Bishop of the diocese, assisted by about 250 clergymen, including the Scotch College of Bishops and the Bishops of Durham, Oxford, Peterborough, Bangor, Down, and Madagascar, the Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and one of the Canons of York Cathedral. The Bishop of Peterborough preached in the forenoon and the Bishop of London in the afternoon. The cathedral, which holds about 2500 people, was crowded. In the evening a dinner took place. On the south side of the cathedral sixteen sycamore-trees were planted by the Bishops present, and the row is to be known as the Bishops'-walk. The cathedral, which is a magnificent structure of the Early English style, from designs by the late Sir Gilbert Scott, has cost £100,000, the greater part of the funds consisting of a bequest by the late Miss Walker, of Coates.

Mr. S. Morley, M.P., in laying the memorial-stone of a chapel at Bristol yesterday week, said that, apart from the discussion respecting Church and State, there were those who felt that they could not avail themselves of the opportunities for worship offered by the State Church, and they were determined to have their own churches and manage their own affairs. He wished, however, that, instead of making attacks upon the Church, Nonconformists would prove that theirs was the best means of reaching the people. Change in the Church of England would never be produced by Nonconformity only, and until they won the people to them they would be powerless to effect the change which they all desired to see. Referring to the discussion at the diocesan conference at Peterborough respecting a closer connection between Nonconformity and the Church of England, Mr. Morley said that he did not believe there was much prospect of the Church absorbing Nonconformity generally; but the object of union would be largely promoted if they could get the burials question settled.

NEW BOOKS.

Admiral Rous, whose portrait adorns the frontispiece of the first volume, whilst Mr. George Payne's likeness occupies the corresponding position in the second, is said in the preface to have expressed his approbation of "the plan" adopted in the two volumes entitled History of the British Turf: by James Rice (Sampson Low and Co.); but the difficulty is to discover anything which can be properly called a plan. A complete lack of methodical arrangement is the main characteristic of the book. Indeed, the two volumes, each having an index of its own, and each being devoted in certain portions to a survey of the very same ground, are so far from containing a continuous narrative, such as one expects in a "history," that they might have been published independently, and, indeed, give rise to a suspicion that the second volume was a mere after-thought. Else why should there be two sets of remarks upon the origin of the English race-horse and upon the connection of James I. with horse-racing, one in the first volume and the other in the second? Surely that part of the subject should have been treated fully in the introductory chapter. The volumes, however, contain plenty of such information and anecdotes as are most likely to suit the popular taste, though some topics, whether cock-fighting, or card-playing, or Captain Barclay's walking-match against time, are introduced, which seem to have but a very remote connection with the history of what is generally understood by "the turf." The most interesting parts of the first volume, from the popular point of view, are those which relate to the quarrel between George IV., when he was Prince of Wales, and the Jockey Club, in consequence of the singular change of "form" exhibited by his horse Escape; to the famous riding feat of "Squire" Osbaldeston; to the career of "Jack" Mytton; to the Running Rein scandal; to the match between The Flying Dutchman and Voltigeur; to the performances of "famous jockeys;" and to the affairs of the unfortunate young Marquis of Hastings, who is said to have had his heart broken by the victory of Hermit in the Derby of 1867. Oddly enough, when jockeys are discussed, no mention, if memory may be trusted, is made of the absurdly light weights carried by some of them in former days, or of Kitchener, whose "bodily weight" is constantly inquired after by correspondents of the sporting newspapers, and who had to be "loaded" in order to carry four stone. In the second volume the reader will be much entertained with what is said about Newmarket and Charles II., besides Epsom, Doncaster, York, Ascot, Goodwood, Chester, and other places of less celebrity. Having got thus far the author seems to have been suddenly inspired to interpolate some observations concerning horse-racing in the United States and in Canada and concerning the trotting horse of America. He then makes a tremendous rush back to the very starting-point, or starting-post, of his undertaking and plunges into considerations, or rather reconsiderations, connected with the origin, training, and treatment of the English race-horse, giving some very interesting quotations illustrative of exploded theories and practice. Then we have some remarks touching modern Newmarket, judicious "crosses," strains of blood, and soundness. Anon there are anecdotes and sketches, in which the celebrated John Scott, Baron Martin, Sir Joseph Hawley, Lord Glasgow, Admiral Rous, Mr. George Payne, General Peel, and John Davis, the "leviathan," figure prominently. Nor is the law, so far as it has to do with "horse-racing and wagers," thought unworthy of notice; on the contrary, it is dealt with in a spirit altogether different from that which prompted the contemptuous notice once paraded weekly in a great sporting newspaper—"Legal questions are not answered by us under any circumstances, but are at once consigned to the waste-paper basket." The author has done well to dissipate, to the best of his ability, the still prevalent but erroneous belief that there is any trustworthy evidence upon which Flying Childers, or any other horse, can be stated to have run a mile in a minute; but he has handled the question in a part of his book where one would be least likely to look for it, and his index is no guide to anyone who may desire to refer to what he says upon the point. The index of the first volume has a reference to "Childers' performances," but you would look in vain at the place thus indicated; the desired information is contained in the second volume among the pages devoted to a notice of the late Admiral Rous. Two famous race-horses appear to have met with less than justice at the author's hands. Highflyer, son of Herod and Rachel, is asserted by him, more than once in the course of his work, to have "paid forfeit once" and to have been "beaten once, as a three-year-old;" but this seems to be a repetition of a disparaging error corrected long ago and by an exceptional insertion in the "Stud Book," wherein it is distinctly stated that "Highflyer never paid forfeit, and was never beaten," and the mistake is explained by the fact that in the "Racing Calendar" for 1777 Highflyer is confounded with another colt of the same age, a son of Herod and Marotte. And again, as regards Diomed, winner of the first Derby, run in 1780, our author, who has hauled in somewhat unnecessarily the subject of American horses, might have taken the opportunity of modifying his statements by mentioning that Diomed, however poor his progeny may have been in this country, was sent to Virginia in 1799 and was the sire of the highly distinguished Sir Archy, who "has justly been called the Godolphin Arabian of America." So much at least was due to the memory of our first Derby-winner. On the whole, it may be admitted that the author has compiled a book in which something useful and a great deal that is amusing is to be found, although his work has no claim to be considered a history, in the broad sense and serious acceptation of the term, which implies a continuous narrative, a wide scope, chronological sequence, and methodical arrangement. In the second volume there are a few pages, well worth reading, relating to the establishment of a "national stud" after the fashion of foreign countries.

A lady of rank and advanced age, who permits us to read the diary she wrote, more than half a century ago, of her Tour in Sweden, Norway, and Russia, should have our thanks, if not compliments, for the sake of mere politeness. The Marchioness of Westminster is entitled at least to this return for her volume just published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett. It is very passable reading; and if the general public cannot be expected to care much for personal and local observations so long out of date, there may be some elderly people, whose recollections of foreign travel, and of aristocratic or fashionable society at foreign Courts, will be refreshed by this antiquated journal. Her Ladyship relates agreeably and unaffectedly, partly in her note-book from day to day, partly in her letters to friends at the time, all the little experiences of her visit in 1827 with her husband, then Lord Belgrave, to Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiania, and different places in the Scandinavian peninsula, then to St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Nijni Novgorod, taking Berlin on their way home.

In Mr. H. M. Robinson's descriptive chapters on life in the Hudson's Bay Territory, which he calls The Great Fur Land (published by Sampson Low, Searle, and Co.), much curious information is given. Travelling by dog-sledge in winter, and in summer by canoe on the rivers; the organisation and business of factors, traders, clerks, and postmasters in the Company's service; their habits of living at the "forts" and trading stations or remoter outposts, the characters of different Indian tribes and of the half-breeds with whom they deal; the hunting of the beaver, the fox, the raccoon, the marten, the mink, the wolverine, and the buffalo; these and other matters are pleasantly described. The author has had some personal experience of them, but has also drawn largely from other books upon the same subject. He does not seem to have been himself in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Dash and vigour, meet characteristics of the sportsman, are conspicuous in the little collection of Songs and Verses on Sporting Subjects, by R. E. Egerton-Warburton (Pickering and Co.); and "merry conceits" there are to enliven still further what sporting writers are wont to call the "ditty." Nor are the more gentle touches of the poetic craft neglected; as may be discovered from a perusal of the elegant little morsel entitled "Hush! Hush! Hush!" As for minor difficulties of rhythm, the writer seems occasionally to take them as he would take a moderate "obstacle"—that is to say, "in his stride." He would be sure to write a dirge upon the death of the late gallant Major Whyte-Melville; but has not he a little misrepresented the facts? The unfortunate Major was surely not "o'erthrown as onward fearlessly he sped with keen delight;" the peculiarity, the pity of it, surely was that he, a very Bellerophon, was not "going" at all, but "riding loose" at a walk, when his horse brought him to irremediable disaster.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has presented the Radcliffe Infirmary, Oxford, with £100, the proceeds of the exhibition of Blenheim Palace to the public.

A fancy fair was opened on Wednesday in the Maison Dieu Hall, Dover, in aid of the Dover School of Art, Countess Granville and Lady North being amongst the stall-keepers. The prizes were distributed by Major Dickson, M.P.

The arrivals of fresh meat from America last week show a decrease as compared with the previous week. The arrivals of cattle and sheep from the United States and Canada are also considerably below the figures of last week.

Lord Chelmsford passed through Reading on Monday on his way to the seat of Sir Charles Russell, at Swallowfield. He was met at the railway station by a large and enthusiastic crowd, who dragged him in Sir Charles Russell's carriage to the Market-place, where his Lordship made a short speech thanking the people for his reception.

A supplement to the Gazette, issued on Wednesday night, contains a notice that the Privy Council has revoked its order, under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act of 1878, in reference to the importation of sheep from the United States, and now declares that the same may be landed without being subject either to the order to slaughter or to quarantine.

The Dublin City Council on Thursday week adopted resolutions calling the attention of the Government to the condition of Ireland, and affirming the necessity of reform in the land laws.—In reply to a letter calling attention to the existence of distress in Ireland, the Chancellor of the Exchequer has written expressing his deep sympathy with the poor people, and pointing out the impossibility of judging whether any steps ought to be taken by the Government, as Government interposition in such cases is open to great abuse.

Lord Carnarvon on Monday laid the foundation-stone of a new townhall, free library, reading-rooms, museum, and schools for science and art at Reading. The buildings are estimated to cost £46,000, and of this sum £10,000 is contributed by the Corporation. The late Sir Francis Goldsmid contributed £5000, and a similar amount was given by Messrs. Huntley and Palmer. Lord Carnarvon afterwards presided at a luncheon, at which Mr. Walter, M.P., Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., and Mr. G. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., were present.

At the prize distribution of the Plymouth Volunteers on Wednesday evening the colours of the Prince of Wales's Own Volunteers, a regiment formed at Plymouth in the year 1794, were formally intrusted by the Mayor to the keeping of the corps. They are in fair preservation, and form an interesting relic of the times of the wars with the French. Sir Massey Lopes, in presenting the prizes, said that the volunteers had in a few years made themselves, with little encouragement, a thoroughly efficient army of reserve, strikingly contrasting with the costly standing armies of Continental nations.

Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins, who met with a serious accident several months ago, resumed his judicial duties at Lincoln's Inn on Tuesday.—Mr. John Compton Lawrance, Q.C., of the Midland Circuit, has been elected a Bencher of the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, in place of Mr. Swanton, Q.C., deceased.—The Attorney-General has appointed Mr. Hugh Cowie, of the South-Eastern Circuit, to the post of leading counsel in Post Office prosecutions at the Central Criminal Court, in place of Mr. Metcalfe, Q.C. (Recorder of Norwich), who has been promoted to the Judgeship of the Bristol County Court. Mr. Cowie is also Recorder of Maldon and Saffron Walden.

According to the quarterly return of the Registrar General, in the United Kingdom the births of 282,520 children, and the deaths of 139,271 persons of both sexes, were registered in the three months ending Sept. 30. The recorded natural increase of population was thus 143,249. The registered number of persons married in the quarter ending June 30 was 114,650. The resident population of the United Kingdom in the middle of 1879 is estimated at 34,156,113; that of England and Wales at 25,165,336, of Scotland at 3,627,453, and of Ireland at 5,363,324. The birth-rate in the third quarter of this year was 32·8 per 1000, and the death-rate 16·2. The marriage-rate in the second quarter of 1879 was 13·5 per 1000.

The president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, in reviewing the labours of the chamber for the past quarter, at the quarterly meeting on Monday, referred to the address which was presented to Lord Salisbury on his recent visit to Manchester, and to his Lordship's reply, and condemned what he considered the longing for the reciprocity policy which it contained. Other members expressed similar views. Ultimately the following resolution was adopted:—"That this meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce takes the earliest opportunity after the visit of Lord Salisbury to this chamber to declare its unabated confidence in the principles of peace, economy, and free trade, as a great means of maintaining and building up the power and position of England."

Mr. C. L. Wragge, F.R.G.S., of Cheadle, has presented to the town of Stafford an excellent collection of specimens obtained by him in his travels in various parts of the world, and which will, no doubt, prove of great value to all those interested in geology and natural history. The opening ceremony took place yesterday week in the Borough Hall, where the museum will be located until a suitable building has been erected. Mr. T. Salt, M.P., addressed the assembly, and in the course of his remarks alluded to the value of such a collection, as it would enable those who had neither time nor knowledge to study the marvellous works of nature. The museum was declared open by the Mayor (Mr. F. Marson), and was during the day visited by a large number of persons.

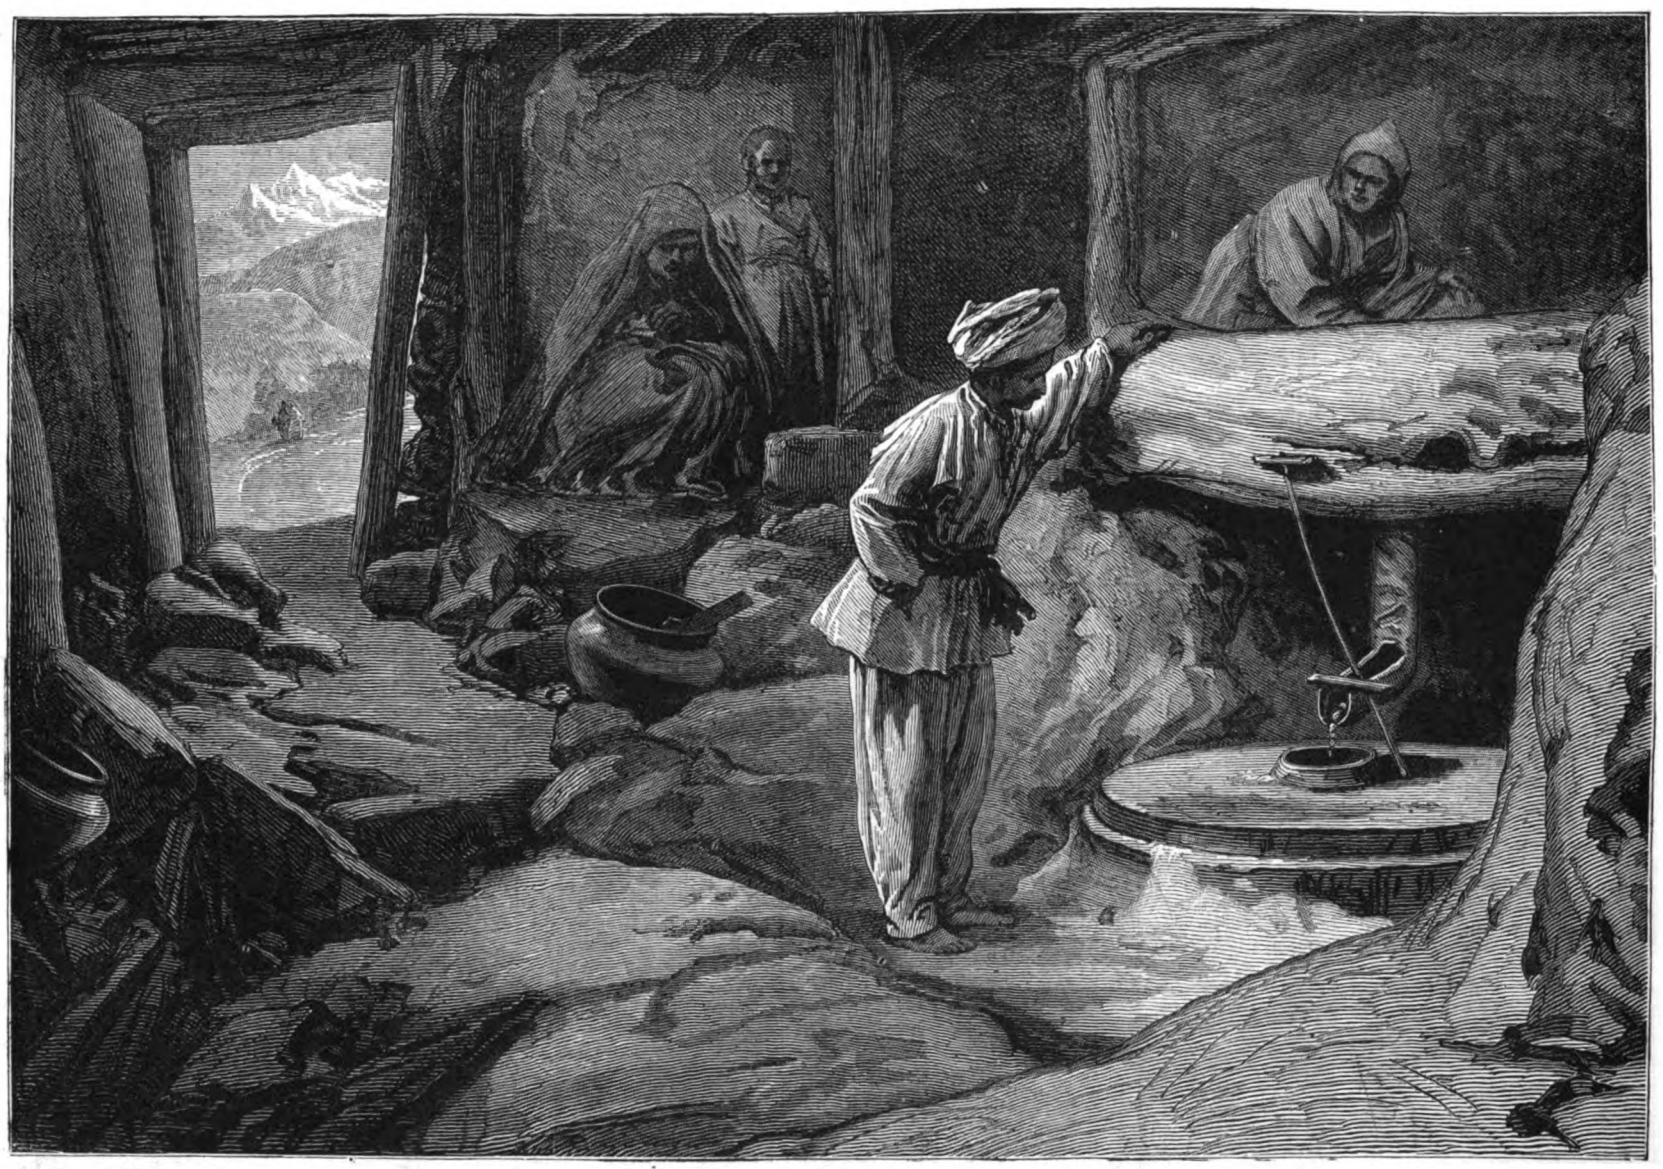
LADY BURDETT-COUTTS'S YACHT.

This beneficent lady, who has spent her wealth so freely and willingly for the improvement of human welfare, has all our best wishes in seeking a little healthy recreation, as she lately did, by her yacht voyage up the Mediterranean. She went, indeed, up the Adriatic, with a party of distinguished holiday passengers, one of whom, Mr. Henry Irving, of the Lyceum, had an opportunity thus given him of surveying the identical scenes of "The Merchant of Venice." Having returned from the sunny South and re-entered the Thames, her Ladyship's commodious steamer lay a week off Gravesend, where she and her companions had leisure to study the vast maritime, coasting, and river traffic of the port of London, as the condition of those employed in it has long engaged her kindly attention. We give an Illustration of the Walrus, which is not a vessel constructed or purchased to order for such pleasure excursions, but one of those belonging to a Liverpool commercial firm, and hitherto engaged in ordinary trade, lately chartered by Lady Burdett-Coutts for the season. Being a vessel of 870 tons, she has much steadiness in a sea-way, and plenty of space for the comfortable accommodation of a large party of passengers and their servants.

Throughout England and Wales on Saturday last the annual municipal elections were held, the contests in most of the boroughs being fought out on political issues. One of the most exciting contests was at Liverpool, where eight Liberals were added to the strength of that party in the town council, and the Conservative majority reduced from twenty to four.

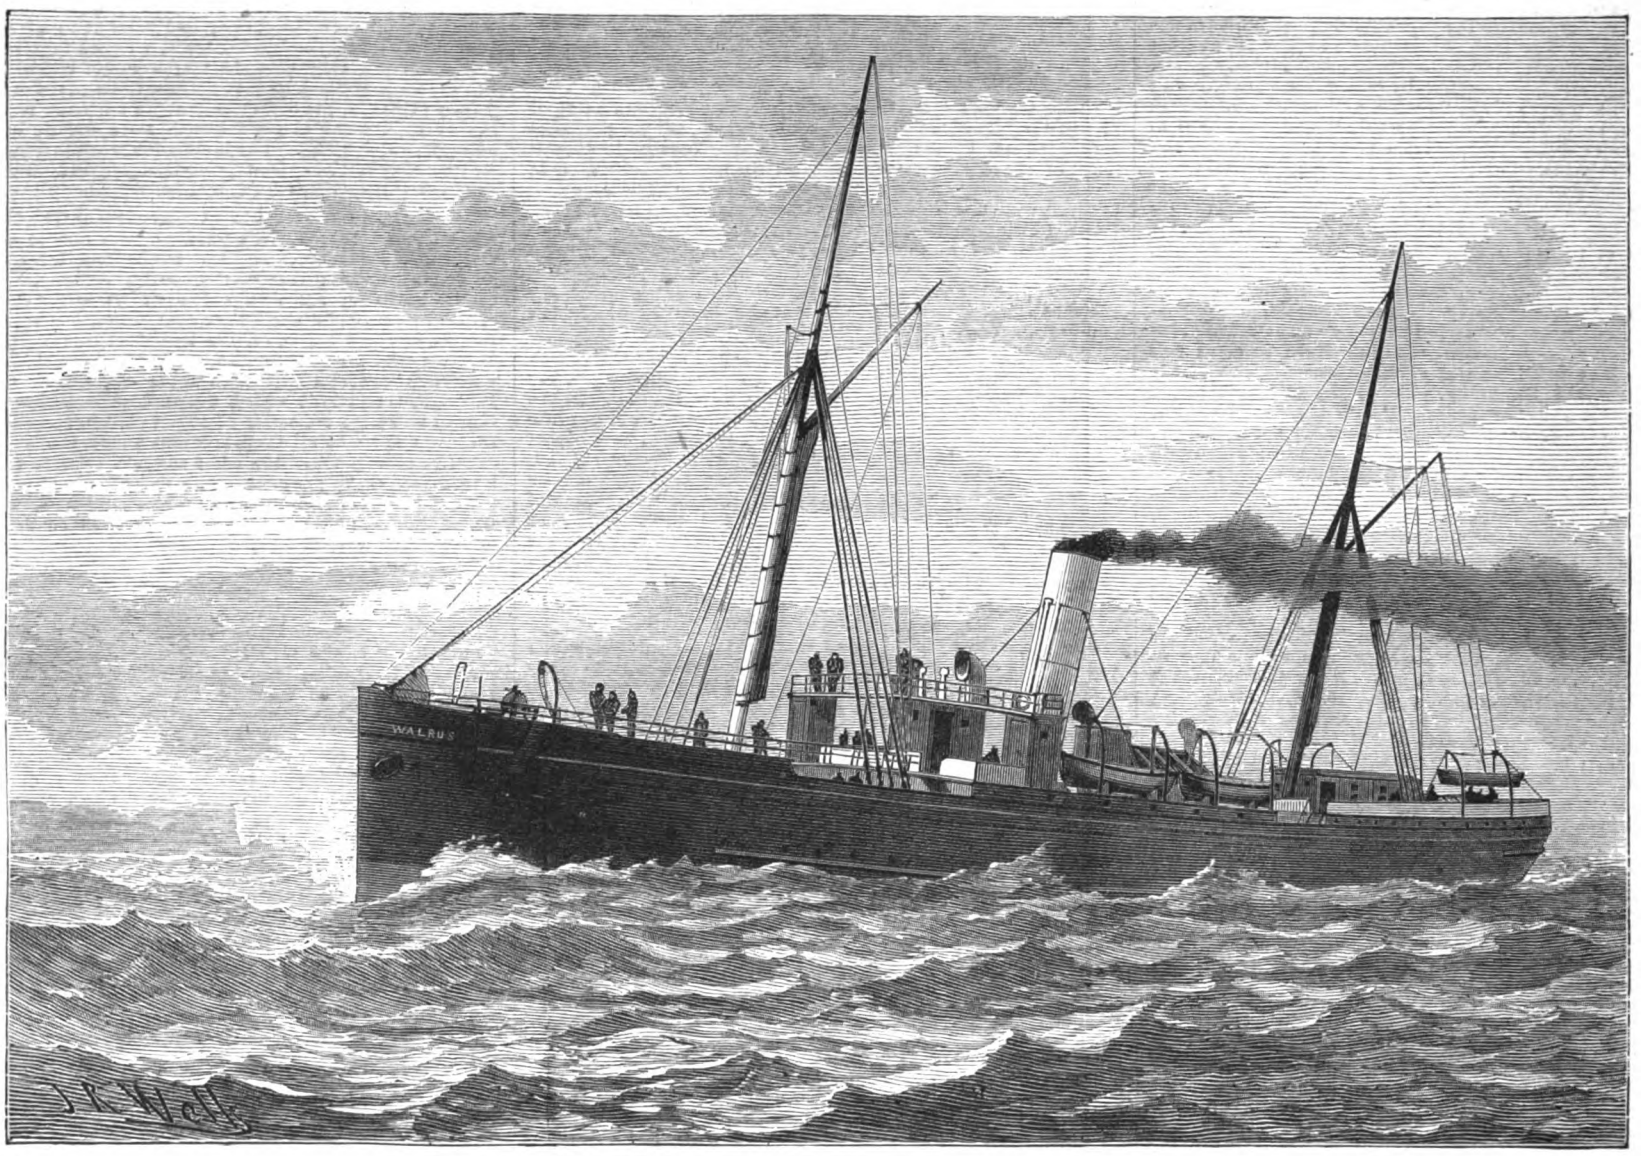
The valves connecting the Fewston Reservoir with that of Swinsty, part of the scheme of waterworks supplying Leeds, were opened on Monday. The Mayor unlocked the valve with a gold key. The construction of the Fewston Reservoir was begun in July, 1874; it has an area of 155 acres; will hold about 870,000,000 gallons, and has cost £147,000.

At the Alexandra Palace last Saturday an inspection took place of half-a-dozen hansom cabs, the property of the British Cab Company, which has been formed to introduce an improved cab service throughout the country. Horses and appointments are promised of the best description, whilst the greatest attention will be paid to sanitary details and the thorough cleanliness of the cabs. Certainly the hansoms inspected on Saturday, in appointments as well as appearance, are a vast improvement on the vehicles which are at present found in our streets. The horses were evidently well fed, groomed, and harnessed; the drivers were clad in a neat uniform, and the cabs were as clean and comfortable as they could possibly be. Sir E. Henderson, speaking at a luncheon held after the inspection, stated that the people of London spent about £10,000 daily in cab-hire. There were, he added, more than a thousand teetotallers among the cabdrivers of the metropolis.



There were 2698 births and 1501 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 113, whereas the deaths were 76 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 1 from smallpox, 42 from measles, 69 from scarlet fever, 15 from diphtheria, 37 from whooping-cough, 32 from different forms of fever, and 30 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 226 deaths were referred, against 220 and 224 in the two preceding weeks. These deaths were 29 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 3288 births and 1769 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 46·6 deg., and 1·3 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 8·3 hours.

The autumnal election of inmates into the Asylum for Idiots, Redhill, Surrey, took place on Thursday week at the City Terminus Hotel, when thirty-five applicants out of a list of 162 candidates were elected. Mr. James Abbiss, the treasurer of the charity, presided, and stated, previous to the commencement of the election proceedings, that the board of management were happy to state that, by the generosity of their friends, and in answer to their appeal, the debt of £5000 which remained on the charity had been reduced by one half that amount, and the board earnestly hoped that their friends would strive to clear off the remaining debt before the close of the year. He was happy to inform them that the interesting family at Redhill, though unfortunate in many respects, were in the enjoyment of good health, no epidemic of any kind being amongst them. The institution was otherwise in excellent condition. They had good health, good officers, and the only thing they wanted was money.



Among the more recent rent remissions are the following:—Lady Fitzsimons has made a reduction of 30 per cent on her estate in King's County. Lord Digby and Lady Bury have made reductions on their estates according to the circumstances of the tenants. Mr. James Wilson has given notice of a reduction of 10, 15, and 20 per cent, according to the circumstances of the tenants, on his Longford estate. Sir Richard Wallace, M.P., has, through his agent, expressed his sympathy with the tenants on his estates in the counties of Antrim and Down, in the present trying season, and announces his intention of making a reduction of 15 per cent in the current year's rent, in respect of all their holdings where the rent does not exceed £50 a year, and in cases where it exceeds that amount a reduction of 7½ per cent. The reduction will not apply to town parks, beneficial leases, farms sublet, or to holdings where the tenant is not resident. The Earl of Redesdale has allowed his tenants 10 per cent off the rent of their arable lands. Sir Thos. M'Clure, M.P., has made an abatement of 15 per cent in the rents for this year on his Down estate.

Sir Evelyn Wood was entertained at dinner last Saturday evening in the Middle Temple hall by the Bar of England. The Attorney-General presided, and among those present were the Lord Chancellor, the Solicitor-General, Lord Hatherley, and the Lord Chief Baron. In replying to the toast of his health, which was proposed by the Attorney-General, Sir Evelyn Wood said that the soldier's work in Zululand was done. He spoke of the Zulus as worthy foes of British soldiers in all but cruelty, and said that the innate ferocity of the enemy was fostered by Cetewayo for his own ends. He then remarked on the origin of the quarrel, stating that, in regard to Luneberg, he was the primary witness of Cetewayo's arrogant provocation. Sir Evelyn next dwelt upon the brotherhood of interests of the Army and the Bar. To the toast of "The Judges" the Lord Chancellor replied, and for "The Houses of Lords and Commons" Lord Hatherley and Mr. Forsyth responded.—Surgeon-Major Reynolds, V.C., was entertained the same evening by the President and Fellows of the College of Surgeons in Ireland, in the theatre of the college, at Dublin. In returning thanks for the toast of his health, Surgeon-Major Reynolds said that the complaint on the part of the medical profession that its services were not adequately recognised by the State did not apply to the branch with which he was connected—the Army Medical Department; for Lord Chelmsford and Generals Newdigate and Wood had especially thanked it, and especially named several officers for distinguished services.

GIVING AWAY PARK PLANTS.

The laudable custom, at the close of the floral season, of distributing gratuitously to respectable poor people, householders or lodgers in the inferior quarters of London, the remaining surplus of plants, fit for small gardens or window-boxes, that had accrued from horticultural operations in the London public parks, has been more than once remarked. This example was first commenced, if we mistake not, by order of her Majesty's First Commissioner of Woods and Forests, in the Crown or Government Parks; it has been followed of late by the Metropolitan Board of Works, in those constructed at the expense of district or local ratepayers. At the Victoria Park, between Hackney and Bow, the practice has become an important social institution, for the love of flowers is cherished with fervent enthusiasm in the parts of East London. Tickets or letters of introduction are issued by clergymen and other ministers, by the managers of hospitals, orphan homes, and similar institutions, and by other influential authorities. There are during the month of September three or four hundred such applications at Pride Park, the quantities asked varying from a single family to a combination of thirty or forty persons. Mr. A. M'Intyre, the Victoria Park Superintendent, has power given him for satisfying the reasonable desires of the modest. The species commonly at his disposal are geraniums, calceolarias, and lobelias, with the centaurus, ageratums, and others, which are eagerly sought after by a multitude of applicants, as shown in our Illustration of the scene at the entrance lodge. Women and children, working men, and inmates of the Union Workhouse bring various kinds of receptacles for these pleasant gifts of the public gardens in the latter part of the year.

MR. GLADSTONE AND MR. CROSS ON EDUCATION.

These two gentlemen were engaged on Monday in much more profitable and pleasant work than that of political sparring.

Mr. Gladstone, who has been staying at Wellington College as the guest of his son-in-law, the Head Master, the Rev. E. C. Wickham, was presented with an address of welcome by the scholars. Mr. Gladstone, in replying, said they could not have made an allusion more grateful to his feelings than a reference in the address to Eton. That school had attained in many, if not in all, respects a kind of primacy among the public schools of the country, and such was its position, such the incidents of its history, its situation, its visible and palpable future, that if a foreign friend consulted him upon the objects he should make a point of seeing in visiting this country, he should reply, "Unless you see Eton you will not have seen England." But this would not be said with any feeling of injustice or indifference towards the other public schools. Mr. Gladstone went on to say that no institution was more characteristic of our country than its public schools, and drew a contrast between the old public school system of the country and the new. He said:—"The old public school system of this country had one great and capital defect—that it treated all the youth brought within its range as if they were intended for one and the same destiny in life. It took too little heed, not only of the differences of their coming careers, but, what was yet more important, of the differences of their several capacities. It endeavoured to make all conform to one model, which was called the classical model. But with that great fault the old public school system of this country had a great merit which might have been fully enjoyed and brought to fruit and profit without incurring a fault, but a merit so great that it ought not only to be remembered and recorded, but in none of our reforms, in none of our innovations, ought we to run the risk of losing the advantages that were connected with it. That merit was that it kept in view beyond all other things not merely the acquiring such information as might be valuable in examinations, not merely the adapting of faculties to professional success, but in the highest and in a more inward sense the education of the man. The knowledge acquired by his hearers had two great aspects. Besides being a commodity which was to serve the external purposes of life, knowledge had a greater and a higher power; it was an educating instrument. It was to bring out all their capacities, not for the sake simply of the purposes they were to serve them in life, but for their own sake. The whole of life was, after all, simply an education, and the professions and businesses to which they might be hereafter devoted were only parts and portions of the education. And then came into view what undoubtedly must be admitted to be the danger of the new system, of the modern spirit in education. He knew not whether it was owing to our degeneracy, but he was afraid it was the truth, that we had a much smaller amount in this nineteenth century of a disinterested, ardent, enthusiastic love of knowledge for its own sake than our forefathers had 500 years ago. But, be that as it might, it was the fact that our system of education was now worked by a method of sharp competition and immediate rewards. He saw all the benefits of that method; he saw the great results it had produced; but there was a peril in it, and it was the peril of their believing when they had gone through the examinations and obtained the prizes, and when they were realising professional success as a consequence of early distinction—that they should look upon that success as the end of their education. It was not the end of their education. The end of their education was the effect it produced upon themselves, the state to which it brought and in which it left them; and the distinction was a very real one."

Mr. Cross, speaking at the opening of the Wigan Free Grammar-School, dwelt at some length on the work of the Endowed Schools Commission. That Commission had, he said, already made schemes to the number of 515, and these schemes absorbed endowments to the extent of £260,000 a year. They had at the present moment under consideration 170 schemes, which represented an income of £177,000 a year. Altogether, 485 schools and similar institutions had been dealt with—endowments amounting to not far short of half a million a year. It was a great deal of good, sound work done, because it was applying those endowments which, left originally for excellent purposes, had by lapse of time not been so valuable for the wants of the present generation as they should be; and he thought that in the course of a few years, that enormous sum of £500,000 having been put on a thoroughly sound foundation, ought to be a matter of congratulation. They had still 490 schools to deal with, but the incomes of these represented only £166,000 a year, and they might hope before long to see that great work practically completed. The Commission had also rearranged the 515 schools they had dealt with into different grades; they had established fifty of the first, 114 of the second, and 114 of the third. As to the girls, entirely through the action of the Endowed Schools Commissioners a high secondary education had been provided for upwards of 2000 girls, and he was quite sure it was as absolutely essential that girls should have a high-class education as boys. Speaking subsequently at a dinner, Mr. Cross said that he was one who had not the smallest wish to see women put out of their proper place. Their sphere was at home, and what he wanted was that they should be perfect in the sphere in which they moved. If there was one thing more than another which contributed to the happiness of home it was in the matter of housekeeping and cooking, and he should be very glad to see those two subjects more pressed upon them in their daily education in the elementary schools. The higher branches of education were, however, needed in the education of women who were to be married to persons of the highest intellectual capacity. It was a great comfort to the man who was fatigued with the day's work when his business was over to have intellectual intercourse with his wife; and when a woman was brought up with a shallow education, as used to be the case, she was not fitted to fill her sphere in life as she ought to be.

Mr. Bright spoke yesterday week at a conversazione given by the Mayor of Birmingham to the school teachers of that town. Referring to the work of the religious and secular teacher, he contended that the influence of the latter was infinitely greater than that of the former. It was not, he said, mere book-learning that made a man a wise citizen, and he appealed to the teachers of Birmingham to set an example to the country of what could be done by developing the nobler traits of human nature, such as gentleness, uprightness, and unselfishness. Referring to the complaints of extravagant expenditure on education, Mr. Bright said he would have nothing done for ostentation or for show; but whatever could be done to make education real, to raise the character of our population, and exalt the sentiment of the people; whatever could be done by the expenditure of money and the devotion and the earnest efforts of good men and good women, like the 500 or 600 he saw before him, that he would do and have done.

POLITICAL.

Rumours of the possible imminence of a General Election have not an atom of foundation in the speeches of Cabinet Ministers. Colonel Stanley's guarded allusion at Preston to the date of the dissolution was a mere platitude. "Time alone will, before many months are over, decide," probably meant no more than that Parliament might be allowed to run its course. The reported Liberal successes at the municipal elections, most marked in Liverpool above all places, could hardly hasten the Government's appeal to the country. But the uncertainty existing in the public mind on the question will indubitably add to the closeness with which every word of the Prime Minister's speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet on Monday next will be studied. Colonel Stanley, in the first of the two speeches he made before large Conservative audiences last week, followed the lead of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach in his spirited endeavour to rebut the arguments of Mr. Bright. Sir John Holker aired his sturdy oratory on the same occasion; and was characteristically emphatic in his defence of the Ministerial policy, and forensically vigorous in attacking his political opponents, as when he complimented Sir William Harcourt for being "more celebrated for his elaborate and carefully-prepared rhetorical flourishes than for sound reasoning." An antagonist of the long robe, Sir Henry James, on the morrow took occasion, whilst delivering a smart canvassing address at Taunton on behalf of Mr. C. T. Dyke Acland's candidature for West Somerset, to make a pungent reference to the Earl of Beaconsfield's novels, and complained that the country was being governed, not according to his Lordship's matured judgment, but by the opinions of the "Mr. Disraeli of thirty years ago." Mr. Stansfeld, taking up the same strain at Halifax on Monday, did not contribute any especially fresh argument against the Ministry, but the right hon. gentleman presented a few phrases he had coined, such as "firework policy," and "pinchbeck, Brummagen, bastard Imperialism." Mr. Lowe on Tuesday supported the candidature of Mr. Mellor, Q.C., and Mr. C. G. Roundell, at Grantham; and trenchantly said the Conservative Party had moulted all its feathers, had now no principles left, and, being in want of a policy, elected to support with enthusiasm Mr. Disraeli's nostrum of "swaggering, and bullying foreign nations," no matter if by doing so they appealed to "the worst passions and lowest feelings of human nature." This philippic of Mr. Lowe's abounded with all his old terseness of epigrammatic point, and quite bristled with bitter criticisms of each action of the Government.

Meantime, while the majority of speakers have been directing the attention of their listeners to foreign lands, a graver note of warning has come from Ireland in the shape of an emphatic statement by Mitchell Henry that a famine is impending over the sister isle. When the Roman Catholic clergy are also moving in this matter, and Irish members as sober as Mr. Justin McCarthy are driven to interview the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the evil may be deemed near enough even for the Ministry to grapple with.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

After all the bustle and excitement of the closing act of the Newmarket drama, last week seemed very dull and uneventful in the racing way. Lincoln was certainly the best of the various meetings that were wiped off the list of fixtures for 1879, but even that gathering may be dismissed in a few words. With all his weight, Master Kildare (9 st. 5 lb.) was made a hot favourite for the Great Tom Stakes, nor is this surprising when we remember the great things that he has accomplished this season under crushing imposts. However, either his roaring has become worse, or he was not just "i' the vein" at Lincoln, for he never looked really formidable, and the plating Suffolk Lad (6 st. 8 lb.) just got home in front of little Flotsam (7 st. 12 lb.), who, like Master Kildare, is decidedly "musical." Laurel Leaf secured the Blankney Nursery for the Osbornes, and Umbria (8 st. 6 lb.) had very little difficulty in winning the Autumn Handicap. Clementine (8 st. 12 lb.) did not even get a place in this race, and the performance of Umbria makes Peter a really great horse, for he had no trouble in conceding her three years and 10 lbs. at Ayr. Thus, if it is safe to judge by collateral running, Peter is fully a stone in front of the French four-year-old. Lewes wound up the week; but, though the sport was good, it had no bearing on the future.

The Liverpool lessees have the present week pretty much to themselves, and there appears every prospect of excellent racing. The opening day was chiefly remarkable for the extraordinary form shown by Archer, who had six mounts, won five races, and was second in the remaining one. The colt by Brown Bread—Mayoress, who has not yet been beaten—successfully attempted to concede all sorts of weights to half a dozen opponents, and has since been very neatly named Toastmaster. Naturally, the chief event of the day was the antagonism of Robbie Burns and Discord in the Liverpool St. Leger. The pair met on precisely similar terms, Robbie Burns in receipt of 5 lb., at the Liverpool July Meeting, when the North country horse won, and this result was exactly confirmed on Tuesday last. But for his accident before the St. Leger, "Robbie" would doubtless have shown to far greater advantage in that race, and he is such a thorough stayer that he ought to win many another good stake.

At the Border Union (Longtown) Meeting last week Lord Haddington's kennel accomplished a feat which, we believe, is unparalleled in the annals of coursing. The Netherby Cup was divided between Honey Buzzard, by Fugitive—Honeydew, and Honeywood, by Cavalier—Humming Bee; and Hornpipe, by Bedfellow—Hornet, and Halcyon, by Donald—Hawthorn, shared the Border Union Stakes for sixty-four puppies. These were the only four dogs that his Lordship sent to the meeting, and with them he simply swept the board. The feat is the more wonderful because two of them were substitutes for Herera and Haidée, who went amiss prior to the meeting. All four gained their positions by sheer merit; and perhaps it is not too much to say that Honeywood is the fastest greyhound in England at the present time, and "Lord Haddington's nomination" is sure to be a great favourite for the Waterloo Cup directly there is any reliable betting on that event. Apropos of the blue ribbon of the leash, we hear that Coomassie is galloping as soundly as ever; and it will indeed be a triumph for Dr. Hutton's powers as a bone-setter if, after breaking a bone in one of her legs early in the present year, she even manages to win a good course or two. The weather during the three days passed in the north was perfect, and the meeting was a thoroughly enjoyable one in every respect.

The team of professional cricketers, who, under the captaincy of Richard Daft, have had such a triumphant tour in Canada and the States, landed at Liverpool on Tuesday last. Before parting they dined together, and a presentation was made to Daft in recognition of his admirable qualities as captain. The trip has been the most successful, and in every respect the most satisfactory, of any undertaken by the various elevens that have from time to time visited our colonies.

On Saturday afternoon the Winter Meeting of the London Athletic Club took place at Stamford-bridge. Perhaps the most interesting feature of a good programme was the walking of J. Byrne, Northampton A.C., who was placed at scratch in the Four-Miles Handicap, and won as he chose, as, at present, London only possesses some very melancholy specimens of fast walkers. In fact, it is reckless flattery to apply the term "fast" to them at all, for it is difficult to say what start men like Rye, Griffiths, Nunn, Hogg, Venn, Webster, &c., could not give them, if these cracks could reappear on the path in their best form.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution took place at its house in John-street, Adelphi, on Thursday. Rewards amounting to £90 were granted to various crews of life-boats for services rendered during the past month. The Civil Service life-boat at Wexford proceeded out during a strong gale from the E.N.E., and through a heavy cross sea landed one of the men stationed in the lighthouse on the Tuskar Rocks, who had been taken ill. The Queenstown and Cunlyn life-boats were respectively the means of saving the distressed yacht Gilded Age and her crew of three men, and the schooner Hallswell of Bridgewater and five men. The St. David's life-boat brought ashore from the Maen Carreg Tidal Rock, in Ramsey Sound, three of the crew of the brigantine Messenger, of Exeter, who had taken refuge there on their vessel striking on the rocks during a strong wind from the N.N.E. The sum of £6 was granted to a boat's crew of six men for putting off at some risk and saving six persons from the yacht Vesta of Queenstown, which had parted one of her cables and was in a dangerous position off Smerwick, in the county of Kerry, during a gale of wind from the N.N.W. on Aug. 25. Various other rewards were also granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. Payments amounting to £2785 were ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. The receipt of various contributions was announced, including £750 for a life-boat from a lady at Brighton, £319 10s. 3d. from the "Oliver Goldsmith" Life-Boat Fund, per Miss Goldsmith Tulloh, who had zealously collected the same, and £4 4s. from the officers and children of the Licensed Victuallers' Schools towards the support of the Licensed Victualler life-boat. The late Miss Woodward, of Oldham Place, had left the institution a legacy of £2000, and the late Robert Allan, Esq., of Glenhouse, N.B., £500. Reports were read from the District Inspectors of Life-Boats to the Institution.

The captain's good-service pension of £150 a year, vacant by the retirement of Captain Mountford S. Peile, has been conferred upon Captain Theodore M. Jones; and the good-service pension, vacated by Captain John C. Soady on promotion to flag rank, has been given to Captain Richard Bradshaw. Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets William Macleod, M.D., has been placed on the Retired List.—It is said to have been decided to confer the coming vacancy at the Admiralty Board upon Rear-Admiral Anthony Hiley Hoskins, C.B., late Commodore in Australia.—The United Service Gazette learns that a flying squadron is to be formed early next year, the command of which will be given to Rear-Admiral Algernon McLennan Lyons.—The same paper says that recruits in considerable numbers are availing themselves of the clause in the new Army Discipline Act, by which they can buy their discharge before three months' service. It is in one way encouraging to notice how many lads are able to produce the required £10, showing that the army is not being entirely recruited from the class who live from hand to mouth. The recruits who have lately enlisted are of superior stamp.

The fifty-seventh report of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues for the year ended March 31 last refers to the measures taken for the concentration and improvement of the Crown property, which, beginning in 1851, have since been continued. Mr. Gore states that one of the results of those measures of improvement has been that the revenue yielded by the Crown property has largely increased. In 1851 considerably more than one third of the gross revenue, then amounting, including the entire receipts from minerals, to £341,000, was derived from quit and fee farm rents, and also from ground rents, reserved under building leases which had at that date, and, with a few exceptions, have still many years to run. From these rents, with the exceptions referred to, no increase has been obtainable except by the sale of some of the quit and fee farm rents, and by the investment of the proceeds in property that improves in value. Notwithstanding that circumstance, the gross income revenue in the past year, including one moiety only of the net receipts from minerals, was £489,448. The net revenue, which is annually paid to the Exchequer (and amounting to £410,000 per annum), has increased in a more than corresponding proportion. During the period to which the report relates Mr. Gore has granted eighty-seven leases of land, houses, and other premises, situated in different counties in England, and not being within the boundaries of any of the Royal forests, and also of coal, fire-clay, iron-stone, &c. The rents reserved under these leases, exclusive of royalties, amount altogether to £14,081, and fines, amounting to £2140, were received upon the grant of two of those leases.

THE VOLUNTEER FORCE.

Yesterday week the twentieth official year of the volunteer organisation was brought to a close, with satisfactory results; the force being in a most healthy condition in all parts of Great Britain, as evidenced by the large attendances at the annual inspections, Government brigade drills, and camps of exercise, and by other external indications. Last year at this time the actual number of enrolled volunteers in the kingdom was 203,213—the largest total which has been reached in the history of the present organisation, but by no means approaching that of a particular year in the early part of the present century (1804), when it stood at upwards of 380,000. Ideas have, however, much altered since the latter period, and in no respect more so than in soldierly discipline and efficiency, in which the volunteer of 1803 would appear to disadvantage compared with the citizen soldier of to-day, with the advantage he possesses of occasional drill and association for instruction with regular troops, attendance at regimental camps, or, still better, the camps of instruction at Aldershott, Chatham, and Shoeburyness, where a practical knowledge of the special work of each arm of the service is acquired. Of the 203,213 enrolled men at the date of the last returns, 194,191 were returned efficient. The large total of 17,054 officers and sergeants had passed the requisite military examinations—many of them at the schools of instruction—and received certificates of proficiency in their duties, and 170,209 of all ranks were actually present at the inspections, the percentage being 83·75 as against 72·15 in 1870; and the percentage of efficients to enrolled 95·55, against 88·02 at the same period. It is at present too early to form an approximate idea of the figures which the new returns will show, as, though they are now due at the War Office, it is probable that many of them will not be sent in for some days, but it is rumoured that the efficients will turn out to be quite 200,000.

Beyond the Wimbledon meeting, the numerous camps formed in various parts of the country, and the interest created in the report of the War Office Committee in the early part of the year, there has been little to record. At Wimbledon the attendance was very large, and the shooting, frequently carried out in heavy rain, a great improvement on that of former years, more especially with the Martini-Henry, with which some splendid scores were made—the silver medal and £60 in the first stage of the Queen's Prize, at 200, 500, and 600 yards, going to Quartermaster Macdonald, of Forfar, for 96 out of a possible 105 points, and the gold medal, badge, and her Majesty's gift of £250, to Captain Taylor, of St. Helen's, Lancashire, who at the extreme distances of 800, 900, and 1000 yards made 83. At Aldershott eight battalions, principally made up of detachments of various regiments in London, Middlesex, Surrey, Essex, Herts, Dorset, Lancashire, and Cornwall, and numbering altogether about 4000 of all ranks, went under canvas for eight days, and drilled with the regular troops; and at Shoeburyness the artillery, while engaged in shooting for the prizes offered by the National Artillery Association, were also under canvas and did the same work as the Royals, to the satisfaction of Colonel Hastings, Commandant of the School of Gunnery, and of Colonel Keate, Camp Commandant. At Chatham also there was a good representation of the Engineer Corps, who exhibited remarkable proficiency in the special work of that arm of the service, and gained high opinions from the professional officers placed over them. The Easter review again fell through, owing to the usual difficulties; but the day and the few previous to it were utilised in a way favourably commented upon.

The new year on which the volunteers have entered is rife with proposed changes to improve the organisation, the most important being the conversion of administrative battalions into consolidated battalions.—Daily News.

"For those who do and those who do not know Paris these volumes contain a fund of instruction and amusement, which can be 'drawn' at almost any page with the certainty of a 'find.'"—Saturday Review.

ON an average about every seven days OPPOSITION VELVETEENS to the LOUIS are started and endeavoured to be introduced to public notice, under one name or another. Not only is the style of making up, and the stamping of the name on the back of every yard resorted to

ROYAL VISIT TO ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, on Monday last, opened the new building at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, which has been erected for the accommodation of the Library, the Museum of Anatomy, and the school of microscopical examination. This is a part of the improved arrangements now in progress, for the College of Medicine and Surgery connected with the venerable Hospital. The old anatomical museum will be pulled down, and a group of new buildings will be erected. There will be two new theatres—one for anatomy, to accommodate 500 pupils; and one for medicine, to seat 250. There will be a new dissecting-room, in which 250 students will be able to practise dissecting at one time. New professors' rooms will also be erected, and this part of the work is to be commenced next year. How necessary some such accommodation is, the figures of admission to the schools year by year will indicate. Up to 1873, 60 or 70 entries a year had been the rule, but the number 100 was then reached. In 1874 the figures rose to 110, in 1875 to 124, in 1876 to 135. In 1877 they were 158; in 1878, 153. The ordinary period of their stay is four years, but some remain six years, and even longer.

The buildings already finished have been about two years in erection (the plans were signed by the contractor in September, 1877), and stand upon the site of some houses which fronted Smithfield. They were ancient tenements, but not so old as those which outlasted the Great Fire and are still to be seen at the side of the hospital. Although the fine new stone front is visible from Smithfield, the approach is through the old gate from the quadrangle built by Gibbs in 1730. The façade is nearly 100 ft. in length, and is 75 ft. in height from the pavement to the top of the balustrade. There is a bold rusticated granite plinth about 8 ft. 6 in. high, and above that the whole of the front is composed of Portland stone and terminated with a balustrade. It is in the Italian style and in harmony with the wing buildings of the hospital. The frieze of the principal façade bears the inscription, "Sancti Bartholomæi Schola Medicinæ, A.D. MDCCCLXXVIII.," and in the granite plinth towards its southern end is a stone indicating the names of the president, treasurer, and almoners of the hospital in whose the year of office the building was begun, as follows:—"His Royal Highness Albert, Prince of Wales, president; Sir Sydney Hedley Waterlow, Bart., M.P., treasurer; Robert Philipson Barrow, Esq., Ebenezer Homan, Esq., Sir William Henry Wyatt, Sir James Tyler, almoners." The façade next the quadrangle of the hospital is of simple architectural character, of brick and Portland stone dressings; and over the students' entrance door is the inscription—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Within the building the basement contains spacious lavatories, a cloak-room, a students' meeting-room, and class-rooms. The walls are partly of glazed bricks, for the sake of light. In the upper parts of the building the walls are distempered in a light colour, with a chocolate dado. On the ground floor is the library, containing an upper gallery, and capable of holding at least 19,000 books; the cases for the books stand at a right angle to the walls, thus not only forming a large additional space for books, but also providing convenient recesses in the room. At present about 7000 volumes are contained in the library. This apartment is 96 ft. long by 36 ft. wide and 20 ft. high. The floors and cases are of light polished oak. On the first-floor is a large room capable of being divided in two by a sliding door. Along the walls are tables, with lamps and sinks, at which 150 students will be able to work with test-tubes and the other appliances of chemical analysis. Above this floor is a lofty, well-lighted museum, somewhat larger than the library below, containing two galleries, in which it is intended to place the already large and valuable collection of anatomical specimens and other objects of interest connected with the medical art. The air-tight glass cases are framed in ebonized mahogany. There is a lantern roof of glass and iron. The buildings have been designed by the architect to the hospital, Mr. Edward I'Anson. The builder was Mr. Deputy Brass, and the clerk of works Mr. Streeter. The elaborate fittings were done by Messrs. Patman and Fotheringham, and the heating and ventilation by Messrs. Herring, of Chertsey.

THE OLD ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

South London, the whole of that populous region on the right bank of the Thames, embracing Lambeth and Southwark or "the Borough," Bermondsey and Rotherhithe, with Kennington, Newington, Walworth, Camberwell, Clapham and Brixton, extending into Surrey, and with Deptford, Greenwich, Blackheath, and Lewisham in Kent, has above one million of inhabitants. The main thoroughfares of street and road by which the daily traffic of all these and many other growing townships or parishes, with that of more distant semi-rural suburbs, is conducted, find their common centre at one point, about equidistant from Vauxhall, Westminster, Waterloo, Blackfriars, and London Bridges, owing to the grand curve of the river's course turning northward as it flows from west to east. Here, at the place called Newington-butts from its ancient dedication to the practice of archery, stands the Elephant and Castle Tavern, hard by the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, and confronting a huge drapery warehouse, while it is flanked westward by an equally vast magazine of boots and shoes, and another immense building erected for the horse-dealing business. This place has still no recognised name but that of the old-fashioned house of entertainment, which had become celebrated when almost every traveller going south from London had to pass it, before stage-coaches and post-chaises were superseded by the railways. Our Engraving represents the noted stage-coach house as it existed about sixty years back. It was, we see, then only an ordinary low-built roadside inn. The "outer gallery" mentioned by the late John Timbs, in that storehouse of anecdote "The Curiosities of London," seems to be the lean-to projection along a portion of the front. "There is an odd notion," says this authority, "that the Elephant and Castle sign was founded on the finding of elephants' bones near the inn site; but an elephant and castle is the crest of the Cutlers' Company." The large house adjoining, inscribed in tall characters "The House of God," was a sectarian chapel occupied by the dupes of Joanna Southcott, whose dreams and visions were painted on the walls. Our Engraving is from a water-colour drawing by T. Rowlandson, in the South Kensington Museum. The Rubens-like exaggerations, the humour and satire of the clever but dissipated caricaturist, are evinced in the numerous figures and incidents with which he has animated the roads in every direction.

Earl Fortescue, who presided last week at the West Buckland Middle-Class School meeting, severely criticised the proposal of Mr. Forster that School Boards should be encouraged to give what was termed a higher education, for the effect of this would be, he said, to make the Government pay for the education of those whose parents could very well afford to meet the cost without any such assistance.

ILLUSTRATED GIFT-BOOKS.

The approach of Christmas, though some weeks still lie before the advent of that festive season, has stirred up many publishers to send forth new volumes of literary entertainment, poetry, romance, picturesque travel or history, and celebration of beauty in art or in nature, or new editions of favourite works, more or less decorated and illustrated by the engraver's and other graphic or pictorial methods. A few of the earliest of these agreeable productions are here briefly noticed.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington present us with Breton Folk, by Mr. Henry Blackburn, which is the pleasing descriptive account of three summer tours, accompanied in two instances by the artist, Mr. R. Caldecott, through the north-western peninsula of French territory. The author of several approved books of this kind, which treat of Spain and the Pyrenees, Algiers, Normandy, the Hartz, and the Passion Play of Ober-Ammergau, is well qualified to show the picturesque aspects of Brittany. He goes through the Departments of Morbihan, the Côtes du Nord, and Finisterre, noting the quaint costumes, figures, and groups, the striking scenery, with its rather sombre colouring of "grey, blue, and green," and the droll and comical wayside incidents. A hundred and seventy drawings, engraved by Mr. J. D. Cooper, attend upon these records of a tourist's impressions.

The Breton legendary and antiquarian lore, with which Mr. Blackburn has little to do, has been gathered on the spot and wrought into an excellent shape by Mrs. Katharine Macquoid, the popular novelist; and Mr. Thomas Macquoid has furnished thirty-four appropriate illustrations—Pictures and Legends from Normandy and Brittany (published by Messrs. Chatto and Windus) may therefore be received as the complement to such a work as Mr. Blackburn's, and the one should reflect additional interest upon the other. In this book, moreover, the topographical range is extended to the banks of the Seine, as far as King Richard's great fortress of Château Gaillard, and Les Andelys, on that river above Rouen. Historical personages, with whose names we are all familiar, are here and there introduced into short passages of fiction that may possibly have some little foundation in fact. In Brittany, however, where Mrs. Macquoid met with eloquent and imaginative old crones, peasants or beggars, learned in all the local wonders of ancient time, she procured original material for some pathetic or otherwise impressive tales. "The Ferry of Carnöet" is a characteristic specimen.

It has, we should say, quite an Ossianic air of close intimacy with the dim forms of supernatural presences, surmised by Celtic imagination everywhere among the clinging wreaths of mist that hang so often upon the rocks of every western sea-coast, along the shores of Brittany, Wales, Ireland, and the Scottish friths and isles. The common character of their different sets of fabulous tales and fond conceits of the brooding fancy has often been remarked. A learned treatise on "Welsh Folk-lore," that is to say, fairy mythology, legends and traditions, has been written by an American scholar, Mr. Wirt Sikes, residing at Cardiff as United States' Consul. In South Wales, Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, Carmarthenshire, and Pembrokeshire, with some study of the language, and of its reputed classics, the "Mabinogion" and so forth, he has acquired a good stock of these poetical antiquities of the Cymry. The various modifications of the Arthurian epic cycle of heroic tales have not escaped his attention. He follows M. de Villemarqué in tracing the correspondence of many legendary ideas in Wales, as we have observed, with those of Brittany. British Goblins is the title of Mr. Wirt Sykes's book, which is adorned with illustrations by Mr. T. H. Thomas. It is published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. It contains much information about quaint old local customs, and superstitious or whimsical fancies relating to bells, mills, stones, or dragons, as well as authentic particulars of the Realm of Faerie and the Spirit World.

A literary work of considerable merit is the verse translation, by the Rev. W. L. Blackley, Rector of North Waltham, Hants, of the Swedish Bishop Tegner's heroic poem, the Frithiof's Saga. This is embellished with highly artistic original designs by A. Malmström, the engraving and printing, and the entire preparation of the ornamental volume, being executed in a style worthy of the publishers, Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co., of London, Belfast, and Philadelphia. All the spirit of Norse chivalry and maritime adventure lives and moves with unabated force in this fine old story of the hero's voyage, in the wondrous ship Ellida, which, like an intelligent steed, could hear and obey the voice of man, to fetch tribute from the Earl of Orkney; and in Frithiof's return and subsequent behaviour at the Court of King Hring, where he gained a lordship, with the hand of Queen Ingeborg.

From Scandinavian to ancient German or Teutonic romances of antiquity it is no remote transition. The Nibelungen-Lied, which has been modernised by Karl Simrock for German readers of this day, and which has been worked up into a tremendous trilogy of melodramatic operas by the tone-poet Wagner, is not yet familiar to English boys and girls. Under the title Golden Threads from an Ancient Loom, this most Homeric poem of the fate of noble Siegfried, the quarrel of the two Queens, Criemhild and Brunhild, the malice of Hagen, the strife of the Huns with the Burgundians, and the loss of the hoarded treasure sunk in the Rhine, has now been "adapted to the use of young readers," by Lydia Hands. Messrs. Griffith and Farran publish the prose abridgment or paraphrase, with fourteen engravings drawn by Julius Schnorr.

As we are now descending to the welcome duty of noticing books for children, it is permissible to drop at once upon a very delightful one, quite infantine though it be, called Little Margaret's Ride; or, The Wonderful Rocking-Horse (Griffith and Farran). Mrs. Frederick Browne tells the story in lively couplets of easy, ambling rhyme, while her sister, Miss Helen Tatham, has drawn the coloured pictures, which are likewise pretty. How the little girl, once in her dreams, set off on her beloved galloping steed upon a journey to her Grandmamma's house, and what strange adventures befel her on the road, let other little girls be told.

Two acceptable reprints, with new embellishments, of books that were notably produced for the juveniles of more than half a century ago, should have a word of favour. Robert Bloomfield, the author of "The Farmer's Boy," an English minor poet of respectable merit, died in 1824. The Bird and Insect Post Office, written by him and his son Charles, has fallen into comparative oblivion. It is a collection of imaginary letters to and from creatures of different species, the glow-worm and the bee, for instance, the swallow on his foreign travels and the English robin, the partridge, the owl, and the pigeon, discussing their various experiences. The cover of the book (published by Griffith and Farran) is ornamented with a few closed envelopes, each bearing a red postage-stamp, directed to such addresses as "Mrs. Hen, The Coop, Farmside." The other reprinted work of this playful kind is Mrs. Trimmer's History of the Robins, which is above sixty years old. But Messrs. T. Nelson and Sons have procured some beautiful designs by Giacomelli, engraved by the skilful hands of Rouget, Berveiller, Whymper, Sargent, and Morison, expressly for the illustration of this pleasing tale.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Cornhill this month relies chiefly on its minor contributions, for "White Wings," although very nice reading for yachtsmen and tourists, continues to disappoint those who consider that a novel should be a novel. "An Elderly Romance," however, is a very pretty story indeed, one of those little comedies in narrative, with a pathetic element, which have become frequent since the style was introduced by Mrs. Gaskell and perfected by Miss Thackeray. The situation in "Mademoiselle de Mersac" is both powerful and humorous. Mr. Sully's essay on the music of the animal creation is a valuable contribution to the still more interesting question of the development of musical perception in mankind. The germs of a Handel or a Catalani, it appears, are to be sought for very deep. Mr. Darwin has heard frogs emit "a decidedly pleasing sound," and Haydn has not disdained to copy a hen. "Dinners in Literature" is an amusing and appetising catalogue of the various feasts described by poets and novelists, whose imagination has not in general been restrained by any dread of the reckoning. Some, indeed, are in a different taste, such as Smollett's, who "has omitted from his ancient dinner all that might attract the appetite." An essay entitled "The Apologia of Art" conveys much right feeling and sound thinking on the necessity of power of expression and moral purpose in art in a singularly crude and immature style. Mention is made of certain artists "who do not greatly care for sensuous perfection." Among these, the illustrator of "Mademoiselle de Mersac" in the present number is evidently to be enumerated.

Fraser improves, containing two contributions of signal note. Professor Baynes's paper, "What Shakespeare Learnt at School," is the commencement of an extremely valuable investigation into the intellectual provision made for England's youth in "the spacious times of great Elizabeth," based on the statutes of public schools and other official records. The liberality of the views of some of the most eminent schoolmasters of the day is as gratifying as it will probably be thought surprising. Mr. Froude's allegory of the issues of human life, "A Siding at a Railway Station," if not ranking with the "Table of Cebes" or the "Vision of Mirza," is ingenious and suggestive. Mr. Gladstone's achievements as a man of letters are fairly reviewed by a friendly critic, who, however, cannot help showing how much better Mr. Gladstone wrote when he wrote less. The political article, "Lord Salisbury and Mr. Cross in Lancashire," is characterised by the usual unsatisfactory vagueness of Liberal manifestoes at this juncture. Everyone will admit that the Hellenic difficulty should be settled "equitably" and the Transvaal "amicably;" but these safe commonplaces do not tell us which party is to give in. If the writer on Professor Clifford really cannot see that Clifford's parody on the stock argument for letting the Mosaic cosmogony alone is a parody, he must be the dullest person that ever read a book to no purpose.

"Reata" maintains its high standard, and Blackwood is generally very good. The article on "Whig Reviewers as painted by themselves," founded on Macvey Napier's correspondence, is, however, somewhat ungenerous. "Maga" has apparently been nettled by some strong remarks on Professor Wilson, but could a political opponent miss the blot afforded by a cudgel-playing and cock-fighting Professor of Moral Philosophy? The imputations on Napier's editorial competence are wholly uncalled for; he showed good sense in discouraging Dickens and Thackeray, whose gifts were not those of Edinburgh Reviewers. An inferior man would have looked rather to the glitter of the name than the intrinsic merit of the work. A review of Madame Bonaparte's letters is inevitably interesting, but the writer pitches his estimate of Jérome's divorced wife too low, and fails to draw the impressive lesson he might have done from her truly tragical history. "Among the Afghans" will be eagerly read under present circumstances, and "A Poor Devil" is even more pathetic than the writer seems to have intended. Mr. Oliphant proves that the Syrian Christians are better off than the Mussulmans, but does not prove that this is not the fault of the latter.

Macmillan introduces a new fiction by Mrs. Oliphant, "He that will not when he may." The opening, like more of Mrs. Oliphant's, is admirably calculated to excite curiosity, which it is to be hoped will not be allowed to die away, as is also so frequently the case with her. Professor Seeley, with an acumen perhaps sharpened by his own recent experience of the fact, points out the unfortunate indifference of the English public to Continental history. It is all the more desirable that their instructors in this neglected department should make allowance for the pupils' reluctance, and not present them with volumes enormous enough to intimidate the best disposed. Mr. Leland's sketch of the Russian Gipsies is graphic and entertaining. Commander Cameron expounds the political importance of the projected Indo-Mediterranean Railway, a subject less doubtful than its feasibility in a financial or engineering point of view. Mrs. Westlake ably defends the policy of the London School Board; and Mr. Sidway, of Chicago, contributes valuable statistics respecting the grain-producing power of the United States.

The most important paper in the Nineteenth Century is one on what is perhaps the most vital question of the day by one who should be the highest authority upon it. Mr. Raikes, Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons, examines the causes and the remedies of the deplorable and disgraceful obstruction of business in that assembly. Mr. Raikes makes many very useful suggestions respecting the revision of the rules of the House, but fails to evince that determination to deal effectively with individual offenders without which revision will be practically inoperative. The next paper in point of interest is Sir John Lubbock's history of money, with reference both to currency and banking, a most amusing as well as instructive compilation. The late lamented Leonard Montefiore bequeaths a review of the condition of Alsace-Lorraine since the annexation. We wish we could share his confidence that this open sore will be healed by an amicable compromise. Mr. Ralston's "Cinderella" contains some very interesting variations on this popular story. Mr. R. W. Hanbury spoils his case against the Greek view of the Turkish boundary question by a peevish and ungenerous tone, and a foolish attempt to prove that the Greeks themselves are Slavonians.

Professor Max Müller's Birmingham discourse on "Freedom," reprinted in the Contemporary Review, is so full of profound and varied matter as to defy analysis here. It requires and deserves careful study: the somewhat too sweeping attack on the examination system, to which the newspapers have given currency, is really the least interesting part. Mr. Gladstone is successively reviewed by a Liberal, who can see no harm in him, and a Conservative, who can see no good. Their lucubrations, if genuine, are valuable as illustrations of the obliquity of party spirit, and for nothing else. We should not, however, be at all surprised to discover that both came from the same hand. Professor Jevons seems to think that Mill was illogically right when he differed from Bentham. Mr. E. S. Robertson writes hopefully of the prospects of Ireland, but not very hopefully of the prospects of peasant proprietorship.

The Fortnightly Review cannot be called brilliant, but some of the papers are readable and useful. Pre-eminent among them is a German view of the defects of the British military system, evincing so intimate a knowledge that one almost becomes sceptical of the author's nationality. Mr. Lang gives a very favourable account of the Austrian occupation of Bosnia, except as regards its financial aspect, and the dislike which the justice and impartiality of the Austrian administration excites among those who regarded it as an opportunity for plunder and revenge. Mr. W. S. Blunt disbelieves in the projected Indo-Mediterranean railway, and his views deserve to be compared with Captain Cameron's. Mr. Symonds criticises Mr. Arnold's preface to his selection from Wordsworth with impartiality, pointing out why Wordsworth, with all his essential superiority to Byron, is unlikely to attain the latter's European celebrity.

The North American Review puts forth an uncommonly interesting number, every article treating of some subject of immediate or historical interest. We cannot profess much sympathy with Mr. F. Harrison's exposition of Positivism, but it is impossible to withhold admiration from his eloquence and earnestness. Mr. F. Parkman combats female suffrage from the point of view of a liberal thinker, anxious above all things for the legitimate development of woman herself. Professor Yeomans enforces Mr. Herbert Spencer's claim to the origination of the evolution hypothesis, pointing out that it is by no means identical with the Darwinian theory, which is, in fact, but one of its corollaries. The writer might have been more careful in pointing out that Mr. Darwin and Mr. Wallace are as independent of Mr. Spencer as he of them. The third part of the "Diary of a Public Man" is less important than its predecessors, but still interesting. Mr. Sumner is cleverly sketched. A review of the relations between Napoleon III. and the Confederate agents in France clearly establishes his sympathy with the cause of the South, and his constant but fruitless endeavours to inveigle the English Government into aiding him to give it effect.

The most remarkable contribution to the Atlantic Monthly is Professor Goldwin Smith's rather overdone but still impressive warning of the moral results which may ensue on changes of theological opinion. Scribner, among a number of interesting articles, has the first part of a critical estimate of the late Bayard Taylor, the continuation of Mr. H. James's Confidences, and vivid reminiscences, by H. J. Raymond, of the manner and conversation of Daniel Webster

A familiar proverb touching a bear's skin is recalled by the facility with which the Gentleman's Magazine distributes Cabinet offices among the members of the Opposition; nor, perhaps, is the matter much mended by the saving clause that these changes may not take place till the next Parliament but one. Who can forecast the political situation at that period? Mrs. Linton's novel is as powerful as ever, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy's translations from the French poets display a versatility qualifying him to grapple equally well with the easy vers de société of Cazalis and the grand sonnets of Sully Prudhomme. André Lemoyne's "Marguerite" is a particularly lovely poem. A paper on American storm-warnings contains a useful table, indicating the fulfilment or failure of the predictions.

Temple Bar parts with "Probation," long its leading feature, and includes among its lighter matter an extremely pretty story, entitled "The Romance of Pygmalion and Galatea," a good account of the great Portuguese minister Pombal, and a pleasant chat about Lyme Regis. Time is fairly entertaining, but has little of especial note except its serial stories. In Belgravia, besides the continuation of "Donna Quixote," we remark Mrs. Linton's finely-felt essay on "Young Lions," "Irish Folk-Lore," and a most amusing sketch of Swanage from the lively pen of Mr. James Payn. The Month is chiefly remarkable for an article in support and explanation of the Pope's recent Encyclical enjoining the study of St. Thomas Aquinas, and enunciating the proposition that "philosophy was substantially perfected for all time by the labours of the Angelic Doctor."

Mrs. Riddell's tale "Daisies and Buttercups" is, of course, the strong point of Home. In the present instalment there is a pause, a gathering up of forces for further progress; and we have photographic studies of Mr. Rodewald and Mr. Smith, of the former especially, given at what may be thought undue detail, unless, as is probable, these persons are to take prominent parts in the tale. In the present number "Great Heart" increases in interest.

The Magazine of Art, issued by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, commences a new volume with several fresh features of interest. In the first place, it is enlarged from thirty-two to forty pages without any increase of price, and the editor announces a series of prize competitions for art-students which will afford an excellent opportunity for undeveloped talent, and cannot fail to have a healthy and stimulating effect on young artists. The programme for the coming year promises an abundance of instructive and entertaining reading, and the present number is varied and interesting. The first part of The Quiver, by the same firm, published under the new arrangement for issuing it purely as a monthly magazine, presents a most attractive appearance; and this alteration in the construction of the magazine bids far to improve its character (already excellent) as well as its appearance. Cassell's Family Magazine contains the usual amount of varied excellence, pictorial and descriptive; and it is announced that on the 25th inst. will be issued the first part of the new volume of this magazine, with a charming coloured frontispiece entitled "Sympathy." A good programme is set forth for the coming year. Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin, and Co. also publish a work on Ferns, by James Britten, with coloured plates, painted from nature by D. Blair; a New and Revised Edition of Old and New London; a re-issue of their Technical Educator; Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; European Ferns, with Coloured Illustrations from Nature; the Illustrated History of the Russo-Turkish War; and an Illustrated Book of the Dog. Cassell's Illustrated Almanack for 1880 has been issued.

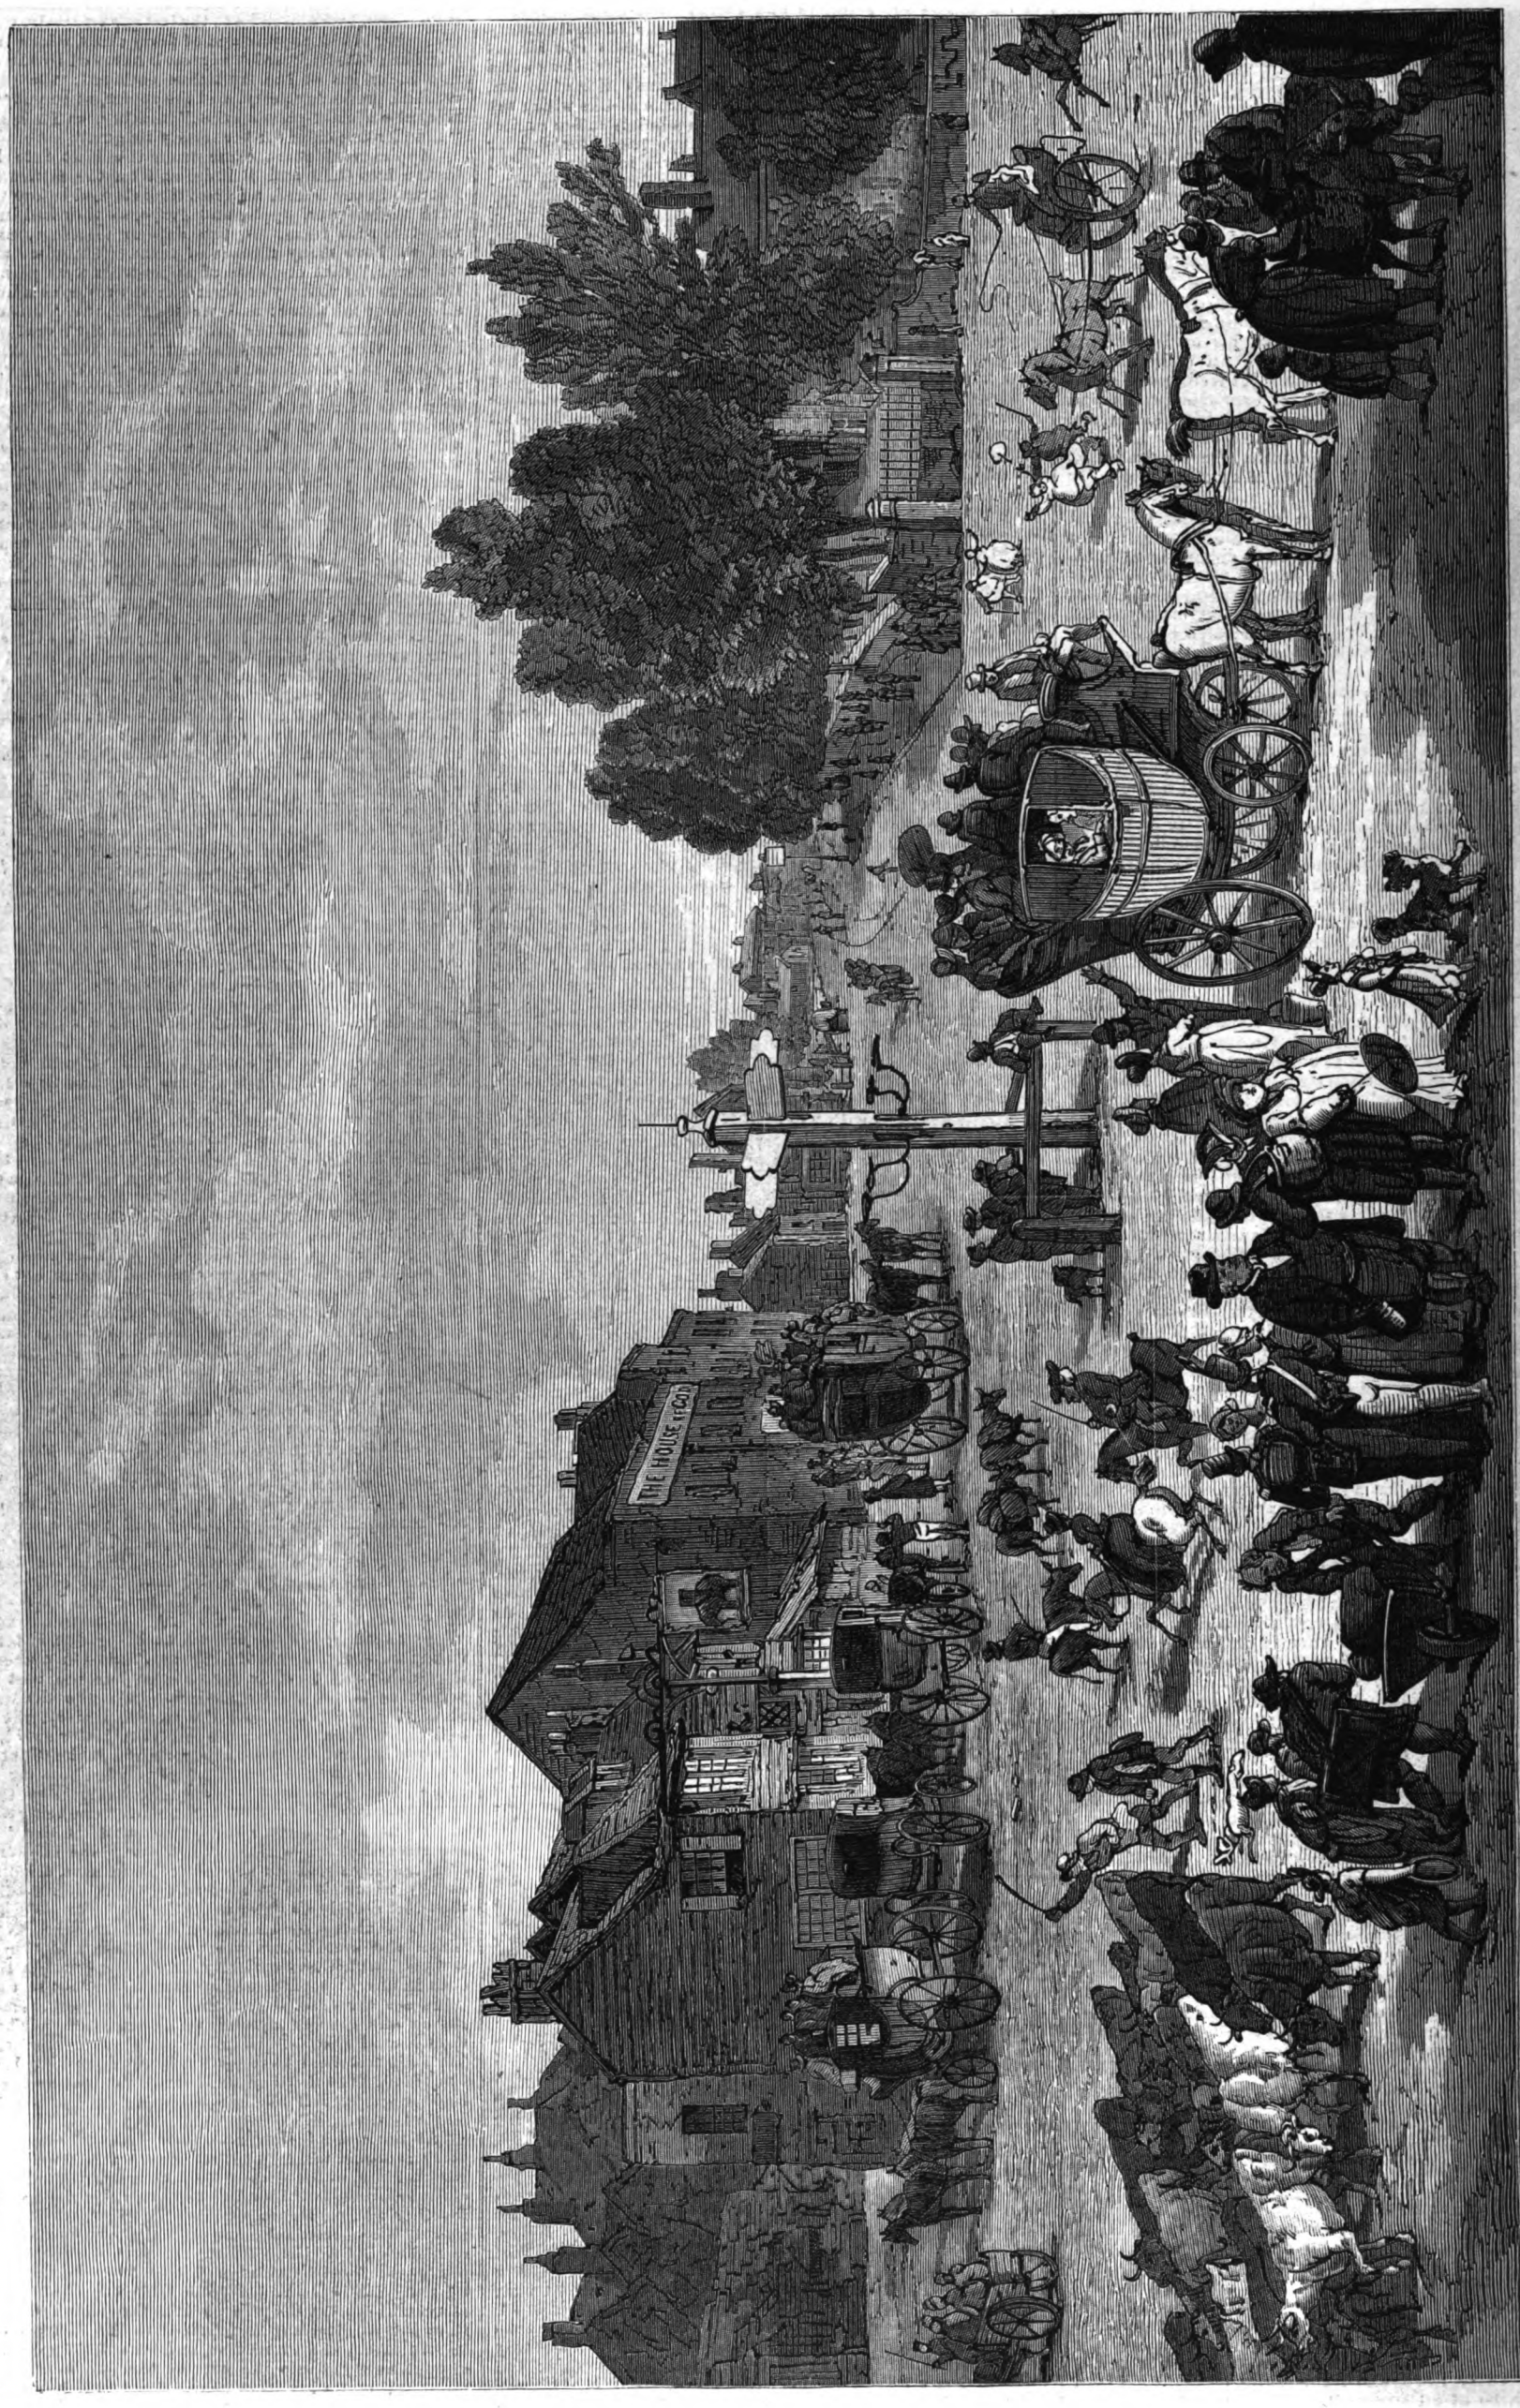
We have also to acknowledge the receipt of Good Words, London Society, St. James's Magazine, Tinsley's Magazine, the Argosy, the Churchman's Monthly Magazine, Charing-Cross, Science Gossip, Men of Mark, the Theatre, Greenhouse Favourites, Heath's Fern World, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Familiar Wild Flowers, Haydn's Dictionary of Popular Domestic Medicine, Haydn's Bible Dictionary, Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, Josephus, Science for All, Mission Life, Excelsior, Kind Words, Christian Age, Golden Childhood, the Animal World, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal of Dress and Needlework, Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal, the Ladies' Treasury, Weldon's Ladies' Journal; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardener's Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Weekly Welcome, Social Notes, Young People's Paper, Sunday Reading for the Young, the Christian Age, and the Boys' Own Paper.

THE LAST HARVEST OF THE YEAR.

The harvests of the year are five—bark, hay, corn, hops, and orchard fruit. The first four have been described in these columns, and we now come to the last one—namely, that autumn gathering of cider apples and of perry pears, which is called the "orchard harvest," which harvest is followed by the conversion into beverages of the fruit thus gathered; the pears, when crushed, producing perry, and the apples, when put "wondrous ripe, into a cider-press's gripe," making, as Thomson calls it, "the piercing cider for the thirsty tongue."

Apples and pears came from the East into Italy, and thence into Gaul and Britain, and on the settlement of the Romans in our island, no great time elapsed before three wines were made—pear, apple, and grape, as they had brought the vine-tree with them. Apples date from Adam, as we know, and we have many records of them. Thus, we are told in "Pomona," that orchards of apple-trees were planted by the Druids in the vicinity of their sacred groves, as a nurse to the all-healing mistletoe; and we read in the "History of the Anglo-Saxons" that the Britons in the fifth century planted hedges, vineyards, gardens, and "orchards;" and "apple-gardens" are mentioned in Domesday Book. Cider, according to an old MS. called the "Liber Landavensis," was first made by monks in Amorica, which we now call Brittany; but the earliest mention of that apple-wine in England is contained in a deed of the date of 1205, in which one Robert de Evermue was allowed to hold two lordships in Norfolk—those of Redham and Stokesley—by petty serjeantry, "and the payment of 200 pearmains, and 400 hogsheads of wine made from pearmains," into the Exchequer, on the Feast of St. Michael, yearly.

The chief cider shires are those of Worcester and Hereford; and from the natural formation of the country—its sheltered woody hills and sunny slopes — fruit-trees luxuriate there as in walled gardens. Worcestershire, says Grindon, in his "British and Garden Botany," was famous for apples in the reign of Henry III.; and in 1276 apples and pears from that county were grown in the Royal garden at Westminster. Cider must have been in use by the middle of the fourteenth century, as Chaucer, in his "Monke's Tale," makes allusion to it; but the quality of it at that date was no doubt poor, for we find, even in 1522, that apple-grafts had to be brought from Syria, to improve the growth of our own crab stocks. Pear-grafts, however, had long been used, as a record exists of their purchase by the Earl of Lincoln for his garden in Holborn, and by the Earl of Warwick for the orchards at his house in Warwick-lane; those orchards—between Newgate-street and Paternoster-row—where, as is recounted in the Coroners' rolls of that period, boys met with fatal accidents while stealing apples. It was not, however, until 1606 that the planting of "cider" orchards became general in England. Worcestershire soil suits both apples and pears, the latter especially, as they like a strong deep loam, with some limestone under; and both trees will grow there to the size of an oak, and bear thirty bushels of fruit, from which can be made 200 gallons of cider or perry. Though the Romans but knew twenty-two sorts of apples, the named varieties of them now number 2000. The folk-lore of the apple is so very extensive, that we are unable to touch on it in the limits of this column; but to those who are interested in the subject it will repay perusal.



With respect to pears, which were so often grown in monastic gardens, we still have some of an olden date. Thus, of the Bergamottes, the autumn one was known in the time of Cæsar, and the Easter one in the reign of Elizabeth; while of that splendid sort, the Bon Chrétien, the summer one was in use in 1629 and the winter one in 1727; and other kinds might be instanced did space permit. The largest pear-orchard in England is one in Kent, where nearly 250 sorts are grown, and the oldest is at Newland, near Malvern, which has existed for more than 400 years. Worcestershire, says Dr. Bull, was so famous for its pears at an early period that they were adopted as an emblem by the people of that county; and this statement is borne out by Drayton, who states, in his poetical account of the Battle of Agincourt, that the feudal retainers of the Beauchamps and other great landowners, who owed suit and service to the Crown, bore, as their standard in the field, "a pear-tree laden with fruit;" and to this day the arms of "the Faithful City" are three black pears, those pears which are called iron-hearted.

What is termed in England the "orchard" harvest, and in Canada the "apple" harvest, begins in October, with the hand-picking of pot fruit; and in the latter country the workers work to the ring of hammers, as the fruit is placed at once in casks, and headed-in for exportation. Apples may be divided into three classes—culinary, dessert, and for crushing. Of these, the best of the first class are the Keswick Codling, Blenheim Orange, and Warner's King; of the second, as being fine in texture and rich in flavour, the Ribston Pippin, Pitmaston pine-apple, and the Irish peach; while for cider-apples the best are those which, as is proved by analysis, have the densest juice—namely, the Siberian and the Golden Harvey, the Downton and the Golden Pippin, the Siberian bitter-sweet, and the Fox-whelp, and these are the sorts which the Gloucester men use. The Worcester and Hereford makers, however, incline to other sorts, such as the Cherry Pearmain, Red Quarenden, Queening, and Redstreak, the last-named one being a favourite, as is shown by Philips in his poem of "Cider," where he eulogises that apple thus—"Let every tree in every garden own the Redstreak as supreme;" and says, alluding to the county where it most succeeds, "Hail, Herefordian plant, that dost disdain all other fields."

Pears, also, may be classed into three like divisions; of which the best bakers are the Catillac and the great St. Germain, which, as a curiosity for the dinner-table, sells at 36s. each in Covent-garden, while amongst the best of the luscious pears are the early Jargonelle, Bon Chrétien, Jersey Louise Bonne, and the Chaumontel, which fetches £5 per hundred in the Channel Islands. Of perry pears the best of all are the Barland, and next to those Huffcap, Moorcroft, Linton, and Longdon. The Lord Suffield and Wellington are the best bearing apples, and the hardiest pears are the Hessle and the Marie Louise.

At the end of October, when hand-picking has ceased, perry is made, and cider-fruit shaken down with some long barbed poles, which goes on through November till the windfall cider has been made for the men, and the apples are heaped together, while in December, when the fruit has "frosted," cider-making is continued for home use and sale by one of three modes of making it—that is, with the nut-mill, the stone-mill, or the scratcher; the former being worked by hand, and the latter by horse-power. The scratcher tears the apples, but as the stone-mill crushes the pips as well, the Hereford men prefer it, as it thus gives a special flavour to the drink made by it. With the majority of makers, and for ordinary cider, all sorts of apples are put into the mill, as the sweet ones counteract the sour; and when they have been completely crushed, the pulp is spread upon cider-hairs, which are piled beneath the press, and then screwed down until the juice flows out, which juice being conveyed by troughs from the press to the vault, is there casked and left, till time has fined it.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The first morning performance of the season took place on Saturday last, when "Carmen" was repeated. In the evening "Les Huguenots" was given, and included the fine performances of Madame Pappenheim as Valentina, Madame Trebelli as Urbano, and Signor Fancelli as Raoul, the last-named artist having appeared for the first time this season. Mdlle. Ilma di Murska was to have sustained the character of Margherita di Valois, but was prevented by indisposition, and was replaced, at very short notice, by Mdlle. Lido, who sang the florid music of the part with much fluency and taste. The parts of Marcello, di Nevers, and di San Bris were efficiently filled respectively by Signor Pinto, Mr. Carleton, and Signor Rota. On the previous Thursday Mdlle. Lido had shown similar readiness as a substitute for Mdlle. di Murska (from the same cause) in the character of Filina in "Mignon." This opera was repeated on Monday; and on Tuesday "Rigoletto" gave occasion for the reappearance of Mdlle. Ilma di Murska after her recent indisposition. As Gilda, this lady sang artistically, but appeared not to have entirely recovered her powers. Signor Pantaleoni, as the Jester, sang and acted with much dramatic power, especially in the scene with the courtiers in the palace of the Duke. The music of this latter character was given by Signor Fancelli with great effect, as was that of Maddalena by Madame Trebelli—Signor Pinto having been an efficient Sparafucile. "Carmen" was repeated on Wednesday. For Thursday "Robert le Diable" was announced, and for the following evening "Le Nozze di Figaro." To-day (Saturday) the second morning performance is to take place, "Faust" being the opera; and for the evening "Aïda" is promised, with Signor Fancelli's first assumption here of the character of Radamès.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.

"Marigold," the so-called opéra-comique produced here last week, belongs (like so many similarly miscalled pieces of its kind) to the class of burlesque. It is an adaptation, from the French, of "Le Droit du Seigneur," the music of which is by M. Leon Vasseur. The English version is by Mr. Arthur Matthison, who has made a good translation, and has purified the work by the omission of the many objectionable passages occurring in the original. There is no need to detail at length the trifling incidents of a weak plot based on the prohibition by a burlesque Baron of marriage in his dominions, and the removal of the restriction as a result of the contrivances of Catinou, a vivacious peasant girl, who thus ensures her union with her lover, Berzelius, as well as that of another pair of lovers, Bibolais and Marigold, the former of whom turns out to be the long-lost son of the Duke de Nocesdéfendues, on whose territory the absurd action is supposed to take place.

The music is of the usual burlesque kind—a series of lively and demonstrative dance tunes, there being little constructive power shown in the concerted pieces, or elsewhere, such as really deserves the name of composition. It is only fair to say, however, that the audience on the first night received every movement with enthusiastic applause, and required a repetition of most of them, the really pretty song for Catinou (with chorus), "Their blades were seen," having been several times encored. In this, and throughout the piece, Miss Kate Sullivan (as Catinou) sang and acted with excellent perception and realisation of the humour of the character. The movement just specified, the sestet and chorus, the trio for Marigold, Catinou, and Bibolais, in the second act, and the finale of that act, are the best pieces throughout the work. Miss Mulholland was a graceful representative of Marigold, and gave her songs, "As you know," "My mother," and "I cannot think of love," very expressively. Miss F. Edwards was a good representative of the pompous Baroness, and Mr. F. Wood was efficient in the part of Bibolais, and gained much applause for his delivery of the ballad, "Adieu, beloved verdant grove." Mr. G. Mudie, as the old Duke, displayed histrionic ability remarkable in so young an actor, and Mr. M. Dwyer and Mr. A. Rousby gave good caricatures, respectively, of the parts of Berzelius and the Baron Ferdinand.

A well-selected orchestra, and a chorus to match, have been engaged; with an efficient conductor in the person of M. Van Biene, the well-known violoncellist. The costumes and scenery (the latter by Messrs. Gordon, Harford, and F. Lloyds) are excellent. The reception of the piece on the first night was entirely successful.

Madame Schuch Proska (of Dresden) again sang at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, with a repetition of the success which attended her first appearance there at the previous Saturday afternoon concert. The occasion now referred to brought forward, for the first time here, Miss Hope Glenn, who produced a highly favourable impression by the display of a fine contralto voice and refined style in Haydn's "Spirit-Song" and the air "Quando a te lieta," from Gounod's "Faust." A cleverly written "Prelude and Fugue" for the orchestra, by Mr. F. Davenport, was performed for the first time with much success, and Miss Bessie Richards appeared for the first time here, and was well received in her performance of Ferdinand Hiller's pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor. The other items of the programme were Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony and the introduction to the third act of Wagner's "Meistersinger," and the "Dance of Apprentices" and the "Procession of Mastersingers," from the same opera, as adapted for concert performance by the composer.

The twenty-second season of the Monday Popular Concerts opened this week with a varied and interesting programme, commencing with Haydn's quartet in B flat, from op. 50, which was given for the first time here, and pleased greatly, especially the Adagio movement with variations. The work was finely played by Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. The lady violinist's admirable executive powers were specially displayed in the performance of a chaconne, by Vitali, for violin solo. The first part of the concert ended with Rubinstein's sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, op. 18, which received every possible advantage from the association of Mdlle. Janotha and Signor Piatti; these artists and Madame Norman-Néruda having combined in the closing piece of the concert, Beethoven's pianoforte trio in E flat, from op. 70. Miss Lillian Bailey was the vocalist, her songs having been Handel's aria (with recitative) "Lusinghe più care"—from the opera "Alessandro"—and the cavatina, "Und ob die Wolke," from "Der Freischütz." In both these the lady displayed a soprano voice of beautiful quality and much refinement of style. She was greatly applauded in each instance. Mr. Zerbini accompanied the vocal music and the violin solo with great efficiency. The Saturday afternoon performances associated with these concerts also begin this week; the instrumentalists just named again appearing, Mr. Santley being announced as the vocalist.

The opening concert of the ninth season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society (conducted by Mr. Barnby) took place on Thursday evening, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was the oratorio, with the special attraction of Madame Albani's appearance as the principal solo soprano. The other solo vocalists named in the programme were Madame Sterling, Misses C. Clelland and Dones, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Kearton, Mr. S. Smith, and Herr Henschel.

The fourteenth season of Mr. John Boosey's attractive ballad concerts will begin (again at St. James's Hall) on Wednesday evening, Nov. 19. The programme announces the appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and other eminent vocalists.

DEATH OF MR. GRUNEISEN.

Mr. Charles Lewis Gruneisen died on Saturday at his residence, 16, Surrey-street, Strand, in his seventy-third year. His father was a native of Stuttgart, and was naturalised as a citizen of this country in 1796, having settled in Bloomsbury, where Charles Gruneisen was born, in 1806. At an early age he was appointed sub-editor of the Conservative Guardian. In 1837-8 he was war correspondent of the Morning Post in Spain, was taken prisoner by the Christinos, and narrowly escaped being shot. From 1839 to 1844 he was Paris correspondent of the Morning Post, and in later years was special correspondent of the Morning Herald, musical critic of the Illustrated London News, the Morning Chronicle, and the Athenæum. He was active in the origination of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, in 1847, and was one of the chief founders of the Conservative Land Society in 1852, of which he was for nearly twenty years the secretary. Mr. Gruneisen was a Conservative, and took an active interest in all movements for the promotion of Conservative principles. He was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, a member of the Society of Arts, and one of the trustees of the Newspaper Press Fund. The deceased critic was generally liked for his genial temperament, and esteemed for his honest and candid expression of opinion.

LYCEUM.

The "Merchant of Venice," which has been revived at the above theatre, has been made the vehicle for considerable spectacular display. Mr. Irving must be complimented on his disposition of the scenes, and the general arrangement of effective stage business. To the regular acting copy additions have been made from the original Shaksperean text. The last act, so often and regrettably omitted in representation, is given. The first casket scene in the third act, introducing the Prince of Morocco, and portraying the natural sophistry which induces him to place his choice on the wrong casket, is also a welcome innovation. Of course, there is one drawback to these restorations—the length of the performance, which on the first night was protracted to a late hour. The audience, however, evinced no signs of impatience; and the final fall of the curtain, close upon midnight, was the signal for loud and repeated plaudits. A criticism of the play itself would, at this late date, and after the numerous able dissertations on the subject, be superfluous. "'The Merchant of Venice,' says one of Shakspeare's commentators, "since the restoration of Charles II., has been one of the most popular plays on the English stage, and the appearance of Shylock has been the ambition of its greatest actors." We are prepared, from our own personal experiences, to endorse this statement. From time immemorial the character has been essayed by our most eminent tragedians, and Mr. Henry Irving but adds another to the list of its numerous exponents. In some respects the last-named gentleman gives an entirely new rendering of the wily and, in our opinion, somewhat oppressed Israelite. Of the reviled Jew he gives, as far as possible, a humanised portraiture, exhibiting, as points of contrast to his craft, avarice, and greed of vengeance, sparks of humanity that lie dormant in him, especially evidenced in his feeling for his daughter, Jessica, and his inordinate love of his despised and persecuted race. The actor makes the most of this phase of the character, and thus relieves it from the tedium of perpetual execration which otherwise pervades it. Even after the Jew's desertion by his daughter, Mr. Irving introduces the paternal element as interposing between him and his maledictory utterances. His acting in this scene was exceedingly fine. Some exception might be taken in the earlier scenes to the violence of the transition from a feeling of abject servility to one of intense hatred, the same coming upon the audience occasionally with the force of a concussion. But, as a whole, the performance is an artistic study, and adds another to the list of Mr. Irving's histrionic triumphs. The rôle of Portia fell to the lot of Miss Ellen Terry. This lady's success in the character has already been chronicled. Her acting throughout, especially in the earlier portions of the play, is characterised by a charming simplicity and naïveté. A little more force infused into the celebrated trial-scene, where Portia turns the tables on the uncompromising Jew, and the assumption would be perfect. The Antonio of Mr. Forrester, the Bassanio of Mr. Barnes, and the Gratiano of Mr. F. Cooper were all deserving of high commendation. Mr. S. Johnson gave an effective rendering of Launcelot Gobbo. The characters of Nerissa and Jessica found able representatives in Miss Florence Terry and Miss Alma Murray. The minor parts were adequately filled. The costumes are magnificent, and the views of Venice, executed by Messrs. Telbin, Craven, Hann, and Cuthbert, are graphically depicted. We prognosticate a long run for this successful Shakspearean venture.

DRURY LANE.

Another Shaksperean revival signalises the reopening of this theatre. The play is "Henry the Fifth;" the version, that produced by the late Mr. Charles Calvert at Manchester. The hero of Agincourt was then represented by Mr. George Rignold. This gentleman subsequently enacted the character in America and Australia; and he now, having assumed the management for a short autumn season, transplants the version, with certain alterations of his own, to the boards of Old Drury. The interest of "Henry the Fifth," as most of our readers are aware, culminates in the hero, the other characters revolving like lesser lights around the central luminary, to which they give additional lustre. Of all Shakspeare's plays "Henry the Fifth" is perhaps the most replete with action; wars and rumours of wars coming upon us in quick bewildering succession that leave little time for critical reflection. The title-rôle of the drama comes under the category of declamatory parts, and demands from the actor great elocutionary skill and much force and vigour, to give it due significance. At the time we write we have a vivid recollection of the military hero as personated by Mr. Phelps on the occasion of the production of this play at Sadler's Wells. Mr. George Rignold is well qualified to fulfil the requirements of the character. His robust elocution enables him to give the patriotic speeches with unerring quantities, that secure from the audience an instant recognition. His imposing manly figure also serves to heighten the effect. We may mention that the actor was enthusiastically received by the audience, being summoned six times before the curtain to receive the congratulations of his admirers. Mr. Ryder was exceedingly effective as the Archbishop of Canterbury. He also enacted the character of Williams, the soldier. The Fluellen of Mr. Stanislaus Calhaem was much enjoyed by the audience. Mr. Odell gave full effect to the boastful cowardice of Pistol, and Mr. Charles Harcourt was sufficiently dignified as Montjoy, the Ambassador. Miss B. Henderson as Chorus spoke the prologue in a manner deserving of commendation. An instance of juvenile precocity was given in the Boy of Master Grattan. The other characters were adequately rendered. The piece is effectively mounted, the battle-fields being especially well-arranged, and the whole giving evidence of careful stage-management. The version presents some slight re-disposition of the scenes. The "March of the Men of Harlech" is interpolated into the fourth act, and some choruses of a religious character are effectively introduced. We wish Mr. Rignold every success in his hazardous experiment.

CONNAUGHT.

The late Amphitheatre, Holborn, remodelled, redecorated, and rechristened, has opened under the management of Mr. J. W. Currans. Tan and sawdust have been removed, a new tier of private boxes has been provided, together with a grand promenade, foyer, &c., and little now remains to remind the visitor of the class of entertaiment to which the building was previously devoted. The first item in the programme is a farce by Mr. G. L. Gordon, entitled "Bachelor's Hall." The story of this is simple. A couple of young husbands pass themselves off as bachelors, and in this character are amusingly confronted with their wives. The interest of this is ably sustained by Messrs. Cameron and Wilton, and Misses Emmeline Cole and Nellie Vane. The staple commodity of the bill, however, is a comic opera, entitled "Alcantara," produced some years ago in America, and which, we believe, has been occasionally performed by Mr. Carl Rosa. It appears for the first time now in London. The story, which has a striking resemblance to "Twice Killed," is of a somewhat farcical nature. Carlos, the hero, and Isabella, daughter of Dr. Paracelsus, of Alcantara, ignorant that their parents have preconcerted their union, become mutually attached. In this position Carlos obtains surreptitious entrance into the house of Dr. Paracelsus in a basket, which basket is afterwards thrown by one Ines and the aforesaid Doctor into the river, when they straightway become aware of the fact that a man had been concealed in it. Carlos had, however, previously made his escape, and, being invited by the Doctor to take some wine, imbibes a strong opiate. He falls into a deep sleep, which the doctor fears may end in dissolution. In this dilemma the doctor conceals the hero under a sofa, when he is surprised by the appearance of Balshazar, the father of Carlos. Much confusion ensues. Ultimately Carlos awakes from his trance, explanations take place, and the lovers are united. Much of the music, composed by Julius Eichberg (the words by Mr. B. E. Woolf), was encored. Mr. J. A. Arnold infused considerable humour into the character of Dr. Paracelsus. Mr. Woodfield's pleasing tenor voice was shown to great advantage in the rôle of Carlos. The part of Balshazar was effectively rendered by Mr. Osborne. Madame Tonnelier as the Doctor's wife, Miss Blanche Ellerman as Isabella, and Miss L. Rohan as Inez, contributed greatly to the success of the opera. There was considerable applause at the fall of the curtain. We opine, however, that the public will require some stronger attraction to insure the ultimate success of the speculation. The whole concludes with an operatic ballet entitled "Lotus Land." We shall not attempt to analyse the story, which we confess is too subtle for our comprehension. The whole is somewhat bewildering, and begets tedium. Moreover, the vocal efforts of certain members of the company were not quite fortunate. The graceful dancing of Mdlle. Luna, however, redeemed all shortcomings; and we doubt not that in the end "Lotus Land" will claim a large share of public favour.

ADELPHI.

The late Mr. Andrew Halliday's version of "Nicholas Nickleby" has been revived at this theatre. The cast is a strong one. Mr. Vezin's make-up as Newman Noggs is admirable, and his acting perfect. Mr. Henry Neville gives an artistic rendering of John Browdie, Mr. Fernandez again appears as Ralph Nickleby, and Mr. Taylor's Squeers is a thoroughly realistic performance. Miss Lydia Foote infuses considerable pathos into the character of Smike, Mrs. Alfred Mellon gives a capital embodiment of the vixenish Mrs. Squeers, and Miss Harriet Coveney as the mincing Miss Squeers is irresistibly ludicrous. Mr. Terriss as Nicholas Nickleby is also exceedingly effective. The other characters are ably supported by Messrs. Brooke, Irish, R. Bateman, Misses Emily Duncan, Clara Jecks, and Emma Heffer. The piece is well mounted.

DEATH OF MR. BUCKSTONE.

The theatrical public have already learned with great regret of the demise, not unexpected, of the deservedly admired comedian and manager of the Haymarket, Mr. John Baldwin Buckstone. He died on Friday week at his residence, Bell Green Lodge, Lower Sydenham, in his seventy-eighth year. Mr. Buckstone was born at Hoxton, Sept. 14, 1802, his father being a respectable citizen of Bishopsgate. After completing his education at an academy near Walworth he was designed by his father for the navy, but entered instead a solicitor's office, though he showed an early inclination for the drama, having before his seventeenth year composed two tragedies and a comedy. Ere long he determined on becoming an actor, and commenced his career in a barn at Peckham, occasionally used as a theatre, in the character of Captain Aubri in "The Dog of Montargis." In 1821 he succeeded in getting an engagement at another barn at Wokingham, Berkshire, for one week. Soon after he joined another barn-company in Northamptonshire, but, the magistrates refusing them a license, he migrated to London with a companion, the two having but ninepence between them, and occupying two days in the journey. Ultimately he got engaged for utility business on a circuit, and had the honour of acting with Edmund Kean, on one occasion performing Gratiano to the master's Shylock. In 1823 he appeared at the Surrey, his old friend Watkins Burroughs having become the manager of that transpontine establishment. The part he played was that of Peter Smirke, in the burletta of "The Armistice." In 1826 he appeared at the Adelphi in a play of his own, "Luke the Labourer." Subsequently, at the same theatre, "The Wreck Ashore," "Victorine," and other dramas, dividing the popularity of these pieces with John Reeves. Mr. Webster becoming the proprietor of that theatre, Mr. Buckstone wrote for him "Green Bushes" and "The Flowers of the Forest." In 1837 he was engaged by that manager for the Haymarket, and thenceforth acted exclusively at that theatre, until his departure for America in 1845. Accompanied by Mrs. Fitzwilliams, he appeared that year at the Park Theatre, New York. Returning to England, he was engaged for Drury Lane by Mr. Alfred Bunn, and produced there more than one amusing farce. His management of the Haymarket commenced on Easter Monday, 1853, and continued for twenty-four years. In 1876, however, he was induced to accept a complimentary benefit at Drury Lane; but he continued to play a short time afterwards at the Haymarket. His physical infirmities rendered it impossible for him at length to remain on the stage. His third son, Sidney, died on Sept. 18 last; other family afflictions, moreover, clouded his last days. Mr. Buckstone's persistent efforts merited a better destiny.

The marriage took place in the parish church at Clifton, on Sept. 1, 1851, and the only issue thereof is our present Vice-Consul at Bastia.

CHARCOAL BURNING, EPPING FOREST.

Some tracts of woodland in the Epping and Hainault Forest districts of West Essex, not above fifteen miles from the heart of busy London, are devoted specially to the growth of the hornbeam, a tree which is scarcely known in many other parts of England. Its wood is the best material for charcoal, and the commercial value of that substance makes it well worth cultivation. The process of burning, which is performed on the spot, or near it, when the trees have been cut down, is a peculiar branch of rustic industry, and those employed in this business, often dwelling through a long summer-time in simple huts or booths, where they lie in readiness to tend the fires beneath the heaped masses of wood covered with pieces of turf, have their characteristic features and ways. It is a work requiring great experience, as well as incessant vigilance during many days and nights, before the perfect charcoal can be extracted and deposited in the bags, to be carried away and ground. The appearance of a burning heap, with jets of flame and puffs of smoke issuing from many crevices in its sides, cannot easily be forgotten by those who have seen it at night.

PROBLEM No. 1864.
By C. E. TUCKETT, Bristol.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Game played a few days ago at Birmingham between the Rev. S. W. EARNSHAW and another AMATEUR.—(Two Knights' Defence.)

WHITE (Amateur).	BLACK (Mr. E.)	WHITE (Amateur).	BLACK (Mr. E.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	17. K takes B	Q to R 7th (ch)
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	18. K to B 3rd	Q to R 6th (ch)
3. B to B 4th	Kt to B 3rd	19. K to K 2nd
4. Kt to Kt 5th	Kt takes K P

This variation of the defence leads to a lively game, but, if properly opposed, White soon acquires a superior position.

5. B takes P (ch)	K to K 2nd
6. P to Q 3rd

The correct move here is 6. P to Q 4th, after which the game proceeds—

6.	P to K R 3rd
7. Kt takes Kt	K takes B, &c.
6.	Kt to B 3rd
7. B to Kt 3rd	P to Q 4th
8. P to K B 4th

White conducts the opening very weakly. Here he should have played 8. B to K 3rd, or 8. Castles.

8.	B to K Kt 5th
9. Q to Q 2nd	K to Q 2nd

Ingenious enough; he would speedily be compensated for the loss of the exchange by a good attacking position.

10. Castles	B to B 4th (ch)
11. K to R sq	Q to K sq
12. P takes P	Q takes P
13. Kt to B 7th	Q to K R 4th
14. Kt takes R	B to Q 3rd
15. P to K R 3rd

15. R to B 4th, followed by 16. Q to B 2nd, appears his best resource; the move in the text is fatal.

15.	B takes P
16. Q to Kt 5th	B takes P (ch)

19.	R to K sq (ch)
20. B to K 3rd	Kt to Q 5th (ch)
21. K to Q 2nd	Q takes R
22. B to R 4th (ch)	P to B 3rd
23. Q takes Kt P (ch)	R to K 2nd
24. Q takes R (ch)

He must either lose the Queen or be mated; e.g.:—

24. Q to R 6th	Kt to K 5th (ch)
25. P takes Kt	Kt to B 6th
26. K to B 3rd	Q to B 5th.

Mate.

24.	K takes Q
25. B takes Kt	P to Kt 4th
26. P to Kt 3rd

Obviously, retreating the Bishop is useless, as Black in reply advances the Q B P.

26.	P takes B
27. Kt to R 3rd	B to Kt 5th (ch)

Black's play throughout has been highly ingenious.

28. P to B 3rd	Q takes R
29. B takes Kt (ch)	K takes B
30. P takes B	Q takes R P (ch)
31. Kt to B 2nd	P takes P,

and White resigned.

Our veteran contributor "Delta" sends another instalment of his reminiscences of old-time chess-players. "My last visit to the Café de la Régence was in 1855, when I played a long and tough game with Tassanari, which ended in a draw. My acquaintance with Mr. Donaldson, of the Edinburgh Chess Club, began about 1845. I played with him, in all, five games, of which he won three and I two. None of these were recorded. Mr. Donaldson had, however, fallen off from his best play then. It was his beautiful manœuvring of his Knight in the centre of the field which struck me as the peculiarity of his play. My principal adversary at chess from 1844 to 1864 was Gamma. I consider that at our best we were exactly equal in strength at chess. We played together at one time twenty games, all K. B. Gambits, of which we won eight each and two draws. I am very sorry to say that the state of Gamma's health has prevented him from playing chess for some years past. Except with Gamma, at my house or his, my only practice at chess with Scotch players for twenty years or so after 1844 was when I debouched once, or at most twice, a year from my home and played a few games at Edinburgh and Glasgow. My strongest opponents were Mr. Paterson, of Edinburgh, who afterwards went to Glasgow, and Sheriff Bell. My first chess-play in London was in 1849, at Ries' Divan, in the Strand, where I played several games with Williams and Lowe, and drew a game, at his own favourite opening, with Captain Evans. About a week after I ran down to Brighton, and there met with Staunton for the first time. Harrwitz and Horwitz were playing a match there, which was duly recorded in the Chessplayers' Chronicle. They appeared to me to be quite equal in strength. Harrwitz visited me at my hotel in the evening, and we had two games, which were drawn. When in London, in 1851, I again had the pleasure of meeting with Staunton and Horwitz at Staunton's house. We had no play there. I remember giving it as my opinion that Anderssen would keep his own, at least, with all the players. I certainly did not anticipate that Staunton would be so signally defeated; 'the battle, however, is not (at chess) always to the strong.' I met with Szen and Anderssen at Ries' Divan."

We have received from Mr. C. Parkinson, Rock Cottage, Ventnor, a letter to which we willingly give insertion:—"May I appeal to your chess readers on behalf of the family of the late Captain Evans. Since his death, the widow and grandchildren have been living in extreme poverty, which now amounts to absolute want; £50 would enable my old friend's widow to secure a small cottage in Kent as a home, and ward off starvation through the coming winter. Are there no old friends who remember the fine old inventor of the Evans Gambit?"

In the course of his provincial tour Mr. Blackburne visited the Manchester Athenæum Chess Club on Friday, the 31st ult., where he was cordially welcomed by a large assemblage of the local chessplayers. On the evening of his arrival he played against all comers simultaneously, sustaining the onset during the space of four hours, and winning twenty games, losing two, and drawing three. On Saturday, after competing sans voir against six picked champions of the City, he was entertained at dinner by the members of the Athenæum Club.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Sept. 4, 1865) of August, Baron Von Cetto, late of No. 6, Hill-street, Berkeley-square, formerly Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the King of Bavaria to the Court of Great Britain, who died on Aug. 7 last, was proved in London on the 21st ult. by Antoine Baron de Cetto the son, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testator leaves to his wife, in addition to the jointure secured to her by settlement, his carriages, horses, domestic establishment, linen, and silver, and the ready money at his bankers in London and Munich; the silver at her death to go to his eldest son, Antoine. The residue of his property is to be divided in various proportions between his four sons—Antoine, Ludwig, Max, and Franz.

The Scotch confirmation, under seal of the Commissariot of the County of Edinburgh, dated the 14th ult., of the Right Honourable Edward Strathearn, Baron Gordon of Drumearn, Stirlingshire, and of Randolph-crescent, Edinburgh, who died at Brussels on Aug. 21 last, granted to Agnes, Lady Gordon, the widow, Alexander Drysdale, James Badenach Nicolson, Edmund Baxter, and John Edward Gordon and Arthur Gordon, the sons, the executors nominate, was sealed in London on the 20th ult., the personal estate amounting to upwards of £11,000.

The will (dated Dec. 4, 1876) with a codicil (dated the 14th of the same month) of Lady Charlotte Anne Gordon, the widow of the Rev. Lord George Gordon, late Rector of Chesterton, Huntingdonshire, late of No. 9, Curzon-street, Mayfair, who died on Aug. 23 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by John Copley Wray, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. There are specific gifts of pictures by Gainsborough, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Murillo, and others, and a silver hunting-cap given by George IV., when Prince of Wales, to Mrs. Sophia Catherine Musters, and other articles, among relatives and friends, and other bequests. The residue is to go in the same way as the proceeds of the Woodstone estate under the will of her late father.

The will (dated Jan. 17, 1853) with two codicils (dated Aug. 7, 1875, and May 3, 1879, of Mr. Henry Coles, late of Clifton Lodge, Thornton-road, Clapham Park, who died on the 1st ult., was proved on the 29th ult. by George Coles, the brother, and Edward Bailey, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves to his nephew, Edward George Coles, £500; to his servant, Mary Davies, an annuity of £30 for life; to his coachman, Smith, £100; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his brothers and sisters who shall survive him, in equal shares.

The will (dated Oct. 5, 1878) of Mr. John Hodges, late of No. 17, Northampton Park, Canonbury, who died on the 4th ult., was proved on the 25th ult. by John Hodges and Thomas Hodges, the sons, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Hodges, £100 and his furniture and effects; he also gives her his residence for life. There are legacies to his executors, sons, and daughter; and the residue of his property is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his sons and daughter.

The will (dated Dec. 21, 1865) of Mrs. Ann Eliza Green, late of "The Mount," Hadley, Middlesex, who died on Sept. 17 last was proved on the 25th ult. by William Henry Freeman, the nephew, and Charles Norris Wilde, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testatrix bequeaths all her pictures by Dutch and Flemish artists to the trustees of the National Gallery; the portraits, books, and writings bequeathed to her late husband by Samuel Taylor Coleridge to the Rev. Derwent Coleridge; and considerable legacies to sisters, nephews, nieces, and others; her freehold residence "The Mount" she devises to her sister, Mrs. Mary Bell Freeman, for life, and at her decease to her said nephew, William Henry Freeman. The residue of her property she gives to her said sister.

The will (dated Feb. 7, 1877) of Mr. Paul Falconer Poole, R.A., late of Uplands, Green-hill, Hampstead, who died on Sept. 22 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by John Mogford and Francis Henry Huntington, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Hannah Poole, £200, his freehold estate at Elstead, Surrey, and all his horses, carriages, furniture, plate, and household effects, except pictures, drawings, and sketches; to the trustees of the National Gallery any of his pictures that they may select and think worthy of being exhibited in that collection and will undertake to exhibit permanently; to his executor, Mr. Mogford, his picture of "Burning Weeds;" and legacies to his sister, Mrs. Ruth Westbury, nieces, nephews, and others The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then, subject to the payment of a few other legacies, for his five nieces, Elizabeth Brown, Julia Westbury, Lucy Westbury, Mary Steele, and Ruth Latimer Steele.

The will (dated Jan. 25, 1877) of General Sir Francis Warde, K.C.B., late of Woodside, near Amersham, Bucks, who died on May 4 last, at Reading, was proved on the 25th ult. by Captain Edward Stanley Adeane, R.N., the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The testator wishes "to be presented as my gift to the reading-room library of the non-commissioned officers of the Royal Regiment of Artillery at Woolwich the photos and pictures of my military comrades I may possess, and the picture, painted by a French artist, representing an officer of the Royal Horse Artillery, with the intention of recording the original Horse Artillery uniform, in which regiment I served for thirty-four years."

The Liverpool Corporation have unanimously elected Mr. Clement Dunscombe, M.A., C.E., borough engineer of Derby, to be borough engineer of Liverpool, at a salary of £800 per annum. There were 101 candidates for the office. The Town Council has resolved to expend £600 in an experimental application of the electric light to the large open space between St. George's Hall and the London and North-Western Railway station.—At a recent meeting of the Liverpool Tramways Company a proposal of the Corporation to purchase the company's lines for £30,000 and to give the company a lease of all new lines for seventeen years was agreed to.—An influential meeting was held at Liverpool on Monday, under the presidency of the Mayor, at the Townhall, in support of a scheme suggested by the Mercantile Marine Association to provide homes for aged mariners in connection with that port. It was proposed to raise £12,000 to carry out the project, and liberal subscriptions were announced.—The poll of the inhabitants of Liverpool in reference to the proposed new water supply from the River Vyrnwy in Montgomeryshire, adopted by the town council, was completed on Tuesday. A large majority of voters was recorded in favour of the scheme, the numbers being 21,974 for, and 19,311 against. The water committee will now proceed to take the necessary steps for obtaining parliamentary powers.—Mr C Bushell, chairman of the Mersey Tunnel Committee, has submitted to the Docks and Harbour Board a scheme for carrying out the proposed subway under the river. The estimated cost is £500,000, and the probable gross annual revenue is put down at £46,000.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade Mark "Anti-fat," registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months took three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT, sold by Wholesale and Retail Chemists, everywhere. Price 6s. 6d. per Bottle. Send stamp for pamphlet, entitled "How to get Lean without Starvation."—BOTANIC MEDICINE COMPANY, Sole Proprietors, Great Russell-street Buildings, Great Russell-street, London, W.C.

DR. DE JONGH'S (KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM, KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL,
proved by nearly thirty years' medical experience to be THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN, RICKETS AND ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that DR. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE, Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggist throughout the World. SOLE CONSIGNEES, ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1879.

Lord Mayor's Day! It has a twofold significance to English ears. It means a show, in the material sense of that term, and it has come to betoken a revelation in a political sense. It is interesting, in the first sense of it, to Londoners only; in the second, it is looked forward to with expectation by the whole people of this country, and, indeed, by the political world, abroad as well as at home. Of the Procession from Guildhall to Westminster and back again there is no need for us to speak here. It was got up, no doubt, "regardless of expense." It went off without any serious contretemps. It was witnessed by even a larger populace than usual, and, with trivial exceptions, with great good-humour. The ceremonial part of the affair closely conformed to a long list of precedents; the convivial portion of it was as satisfactory to those who "assisted" as it has commonly been. A magnificent spread is what is anticipated on such occasions; and, without entering into details where details chiefly concern the taste of individuals, we may confidently take for granted that the Feast, whilst it lasted, was agreeable enough to those who shared it.

The after-dinner speaking on Monday last does not impress us as having been particularly animated. It was towards this that the attention of the outside world was mainly directed. Between the close of one Session of Parliament and the opening of another, Lord Mayor's Day occupies a nearly equidistant position. It brings her Majesty's Government, as it were, for an hour or two at least, within range of direct speech with the people of the country. It is not understood that the opportunity will be embraced, even by the most garrulous Ministry, to lay before so promiscuous an Assembly a sketch of either their policy or their plans for the ensuing year. But it is expected that the Prime Minister, if circumstances permit of his being present, will in some discreet sentence, or luminous phrase, cast a light forward upon future probabilities, by the aid of which the public mind may catch the outline of them, though it may be indistinctly. This year there was a general tendency to the belief that Lord Beaconsfield had in reserve for the Nation a political surprise. Journalism essayed to penetrate his secret beforehand. Speeches were made for him. Disclosures of considerable importance, now on this subject, now on that, were treated as things of course. People began to think that something important, if not about to happen, was about to be announced; and there were few, probably, in Guildhall on Monday night who, when they saw Lord Beaconsfield rise to respond to the Toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," did not give place to the idea that they should leave the Banqueting-room in possession of some secret not yet made known to the general public. Their experience was not altogether an uncommon one. They were eager for a surprise, and a surprise they had; but quite of a different kind from that which they had prepared for. "Story, Lord bless you, I have none to tell, Sir." Lord Beaconsfield disappointed all journalistic prophecy. He said nothing which might not have been said by any of his audience; he revealed no secrets; he sketched no plans; he satisfied no yearnings of political curiosity. He gave us scarcely one additional topic for comment or speculation, and when he sat down his audience was about as well informed as when he rose up, save in these two respects—that he had said nothing, and that he said it well.

The opening (we might almost say the leading) topic of the Prime Minister's address was the present revival of trade. He regarded it, not as transient only, but as permanent. He relied for his conviction not merely upon the demand for iron, or even for tropical produce. There are other signs which, in his view, are decisively favourable—one especially, the activity of the manufacture of chemicals. Now, without disparaging this test of an industrial revival, we cannot help thinking that the Noble Earl laid more stress upon it than it is capable of bearing, and by overweighting his argument seriously diminished its force. We agree, however, with him that the English people have met the severe strain of the last few years with the "magic of patience," and are, therefore, entitled to high congratulations. Facts, we hope, and we incline to believe, will show that the material state of Ireland is far less anomalous, far less dangerous, than some of her advocates have broadly announced to be the case. But her Majesty's Ministers do not appear, so far as their intentions can be guessed from Lord Beaconsfield's speech, to have arrived at any conclusion that heroic remedies will be called for.

As to our Foreign Policy, the Prime Minister was even more reticent. We have "strengthened and secured our North-Western Frontier" in India; but what we are going to do with Afghanistan (which Lord Beaconsfield refers to under the general term of "Central Asia") nothing was said from which any definite inference could be drawn. The Zulu War has given the Colonists "a lesson in that art of self-preservation on which they must in future chiefly rely." We are glad that confidence is still maintained by her Majesty's Ministers in the preservation of European peace. But, like most of our fellow-countrymen, we should have been pleased to hear somewhat more in detail of the condition of the Eastern Question and the Anglo-Turkish Convention. At the same time, we quite admit that the Lord Mayor's Banquet did not present the most favourable time and place for a full exposition of the Foreign Policy of this Empire. Lord Beaconsfield probably gave as much information on Monday last as we are entitled to demand from him at a festive gathering of City magnates and officials. The fault, perhaps, to which public disappointment may be most fairly ascribed is rather that of exaggerated anticipation on the part of the political teachers of opinion than of unwonted reticence on the part of the Premier.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, returned to Balmoral Castle on Saturday last from the Glassalt Shiel, where her Majesty had passed a day or two. On Sunday the Queen attended Divine service, performed at the castle by the Rev. D. F. Ferguson, B.D., Strathblane. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice have walked and driven out daily around the Royal demesne. Viscount Sandon, who is Minister in attendance, has dined generally with the Queen, and the Marquis and Marchioness of Huntly have also dined with her Majesty. The Hon. Mary Pitt has left the castle, and the Hon. Frances Drummond has arrived as Maid of Honour in Waiting. The Court will return to Windsor Castle at the end of next week.

The Queen has forwarded one hundred guineas towards the funds of the Scottish Corporation. The 215th anniversary of the institution takes place on Dec. 1, with Lord Rosebery in the chair. Her Majesty has also commanded to be sent to the Charing-Cross and other London hospitals parcels of old linen, very valuable for surgical purposes.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales before leaving town for Sandringham attended the monthly meeting of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, at their offices in Hanover-square. The Prince attained his thirty-eighth year on Sunday. The general celebration of the auspicious occasion was deferred until Monday, but the Royal family circle at Sandringham was augmented on Saturday by the arrival of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Louise of Lorne, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Louis of Battenberg, and other guests, all of whom attended Divine service on the birthday at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Sandringham Park, with the Prince and Princess and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, the Rev. F. Hervey officiating. A beautiful tablet to the memory of the Prince's lamented sister, Princess Alice, had just been erected in the church. The work, which has been executed by Mr. J. E. Boehm, consists of a medallion portrait in marble of the Grand Duchess, with the following inscription beneath:—"To the beloved memory of Alice Maud Mary, Grand Duchess of Hesse, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland, this monument is erected by her devoted and sorrowing brother, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales." The architectural design is by Mr. Arthur Blomfield. Above and below the tablet are carved these texts—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord," "Thy will be done." A fine organ, the gift of the Prince and Princess to the church, was played for the first time. On Monday their Royal Highnesses, with some of their guests, joined the meet of the West Norfolk Hounds at Harpley, and a fair day's hunt was had. The Rev. J. P. Slight, M.A., Head Master of the King's Lynn Grammar School, with Mr. H. H. Leeper, of Trinity College, Dublin, son of the Rev. F. T. Leeper, of Cuddalore, South India, attended at Sandringham House, when Mr. Leeper received at the hands of the Prince the gold medal given annually by his Royal Highness to the head boy of the school. The labourers and workpeople upon the Royal Norfolk estates, upwards of 200 in number, were entertained at dinner in the great dining-room of the Royal mews at Sandringham; the Prince and Princess, with their daughters and all their guests and the members of the household being present during a portion of the entertainment, when the usual loyal and personal toasts were enthusiastically honoured. In the metropolis the bells of the Royal parish Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields were rang; and in the evening the tradesmen of the Prince and Princess held their twenty-first anniverary dinner in honour of the day, at Willis's Rooms, when over 240 persons sat down, the venison being sent by the Prince. Mr. Jeffs, of Regent-street, presided, supported by Mr. Melton, the hon. secretary. During the evening Mr. Melton announced that a telegram had just been received from the Prince stating that he hoped they would all pass a pleasant evening. The illuminations at the West-End were numerous. At Balmoral, Windsor, and Osborne the day was observed with due honours, and at Norwich, Lynn, Cambridge, and other towns in the Eastern Counties, the church bells were rung.

Princes Albert Victor and George, on board the Bacchante, arrived at Gibraltar on Thursday week from Messina.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre yesterday week, and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught went to the Criterion Theatre.

Princess Louise of Lorne visited the London Hospital on Thursday week, and subsequently the East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women at Shadwell. The visit was a private one. On arriving at the hospital her Royal Highness was received by Mr. Thomas Charrington (chairman) and the principal officials. The Princess visited the several wards and passed from cot to cot, distributing flowers and kindly words to the little sufferers. In the Enfield Ward the Princess evinced great interest in a case of tracheotomy, the details of which were explained to her. The case was a most successful one, the little patient being on a fair way to recovery. Her Royal Highness, after a general inspection of the institution, signed her name in the visitors' book and consented to become patroness of the hospital. The Princess has visited Mr. Colnaghi's gallery in the Haymarket, and inspected the picture by Charlemont of "The Alhambra Guard."

Prince Leopold left town on Monday, travelling from Victoria station by special train to Dover, where he embarked on board the special steamer Maid of Kent for Calais, whence his Royal Highness proceeded by mail-train, viâ Brussels, to Darmstadt.

The marriage of the Count de Hamel de Manin (eldest son of the late Jean François, twenty-first Count de Hamel de Manin) with Miss Alice Burton (youngest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Stuart Burton, of Carrigaholt Castle, county Clare) took place on Thursday week at St. George's, Hanover-square. The bridesmaids were the Comtesse Lucille and the Comtesse Blanche de Manin, sisters of the bridegroom, Miss Carter, and Miss Florence Cooke, who wore costumes of ruby velvet, trimmed with bouillonnées of a brighter shade of silk, velvet hats to correspond, with Circassian silver ornaments, the gift of the bridegroom. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr. Francis M. V. Burton, of Carrigaholt Castle, was attired in a dress of ivory-white satin, draped and trimmed with Brussels lace, and wreath of orange-blossom and Brussels lace veil. Her jewels were a diamond cross and earrings, the gift of the bridegroom. The service was performed by the Rev. T. Nolan, D.D., and the Rev. R. Hill, M.A., friends of the bride and bridegroom. The wedding breakfast was given by Mrs. Burton in Harley-street.

Marriages are arranged between Mr. Percy Bernard, eldest son of the Bishop of Tuam and private secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Miss Kirwan, only daughter of the late Mr. Denis Kirwan, of Castle Hacket, in the county of Galway; and between Mr. Harry Farquhar de Paravicini, second son of the late Mr James de Paravicini, of Datchet, and Mrs. Vane, widow of the late Mr. Morgan Vane.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT AT BRIGHTON.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, as stated in our last weekly chronicle of "The Court," were at Brighton on Tuesday, the 4th inst., to open the grand fancy bazaar at the Royal Pavilion. This bazaar was got up for the benefit of the Royal School for Daughters of Officers in the Army, which has its several establishments at Bath and at Roehampton, Putney. The sale of a variety of articles displayed by ladies at the stalls has realised £1700 to recruit the funds of that institution. Our Illustration, on the front page of this Number of our Journal, shows the Royal visitors stopping at one of the stalls to inspect some beautiful specimens of Bohemian glass-ware. The Duchess, who carried a bouquet presented to her by one of the Brighton young ladies, walked round the floor beneath the Great Dome, accompanied by her husband, and by the Mayor, Alderman Davey, with his wife, Sir Francis and Lady Seymour, Sir Howard and Lady Elphinstone, and others. Their Royal Highnesses had previously visited the Brighton Aquarium. A luncheon was provided for them at the Royal Pavilion. The Duchess received from thirty ladies, on behalf of the charity, purses of money which they had collected, and the Duke of Connaught made a brief speech, earnestly recommending the Officers' Daughters' School to public support. In the evening they returned to London.

THE MANCHESTER HOTEL, ALDERSGATE-STREET, LONDON.

This new building is situated immediately opposite the Aldersgate-street station of the Metropolitan Railway. It is in the Gothic style of architecture, built in three blocks, and contains more than 300 rooms, of which upwards of 200 are furnished as bed-rooms. The outside is of red brick, finished with stone dressings. The roofs are covered with green slates. On the ground floor are the corridor and hall, with managers' office, porter's room, spacious coffee-room, writing-room, smoking-room, lavatories, and other conveniences. All these rooms are fitted up with great taste. On the first floor are the public and private billiard-rooms, sitting-rooms, and some bed-rooms. The upper floors contain the remaining bed-rooms. At the corner of the building in Long-lane is a buffet, with grill-room, and dining-room over it. The ground floor fronting Aldersgate-street and Long-lane is divided into shops. The hotel is intended chiefly for commercial men. It is close to the warehouses and counting houses employed in the wholesale trades of Manchester, Leeds, Bradford, Sheffield, Birmingham, Glasgow, and other important manufacturing towns in England, Wales, and Scotland. For the convenience of visitors, arrangements have been made for the regular posting up of telegrams relating to the leading home and foreign markets. A strong-room is also provided for the deposit of valuable property. It is an interesting fact that some famous taverns have occupied the site of the new hotel. Here, in succession, have stood the Sun, the Half-Moon, and the Magpye. Then came the timber-yard of Mr. Aldridge, then Messrs. Wood and Sharwood's Type Foundry, and next the offices of the City Press. By the building of this new hotel the site has reverted to its original uses. The architects are Messrs. Bateman and Corse, of Birmingham; and the builder is Mr. Brass, of Old-street, who built the New Post Office.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The rival Spanish Republics on the western side of the South American Peninsula, despite their proximity to the Pacific, have been fighting bitterly with each other some months past. Chile has to resist the combined attack of Peru and Bolivia, the matter really in dispute being the possession of certain valuable mineral deposits, nitrate of soda and the like, but commercial treaties and tariffs are made the pretext for this war. The land forces of the two northern States are much greater than those of Chile, but they have not yet been able to touch her, and it has been mostly by naval warfare that the conflict has been carried on. We now learn that the arms of Chile have been victorious in recent and important actions. The formidable Peruvian ironclad Huascar, a turret-ship heavily armed, which was commanded by Admiral Gran, was captured the other day, at Mejillones, by Chilian frigates, the Blanco Encolada, the O'Higgins, the Loa, and the Lord Cochrane. It was a desperate fight of six hours; Admiral Gran and sixty of his officers and men were killed; the Huascar was much shattered, and riddled with shot. Eighty-five English seamen were among the crew of the Huascar. The Peruvian corvette Union made her escape. This victory has given to Chile the superiority of force on the sea, and she has already made use of it to bombard and capture a seaport town of Peru. The news of this event reached us on Tuesday last. Pisagua, which has been taken by the Chilians after an obstinate battle, costing them three hundred men, some accounts say five hundred, is a small place. But it is situated on the coast midway between Iquique, to the south, and Arica, to the north, which are both important Peruvian seaports. The effect, moreover, of this success on the part of Chile is to separate the army of Peru from that of its ally, Bolivia, which remains apart, in the north; and this may compel the Peruvians to come to terms. Our Illustration of the Chilians at work mounting their heavy guns for the defence of Valparaiso, has some interest at the present juncture. It is from a sketch by Lieutenant Ernest Fleet, R.N., serving on board H.M.S. Gannet, six-gun sloop, in the Pacific squadron. The guns here mounted are of American make, of 15-inch calibre, smooth bore, each weighing 22 tons, and will repel any hostile fleet.

The Council of Legal Education has appointed Mr. John Dawson Mayne, of the Inner Temple, to be Professor of Common Law to the Inns of Court.

The marriage of Sigismund C. de Trafford, of Croston Hall, Lancashire, and Clementina Frances Mostyn, daughter of Sir Pyers Mostyn, Bart., will take place at the Oratory, Brompton, on Thursday next.

Lord Gifford was on Tuesday evening presented by the residents of his native town and the neighbourhood with a silver tea-service, in view of his approaching marriage. The ceremony took place at a public dinner at the Assembly Rooms, Cirencester, over which Lord Bathurst presided.

A memorial sun-dial of beautiful design, standing thirty feet high, which has been erected by Baroness Burdett-Coutts, at a cost of more than £2000, in St. Pancras-gardens, was yesterday week presented to the parish. On arriving at the gardens the Baroness was received by the Rev. Canon Spence, Vicar, Sir Thomas Chambers, M.P., the churchwardens, members of the vestry, and other gentlemen. After stating the reasons which had prompted the course she had taken in this matter, the Baroness handed to the Vicar the key of the memorial inclosure. Before separating, a deputation from the London Flower Girls' Mission arrived and presented bouquets to Baroness Burdett-Coutts and other ladies.

POLITICAL.

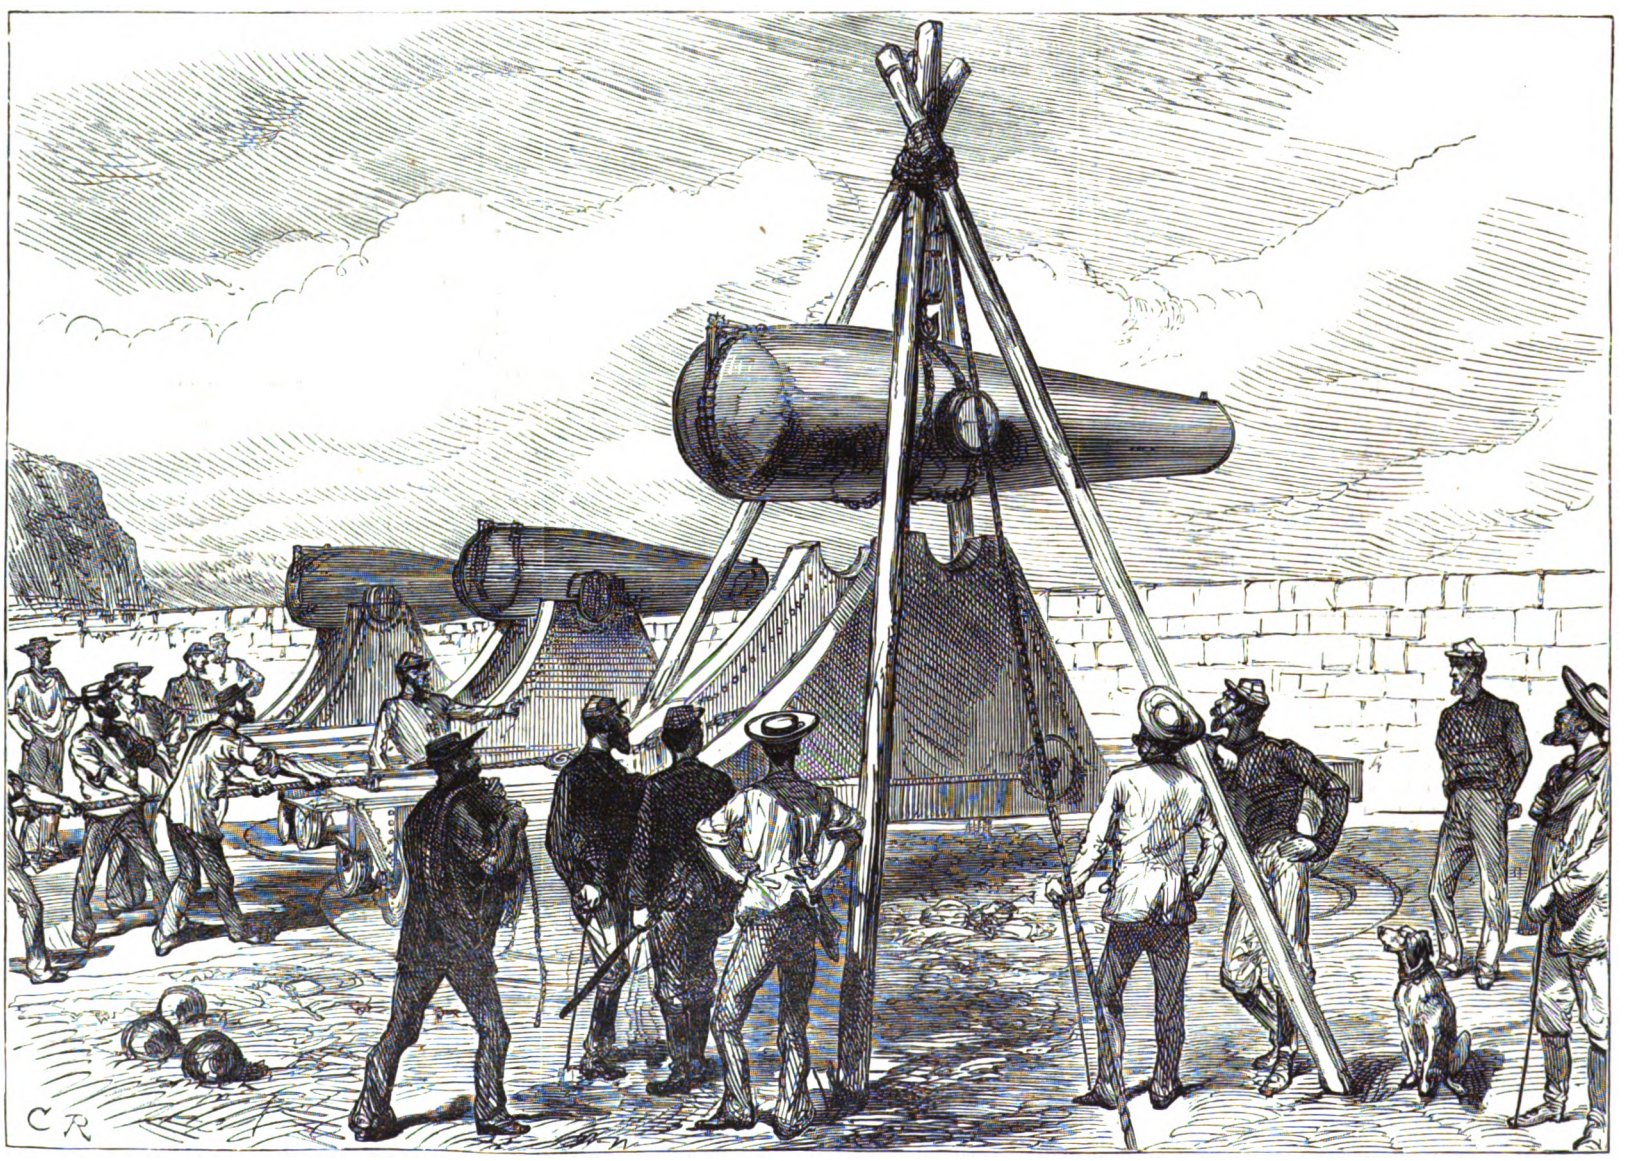
The Oracle has spoken—and said nothing. With more than usual interest was the speech of the Prime Minister at the Lord Mayor's Banquet looked forward to. The welcome accorded to the noble Earl and his colleagues at the Guildhall on Monday evening was of the heartiest. Not a note of the silver trumpets heralding the toasts was spared; and the Imperial strains found an echo in the closing sentences of the Earl of Beaconsfield's speech, albeit he protested he would avoid a peroration; but no martial challenge was issued to any Power. In passing, it may be said that the new Lord Mayor's perfunctory speeches were creditable enough, with the exception of the adulatory stream poured over the head of the Prime Minister, whose blushing days, however, are fortunately over. General Lord Chelmsford and Sir Evelyn Wood being present, they were favourably mentioned in the toast of "The Army and Navy," in response to which neither the Secretary for War nor the First Lord of the Admiralty said anything calling for comment beyond eulogising the services of both branches during the past twelvemonth in South Africa and in Afghanistan. Count Münster elicited a laugh when he remarked that if the diplomatic body for whom he spoke did their duty, the last two right hon. gentlemen who had risen would have very little to do. The German Ambassador struck a responsive chord when he added that "No Sovereign or Emperor more wishes to see the peace of the world maintained than my own." Lord Cairns achieved a certain success by adopting a bantering tone of self-depreciation. His Ministerial chief, evidently pluming himself on being enrolled a citizen of London, began "the speech of the evening" with an apt allusion to the revival of trade, which he declared her Majesty's Government believed to be of a "permanent character." The noble Earl attributed this commercial improvement to the increased demand for iron, "tropical produce," textile fabrics, the rise in the price of silver as regards India, and, returning to England—"our great manufacture of chemicals." The orderly conduct of the people of this country under the great strain of the last five years' depression then came in for emphatic commendation; and served as a marked contrast to the agitation going on in the sister isle, our fellow-countrymen on the other side of St. George's Channel being described in a Disraelian phrase that may live as "our brilliant brethren in Ireland," and in the next breath as "an imaginative people." No direct promise of help from the Government to mitigate the distress in Ireland dropped from the Prime Minister's lips; but the noble Earl said the Ministry would watch with anxiety the districts afflicted, and reminded his hearers that Ireland had never in vain appealed to England when there was a prospect of considerable suffering through the failure of crops, adding that this year "their harvest is much better than the harvest in England." The military operations in Afghanistan were then referred to as "operations in Central Asia," where "our influence has been established," while the "North-Western frontier had been strengthened and secured." The Cabul massacre had been avenged, and Lord Lytton came in for marked eulogy. Whether the Zulu War was necessary or not, the Government had extracted the best result they could out of it by teaching South Africa "something of the art of self-defence." In Europe, in the opinion of the Government, "Peace will be maintained"—that is "if the power and advice of England are heard in the Councils of Europe." Lord Beaconsfield continued the strain by paraphrasing the Imperial saying of an illustrious predecessor, the new motto for the Government being thus introduced:—"When one of the greatest of the Romans was asked what his policy was he replied, 'Imperium et libertas.' That is a short programme, but it would not disgrace a British Ministry, and it is one on which the present Ministry will always act." The health of the Lord Mayor was then proposed briefly, the Premier drily hoping he would have the pleasure a year thence of congratulating his Lordship on his skilful administration of a brilliant reign. Sir Stafford Northcote assumed a jubilance if he felt it not in referring hopefully to the financial state of the country; and it fell to the lot of the Marquis of Salisbury to throw Russia and Turkey to the winds for the moment while he assumed the cheerful rôle of the ladies' man, and proposed (not without a dash of irony at the Aldermen's expense) "The Health of the Lady Mayoress."

The announcement that Mr. Bernal Osborne will stand at the General Election for Worcester has afforded pleasure to both political parties, and the wish must be general that the humour and wit of the hon. member (whether as Worcester sauce or in any other form) may again brighten the debates of the House of Commons.

Mr. Chamberlain's mode of speech may be described as neat rather than witty. Yet the junior member for Birmingham made a good point at a Liberal meeting in Leicester on Tuesday, when he accounted for the Prime Minister's boasted increase in the chemical trade by attributing it to the consumption by the Government of "sulphur and saltpetre." The remaining political utterances may be quickly summarised. Mr. Cowen made clear to his Newcastle constituents on Saturday that he remained stanch as ever to his Liberal colours, and to his aversion to Russian aggrandisement; and on Tuesday, in introducing Mr. A. M. Sullivan as a lecturer at the Townhall, the hon. member gave a timely word of caution to those Home-Rule members who were in the habit of using language calculated to engender an antagonistic feeling. This hint might have been acted upon earlier with advantage by Mr. Parnell, who, with Mr. Mitchell Henry and Mr. O'Connor Power, aired afresh the grievances of Ireland in the Manchester Free Trade Hall on Monday, Mr. Parnell continuing the campaign with unabated zest at Bolton on Tuesday, and Mr. Mitchell Henry holding forth the same night at Salford. Colonel Arbuthnot on Tuesday broached a broader theme at Hereford when he hoped "the consolidation of the Empire" would be undertaken. Mr. Rylands on Monday at Burnley denounced the Government with an earnestness which his ready smile sometimes takes the sting out of; and in the North, Mr. Baxter has afforded fresh proof of his critical capacity, under which there lurks solid administrative ability; while Mr. E. Jenkins at Dundee, on Tuesday, portentously intimated that he had a rod in pickle for the Commander-in-Chief.

Parliament, according to the dictum of Mr. E. Stanhope at Horncastle on Tuesday, may last "till this time next year," but in all probability it is very near its end, and the popular Under-Secretary for India advised his listeners to "prepare for an election at an early date."

Leeds delivers the Liberal counterblast to the Conservative challenge at the Guildhall through the effective medium of the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Ripon, and Mr. W. E. Forster, the principal speakers at Friday's demonstration.



Mr. Archibald Forbes gave his lecture on the Zulu War, in St. James's Hall on Wednesday night, before a considerable and appreciative audience.

Lord George Hamilton, M.P., and Sir Francis Sandford have made a visitation of the Royal College of Science in Dublin. It is understood that this inquiry is in connection with the reorganisation of that institution.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.

The Ninth of November being a Sunday, this year's procession of the new Lord Mayor of London and his civic associates, from Guildhall to Westminster Hall and back, was performed on Monday with the ordinary pomp and state.

The route was from Guildhall through King-street and Queen-street, and thence into Upper Thames-street, across London Bridge, through the Borough, across Southwark Bridge, down Upper Thames-street and up Dowgate-hill into Cannon-street, and then along Fleet-street and the Strand to Westminster, returning by way of the Embankment. The fine new peal of bells of St. Paul's, to which the Corporation largely contributed, were set ringing in honour of the occasion, as were also those of all the churches on the route.

A force of mounted City Police led the way, followed by the bands of the Scots Guards and the London Rifle Brigade. Then came two powerful and fully-manned steam-engines of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade. They were followed by the excellent bands and well-drilled lads of the training-ship Exmouth and of the Marine Society's vessel Warspite. Then appeared four mounted knights in real armour, and some gaily-dressed watermen, with fabulously large rosettes, bearing the banners of the ex-Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. Escorted by the mounted band of the 5th Lancers, the Worshipful Company of Vintners made their appearance. The Lord Mayor is a warden, and Mr. Sheriff Bayley and Mr. Under-Sheriff Crawford are members, of this ancient and wealthy guild. Twenty or thirty of that meritorious regiment, the Corps of Commissionaires, bore the company's shields, followed by the wine-porters in their picturesque vintners' dresses, and the "swan-hoppers," or uppers, carrying the banners of distinguished members of that guild. The Master, Wardens, and Court of the company in open carriages followed their officials. Other knights in armour passed; and then, ushered in by the bands of the Royal Marines and Coldstream Guards, came the banner-bearers and the Court of the Haberdashers' Company, to which also the Lord Mayor belongs. After them and more knights in armour were the Court of the Merchant Taylors' Company, of which Mr. Sheriff Woolloton is a member, and next the Court of the Stationers' Company, the Master of which is the Lord Mayor. Intermingled in this part of the procession were the bands of the 9th Kent Artillery Volunteers, the Royal Artillery, the St. George's Rifles, and the Royal London Militia, and the mounted band of the Royal Artillery. Next appeared two magnificent banners, borne by foresters, recognising the acquisition by the Corporation for the public use of Epping Forest and Burnham Beeches, near Windsor. After them, played in by the bands of the London Scottish Rifles and the Hon. Artillery Company, came in succession the Under-Sheriffs, the officers of the Corporation, and the two Sheriffs (Messrs. Woolloton and Bayley), each in his state carriage drawn by four horses and attended by his chaplain. State trumpeters of the Household Cavalry preceded the carriages of the Aldermen and the Recorder. Then came the state carriage of the late Lord Mayor (Sir Charles Whetham). The retiring Chief Magistrate was greeted with uproar along the route; but it never disturbed his good temper or equanimity, and he bowed right and left to all. A band of the 18th Hussars, with their trumpeters, followed Sir Charles Whetham, and another band of the Household Cavalry immediately preceded the new Lord Mayor, who met with the warmest greeting throughout the procession, but especially in his own ward. Here an address of congratulation was presented to him. The new Lord Mayor, Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott, was accompanied by the Rev. J. Russell Stock, his Chaplain, and by the Sword-bearer, the Mace-bearer, and the City Marshal. In coming back from Westminster the procession was joined by the Lady Mayoress, and by the Ambassadors, Ministers of State, Judges, and other dignitaries on their way to the Guildhall banquet.

The new Lord Mayor, and the other members and officers of the City Corporation, on arriving at Westminster Hall, were received in the Court of Exchequer by Baron Pollock, Baron Huddleston, and Mr. Justice Hawkins. The Recorder of the City of London, Sir T. Chambers, introduced the new Lord Mayor to the Judges, giving them an account of his past life and public services. Baron Pollock replied, in the absence of Chief Baron Kelly, and commended the behaviour of the Corporation of London. The Lord Mayor, having signed the usual declaration and obtained the formal confirmation of privileges and franchises of the City, invited the Judges to his banquet at Guildhall.

This entertainment was attended by the Prime Minister, the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Duke of Northumberland, Lord Cranbrook, the Home Secretary, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Secretaries of State for War and the Colonies, and others of her Majesty's Ministers, as well as by the Foreign Ambassadors and many distinguished personages. The speech of Lord Beaconsfield is noticed in another column. The Committee who arranged the banquet were presented by the Lord Mayor, on Saturday, with an ornamental badge, of gold and enamel, made by Messrs. Edward and Son, of the Poultry.

We present, as usual, the portraits of the new Lord Mayor and the new Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. Those of his Lordship and Mr. Sheriff Bayley are from photographs by the London Stereoscopic Company; that of Mr. Sheriff Woolloton is from a picture by Mr. Comley Vivian.

The Cabinet has decided to convoke the Chambers for the 27th inst. It has also been decided that no proceedings be taken against Monseigneur Freppel, Bishop of Angers, for his speech at Nantes, the Cabinet being of opinion that, as the speech was not delivered on any official occasion, it was simply the utterance of a private individual.

M. Gambetta and M. Jules Grévy had a long interview on Tuesday, in the course of which they discussed the home and foreign topics of the day, in regard to which their views, it is stated, coincide on every point.

GERMANY.

The Emperor has contributed about £500 sterling in aid of the sufferers by the Murcia inundations.

In the debate on the Budget, which began yesterday week in the Lower House of the Prussian Diet, Herr Richter made a long speech against the Protectionist policy of Prince Bismarck, none of whose anticipations, he contended, had been fulfilled. Herr Bitter, the Minister of Finance, thought it unnecessary to defend the Prince on questions of political economy. On Saturday the debate was concluded. The greater part of the ordinary and all the extraordinary Estimates, together with the bill relative to the disposal of the surpluses derived from Imperial taxes, were referred to the Budget Committee. In the course of the debate the Minister of Public Works defended the proposed purchase of the railways, and said that they should be regarded not as industrial enterprises, but as institutions for promoting the welfare of the whole nation, and as of the greatest utility for the defence of the country. Later in the debate the Minister of Finance, replying to an attack on Prince Bismarck by Dr. Virchow, said it was all the more indecorous since the Imperial Chancellor had but recently rendered great services to Germany.

After two days' debate, the law sanctioning the State purchase of the German railways has bean referred to a Committee of the Lower House of the Prussian Diet.

Comte de St. Vallier, the French Ambassador at Berlin, left on Tuesday morning for Varzin on a visit to Prince Bismarck. No political importance attaches to the event.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The official returns of the Austrian revenue show that during the first three quarters of the present year the direct taxes yielded 67,264,000 fl., being 920,000 fl. more than during the same period of 1878. The revenue from indirect taxes amounted to 123,189,000 fl., being an increase of 5,316,000 fl.

M. Kossuth has lost his rights as a Hungarian citizen. The Chamber of Deputies has adopted a bill declaring that any native of the country who voluntarily resides abroad for an uninterrupted period of ten years shall lose his civil status. The Extreme Left violently opposed this measure, accusing the Government of levelling it directly at Kossuth; but it was finally carried by 141 votes to 52.

A deputation from the Evangelical Alliance had an interview with the Emperor of Austria last week, and solicited that freedom of worship might be extended to all the Christian sects throughout the Empire.

RUSSIA.

Count Schouvaloff's resignation of the post of Ambassador to this country has been accepted. An autograph letter from the Emperor to Count Schouvaloff has been published, in which his Majesty accedes to the request of the Count to be relieved of his post as Russian Ambassador in London, and confers upon him the Order of St. Vladimir of the first class in recognition of his services. Count Schouvaloff will remain a member of the Council of the Empire.

General Frankini, the Governor of Kars, has been ordered by the Czar to relinquish his duties and to proceed on four months' leave abroad. His offence was the summary closing of all the Armenian schools in his district, and his oppression towards both Russians and natives. The Emperor has ordered all the Armenian schools to be reopened.

A Daily News' telegram from St. Petersburg says that all the Russian papers have articles upon the latest steps taken in Constantinople by the British Government, and that in certain circles an uneasy feeling is growing up. The Golos says that in the event of England attempting to violate Turkish independence, and at the same time infringe the vital interests of Russia, a collision between the two Powers would be more convenient for the latter on the confines of Asia Minor than in the depths of Central Asia.

According to the Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, Prince Gortschakoff is at length about to retire from the post of Chancellor of the Russian Empire.

The same correspondent remarks that the reports of the decline of Russian influence at Teheran, as the consequence of a change of policy on the part of the British Government towards Persia, appear to have some foundation. At all events, the relations between Persia and Russia are not as cordial as they were some months ago. Russia has claimed 40,000 roubles in payment of the thousand rifles, which it is now contended were not offered as a present from the Emperor of Russia to the Shah. The Shah, it is also stated, now recognises the necessity of giving the Persian army an essentially national character, and has given up the idea of assimilating it with European armies. He has further ordered a translation of the Code Napoleon.

The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News says that private information received in St. Petersburg fully confirms the worst accounts published of the disastrous nature of the defeat of the Russians in Central Asia and their subsequent retreat. Ammunition and guns were lost, and the wounded were left behind and all killed by the Turkomans. The number thus massacred is estimated at 700. The statements respecting the arrival of reinforcements at Tchikislar and movements of troops in Central Asia are believed to be incorrect and premature, and no fresh advance is likely to take place until early next year. It is stated that General Dolgoroukoff, who commanded the advance column of the Russian expedition that was defeated by the Tekke Turkomans, has been recalled and appointed military attaché to the Russian Embassy at Berlin.

The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at St. Petersburg states that a Russian hydrographic scientific expedition has been dispatched to the Pacific, to explore and report upon the Japanese waters and coasts.

M. Makoff, the Russian Minister of the Interior, has sent a circular to the governors of the provinces instructing them to order the rural police not to interfere with the public dances and amusements in all Russian villages, which have in some instances been treated as if they were dangerous to the public peace. Such a course of action, the circular says, produces discontent and complaints among the rural population.

The Territorial Assembly of the Moscow District has resolved upon establishing a fund upon which advances will be made to the peasantry to enable them to obtain more land.

Regulations for the use of arms by the Russian police and gendarmes while engaged in fulfilling their official duties have been published in an Imperial Ukase.

A new gun-boat, the Wiehr, measuring 110 ft. long by 38 ft. broad, with 7 ft. draught of water, was recently launched at St. Petersburg. On the bow of this vessel will be placed an 11-in. calibre gun, with two four-pounders on each side.

TURKEY.

It is announced in the telegrams from Constantinople that a Council of Ministers was held on Sunday, under the presidency of the Sultan, to discuss the question of reforms, and that Baker Pasha was present; and it is said that the Porte is making arrangements to place that officer in a high position in Anatolia. A Standard telegram says that Sir H. Layard has begun negotiations with the Porte respecting the reforms to be introduced into Asia Minor in conformity with the despatch which Lord Salisbury wrote last year. The Turkish newspapers have been ordered, under pain of suspension, to cease their attacks upon England. The Russian Ambassador has returned from Livadia, and, according to reports which come from Vienna, he has advised the Porte to yield to the demands of the English Government as regards the reforms in Asia Minor, but to reject any proposals that might be made in view of a cession of territory. Ministerial modifications are again talked of, and the idea of raising Midhat Pasha to power is said to be seriously entertained.

The Minister of Public Instruction has formed a plan for the establishment, in Constantinople, of a commercial school for the youth of all classes. A Council, which has been formed on a broad basis, has been appointed to conduct the school.

The Porte has ordered the withdrawal of the greater part of the troops at present stationed on the Turco-Greek frontier. The Turkish members of the Greek Boundary Commission met on Tuesday, and discussed the question of the proposed new line of frontier in Epirus.

Although only one steamer arrived at Liverpool from Canada and the United States last week with live cattle, the number was in excess of the previous week, but was nevertheless insignificantly small, while not a single head of live sheep arrived. The conveying steamer was the Illyrian, and she arrived with 197 head of cattle, as well as 716 quarters of fresh meat. The other steamers with fresh meat were the Baltic, with 800 quarters of beef and 250 carcases of mutton; the Wyoming, with 652 quarters of beef and 250 carcases of mutton; the Italy, with 589 quarters of beef and 250 carcases of mutton; Lord Gough, with 691 quarters of beef; and the City of Richmond, with 740 quarters of beef, 150 carcases of mutton, and 100 dead pigs—being 4188 quarters of beef, 900 carcases of mutton, and 100 pigs.

The years 1880 and 1881 will both be marked by two national exhibitions—the one at Brussels, the other at St. Petersburg. The preparations for the Brussels Exhibition, which will be opened next May, are in a very forward state, and the building will be handed over by the contractors before the end of December. The total space at disposal is 66,000 square mètres, one half of which will be devoted to the arts and industries of the past, the other half to modern industrial arts and sciences. All the Belgian industries will be fully represented, including those of agriculture and horticulture, and there will be an additional space of 16,000 square mètres set aside for a show of live stock. The exhibition will be fourteen times as large as the one of 1874 held in the Halles Centrales. The Russian exhibition is also proceeding rapidly, as far as the building is concerned, and the ironwork is being made at the St. Petersburg Foundry.

The Paris papers again announce the death at Damascus of the celebrated Arab chief, Abd-el-Kader, who strove to free his country from the Turkish and French rule, and from 1832 to 1847 held his own with indomitable energy against Clauzel, Bugeaud, and Lamoricière. Statements of his death have frequently been circulated, and in 1873 obituary notices of him appeared in most of the French and English papers. After his capitulation in 1843 he was detained in custody until 1852, when he was liberated by Napoleon III., who contented himself with the chief's oath on the Koran that he would never again bear arms against France. Abd-el-Kader kept his word, and took up his residence at Damascus, where he always showed much sympathy with the Christian population of the East, notably during the Syrian massacres, when he energetically defended the Christians. On this occasion he received the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour. Abd-el-Kader also enjoyed an annual pension of 100,000f.

Three disasters at sea are reported. The steamer Champion on her way from New York for Charleston, on the morning of the 7th inst., thirty miles north of Cape May, came into collision with the iron ship Lady Octavia, of Greenock, running from Delaware Breakwater for New York. The Champion sunk in four minutes, and thirty persons on board of her, including twelve passengers, were lost. The Lady Octavia is badly damaged forward, having struck the Champion amidships. The Champion was of 1418 tons burden, and had a cargo valued at 200,000 dols.—On the 29th ult. the whaling schooner Petrel, of New Bedford, capsised, and only six persons of those on board were saved. They clung to the wreck from Oct. 29 to the 3rd inst., when they were rescued by the Austrian barque Rebus.—The Daily News publishes a long telegram from New York giving details of the collision which took place early on Friday morning last between the steamer Arizona and an iceberg. The vessel, which was going at fifteen knots, struck head on, recoiled, and struck again in the same place, smashing in about fifteen feet of her bows. The iceberg is estimated at from 300 ft. to 400 ft. in diameter, with three pinnacles 60 ft. or 70 ft. above the water. It was feared at first that these masses would topple over and crush the ship, but only a few tons of ice fell on the deck, and the engines were at once reversed and the vessel got clear. Correspondents of several New York papers who were on board agree that there was no look-out at the bows when the collision took place.

THE OCCUPATION OF CABUL.

The British forces in Afghanistan continue to make their positions secure for the ensuing winter. The disgraced Ameer, Yakoob Khan, whose duplicity or even treachery seems to be no longer doubted, after his enforced abdication remains a sort of prisoner at large in the British camp. Shere Ali Khan, who is no relative of the late deceased Ameer Shere Ali, has been invested with provisional authority at Candahar, under British protection. At Herat, it is rumoured, the Governor, Ayoub Khan, is besieged in his fortress by the insurgent soldiery. The Ghilzais seem to be giving no further trouble.

The junction of General Roberts's force at Cabul, or rather of the portion detached to Jugdulluk under Brigadier-General Macpherson, with the Peshawur and Khyber Pass column, advancing from Jellalabad, was safely effected at Katta Sang, on the 7th inst., when Brigadier-General Charles Gough met the brigade of Macpherson at that place. The garrison of the Shutargardan Pass has now been withdrawn. The troops of General Roberts at Cabul are comfortably housed in the Shirpur cantonments, a mile or two outside of the city, and have ample supplies for the winter.

An official minute has been published by the Viceroy of India commending the generals, officers, and troops engaged in the recent advance and occupation of Cabul for their conduct and services. This may be taken as a sign that there is now to be a suspension of military operations.

Under the new incumbency of St. Clement Danes, Clare-market Mission Chapel is again the centre of an active religious work. A fresh lease of the chapel has been taken by the Bishop of London's Fund, which has made a grant for its repair. Its history is a curious one. It was once a Baptist meeting-house, then a bath, then a cheap concert-room and casino, then a prize-fighting ring, then a penny theatre, and, lastly, a carpenter's shop.

The New Testament company of revisers assembled on Tuesday in the Jerusalem Chamber for their ninety-third session. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided. The other members present were the Dean of Lichfield, the Dean of Lincoln, the Dean of Llandaff, the Dean of Westminster, Canon Westcott, Archdeacon Lee, Archdeacon Palmer, Professor Hort, Professor Newth, Dr. Moulton, Dr. Scrivener, and Mr. Humphrey. The wall painting of the chancel of the parish church of St. Mary's, Easton, near Winchester, has lately been completed. It was begun at the first restoration of the church, in 1870, but was confined at that time to the decoration of the groined vaultings, the window splays, and wall faces generally of the apse, the treatment consisting of early diaper foliage and work in accordance with the period of the chancel—a Norman structure. Subsequently the north wall was adorned by Messrs. Harland and Fisher, of London, with two large panels containing the Annunciation and St. John leading the Blessed Virgin to his home after the Crucifixion. To these have now been added two more panels by the same painters—one containing the figure of St. James, the first Bishop of Jerusalem; and the other a representation of our Lord giving His Charge to St. Peter. These were the gift of Miss Wodehouse, daughter of the Rector and Lady Eleanor Wodehouse.

In a pastoral letter to his clergy, appealing for funds to promote ecclesiastical education, Dr. Vaughan, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, states that the cost of the education of a priest may be estimated at £1000. During the last seven years he has had to find no fewer than 108 priests, and there are now seventy-five exercising the ministry in the diocese who were not in it seven years ago.

Shoreditch Tabernacle, a new building in the Hackney-road, near Shoreditch church, was on Tuesday opened as a place of worship for a Baptist congregation, both the members for the borough, Professor Fawcett and Mr. John Holms, taking part in the proceedings. The building, which is in the Lombardic style, is of red brick, with Portland stone dressings. There are seats for over 2000 persons. Schools will be added, when funds permit, on ground adjoining the site of the chapel. The building has been erected, from the designs of Mr. T. Lewis Banks, by Mr. Josolyne. The secretary of the building fund, Mr. Boggis, stated that the entire cost of the building would be about £12,000, of which sum £5000 still remained to be paid. During the day about £1000 was collected.

The autumnal meeting of the Yorkshire Association Baptist Churches is being held at Skipton. On Tuesday morning the Rev. J. Daun, Bradford, delivered the presidential address, which was on "Our Statistics." Afterwards a conference was held, in the course of which a discussion occurred on the form of register to be kept by the churches.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

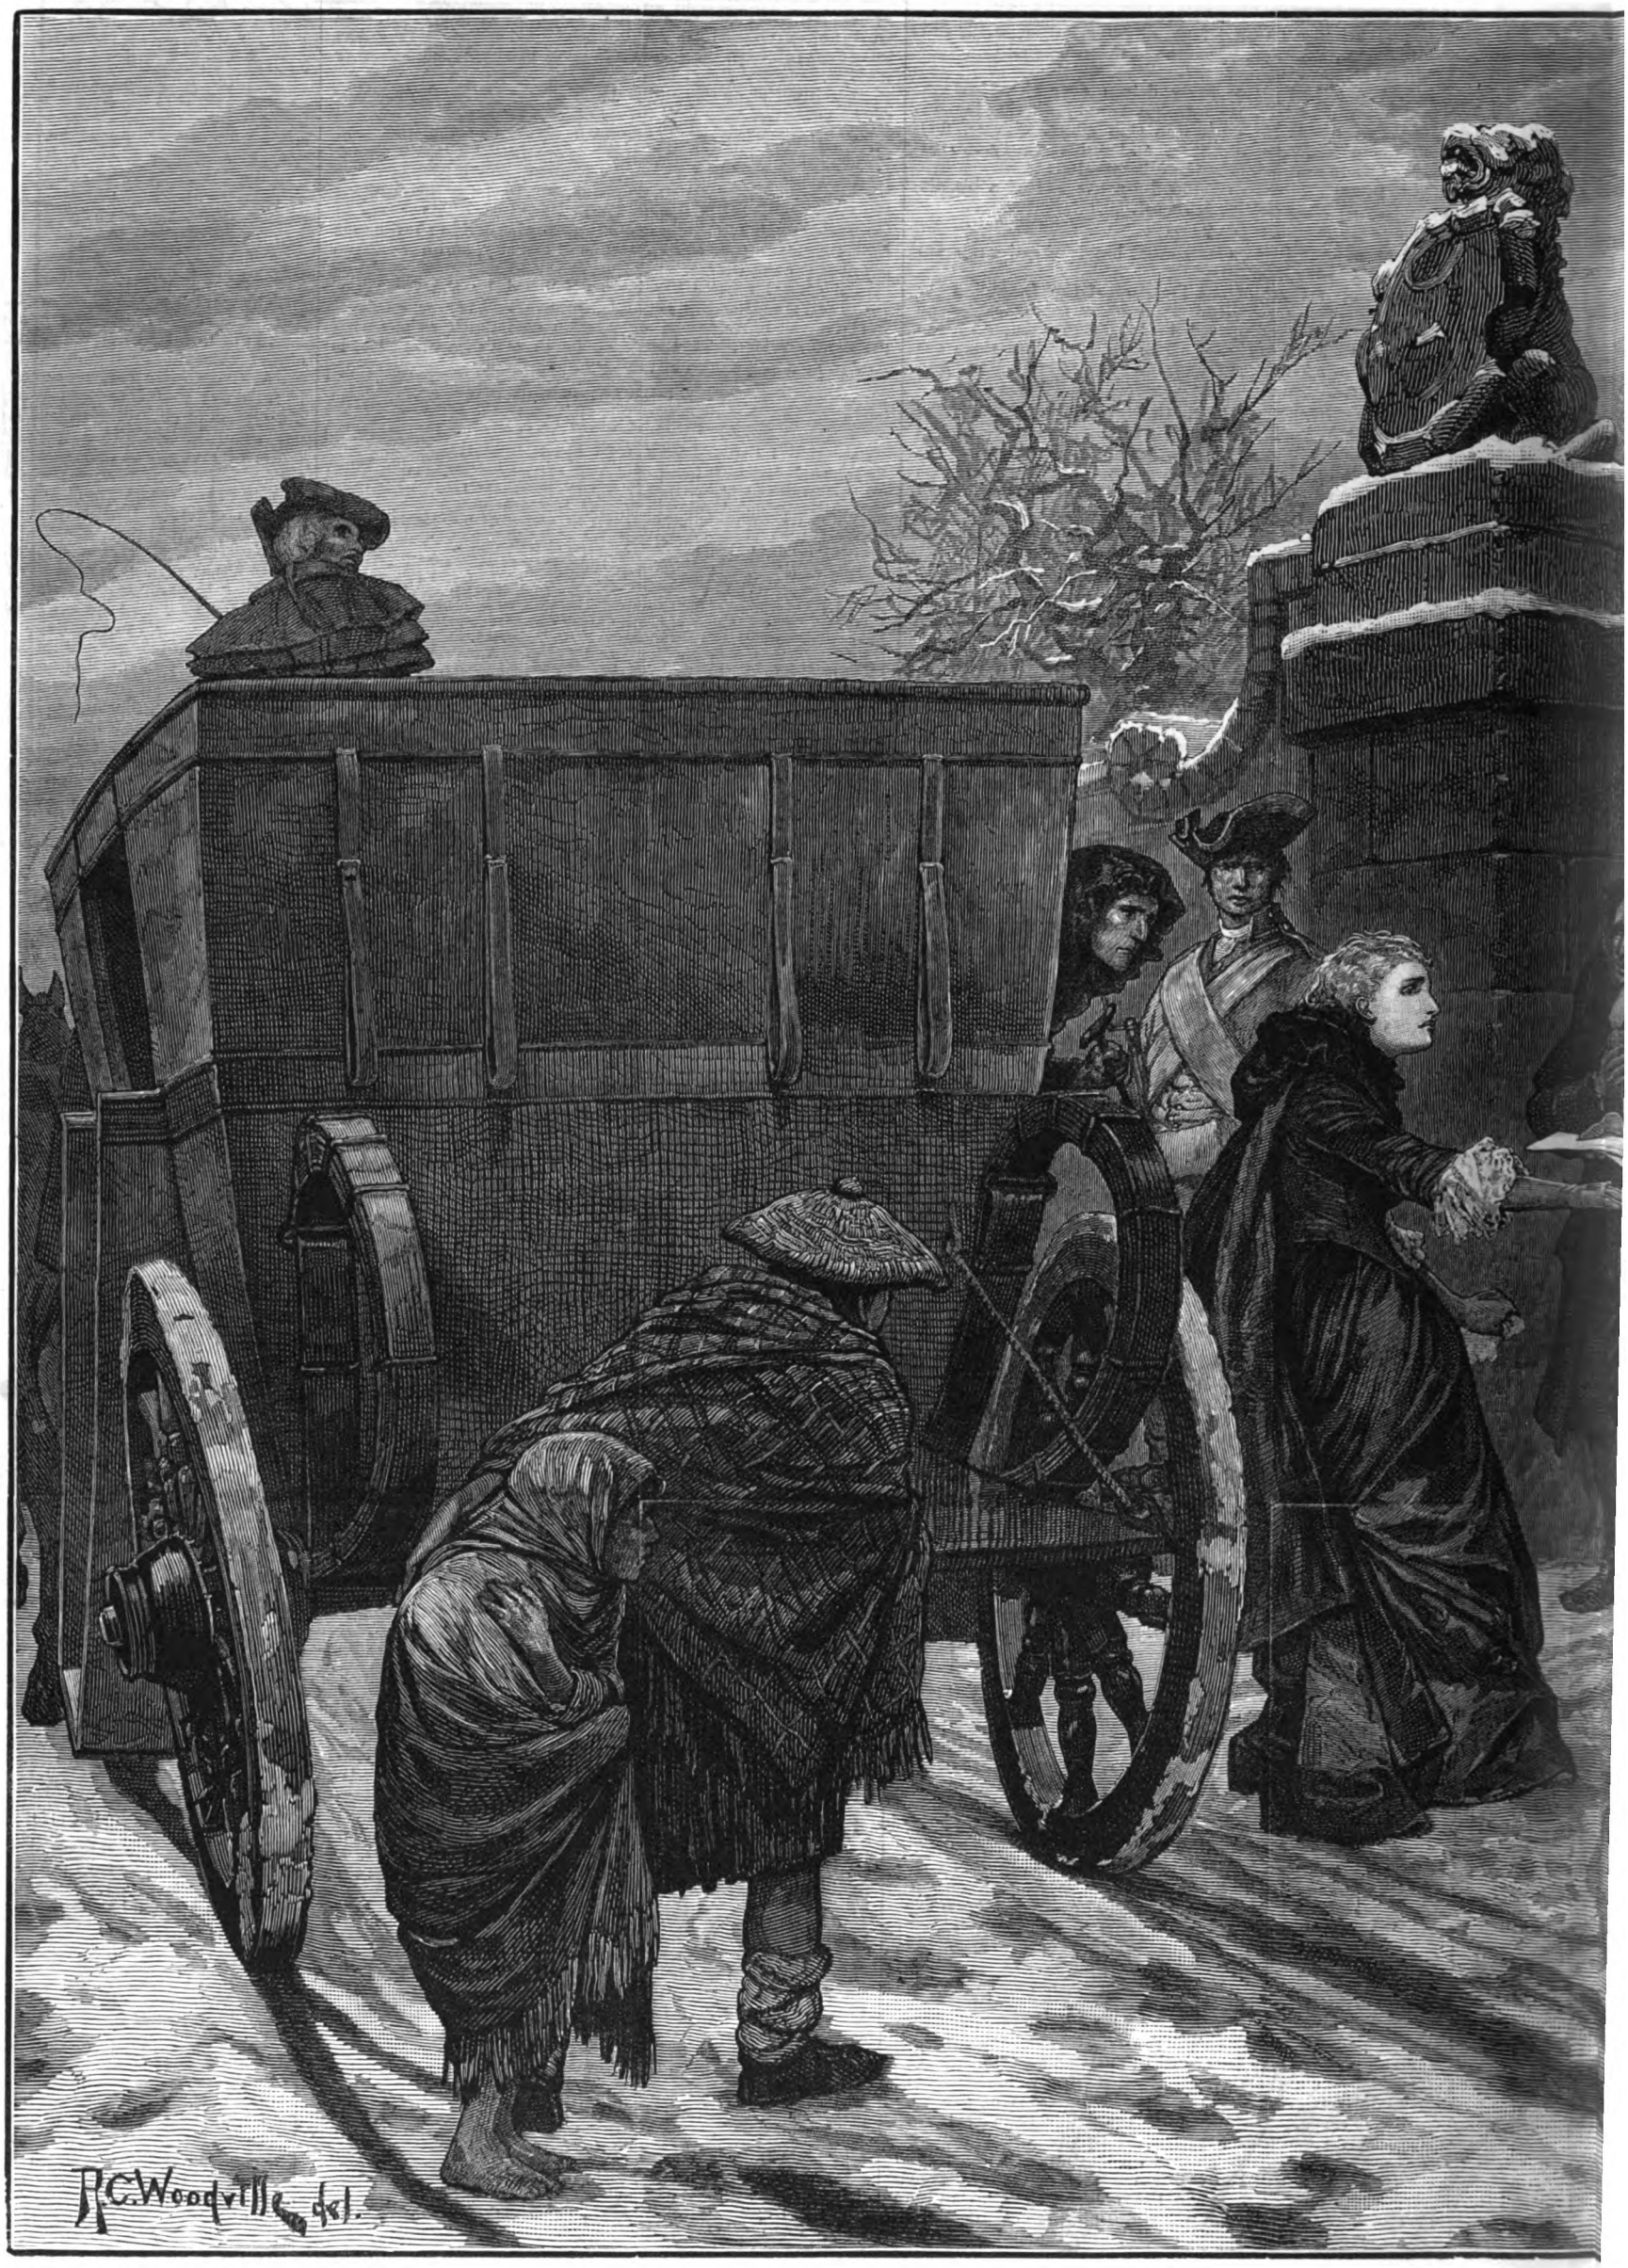
The Very Rev. Principal Caird delivered last Saturday the inaugural address of the winter session of the University of Glasgow. His subject was "The Life, Character, and Achievements of Galileo." Referring to the disinclination of Galileo for theological controversy, Mr. Caird said:—There had been, perhaps there still might be, found in the scientific world men who were never so happy as when they were setting theologians by the ears, whose delight it was to wound theological susceptibilities, to seize on some fact or theory that seemed to conflict with traditional religious beliefs, and to flaunt it in its most offensive aspect before the eyes of indignant ecclesiastics. To make sport for the profane and gain a cheap notoriety by such undignified tricks was altogether foreign to the calm, reverent, religious spirit of the great natural philosopher. But in his own despite he was dragged into the atmosphere of theological strife, and compelled to waste a considerable part of his life in vain attempts to reconcile the irreconcilable—to show the consistency of unquestionable scientific facts with impossible theological dogmas. And here, too, as in similar cases, it was not the wiser heads but the camp-followers of the Church that forced on the controversy; as often happened, ignorance and fanaticism forced the hands of wary and astute leaders, and the attack on scientific freedom was begun by the class of persons in which zeal was generally least tempered with discretion—women and the less intelligent members of the clerical profession.

The session of the Edinburgh Association for the University Education of Women was opened in the Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, last Saturday afternoon, with an address by Principal Sir Alexander Grant. The Countess of Rothes presided. Sir A. Grant gave a sketch of the rise of the present movement in favour of the higher education of women, characterised the old system of education in boarding schools as mechanical and dry, and said that the proposed substitution was not longer hours of study, but a more rational employment of a shorter time. He was glad that the association did not claim that women should be educated in the Universities along with men, as he considered that that could not be done without the sacrifice of some of those feelings which the custom of ages had made instinctive. If the classes where mixed there could be none of the personal examinations by the professors so valuable as a means of instruction, and their teaching would need to come down to the level of Continental Universities, where the professors simply gave an address and the students took notes. At the close of the address the ladies and gentlemen proceeded to No. 15, Shandwick-place, where the association has obtained a lease of the premises. They include a large lecture-hall, class-rooms, reading-room, library, &c. The hall has been beautifully furnished, for the most part by the gifts of ladies attending the classes and by friends of the association. The Countess of Rothes, who was elected president of the association in the room of the late Duchess of Argyll, formally opened the premises. At a business meeting held afterwards it was stated that the association starts in its new premises with a considerable balance of funds in hand.

The executive committee of the Shepherd Memorial Fund have decided to present to the University of Aberdeen an annual gold medal for surgery, to be called "The Shepherd Memorial Medal," and to erect a tablet to the memory of this deceased officer in the parish church of Lochiel Cushnie, Aberdeenshire. Surgeon-Major Shepherd was killed when endeavouring to save a comrade's life after the battle of Isandula.

At a convocation of Durham University on the 4th the Scholæ Cancellarii, Lincoln, were connected with the University on the same terms as other theological colleges. Thomas Oliver, M.B., was appointed to fill the chair of Practical Physiology in the College of Medicine at Newcastle.

Mr. Mark Firth has signified his wish to found a Chair of Chemistry in connection with Firth College, Sheffield. He proposes to invest a sum sufficient to produce an annual income of £150, and this, together with the fees of students, will amount, it is believed, to a sufficient sum. Mr. Firth proposes that the appointment shall be first filled by Dr. Carnelley, Owens College, Manchester.



The Archbishop of Canterbury presided on the 6th inst. at the London University at the public distribution of the certificates and prizes awarded to the candidates of the Oxford local examination at the London, Southwark, and Streatham-hill centres. His Grace dwelt upon the relative value of appointments by selection and appointments by competitive examination, and remarked that, while it was perfectly certain that many of the highest qualities could not be tested by competitive examination, there were some benefits derived from it, such as the cultivating and testing of diligence, memory, and judgment. Referring to the admission of girls to the examinations, the Archbishop said that he thought the sooner the prejudice against learned ladies was dispelled the better. There was no reason why a learned lady should be less feminine than a totally ignorant lady; and, indeed, his experience would lead him to say that some of the most ignorant women he had been acquainted with were the least feminine.

The governors of the Harpur Trust at Bedford have unanimously resolved to raise the sum of £7000 for the purpose of building a high school, and £6000 for building a modern school for girls. The subject has been under consideration a long time, and a resolution to the same effect had before been submitted, but it did not meet with a favourable reception on account of the heavy cost—viz., more than £20,000 for the two schools. Definite plans have been decided on, and the building will be commenced forthwith.

"TOO LATE!"

The pathetic, indeed tragical, incident of a reprieve or pardon arriving too late to save the life of a condemned person, under the execution of martial law, in a time of civil war, is powerfully represented by the Artist in this scene, which tells its own story. It will remind readers of Waverley novels how nearly a similar fate was escaped by Henry Morton in Old Mortality;" and of more than one painful scene in narratives of Scottish or English historical catastrophes. The unhappy lady who has brought the unavailing missive of Royal clemency, delayed in her journey in that slow-travelling family coach either by the state of the roads or by some other accidental hindrance, alights here at the gate of the ancestral mansion only to learn the recent death of a husband, a father, or brother, perhaps a lover, while his body, pierced with the soldiers' bullets discharged an hour before, still lies unburied in the dreary courtyard. The officer in command of a military detachment posted at this house, which seems to have been the abode of a noted leader of rebellion, is naturally overcome with grieving yet manly sympathy. He cannot speak the dreadful news, but silently hands back to her the letter, not daring to look her in the face. The awful truth has scarcely begun to dawn upon her distracted mind; we almost expect to hear, next moment, a shriek of despair from this afflicted woman, and to see her arms tossed up in the attitude of sudden anguish, ere she falls prostrate on the ground. The elderly female behind her, just stepping out of the carriage, seems already to have perceived the true state of the case, and the old steward or butler, clasping his hands in sorrow, feels heartfelt compassion for the bereaved family, which he has long faithfully served.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I am reminded by a number of correspondents that All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day are two different festivals, and that the Second, not the First of November, as I erroneously put it, is the "Jour des Morts," or "Commemoration of the Faithful Departed." I should have known this by referring to the unfailing Chambers, who states that the observance of a "Day of the Dead" was introduced by Odilon, Abbot of Cluny, in the ninth century, but was not generally recognised until A.D. 1100. In all probability the "Day of the Dead" is many centuries older than Abbot Odilon, of Cluny, and was annually solemnised in the Columbaria of Pagan Rome. But I am somewhat in a hurry this week, and have no time to turn up my Montfaucon, or my Guhl and Kohner. I note, however, that the celebration of All Souls' Day was formerly deemed to be of such importance that on the event of its falling on a Sunday it was never postponed (as our late Lord Mayor's Show was) until the following Monday, but was kept on Saturday, in order that the souls of the departed might suffer no detriment from the want of the prayers of the Church. And are my readers aware that All Saints' Day was originally celebrated, not on the First of November, but on the First of May? All this deepens the mystery which shrouds the meaning of Hallowe'en.

Mem.: As a matter of fact, I was in the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise, in Paris, on the first of November, 1878, the day of the Toussaint, and found the great Campo Santo crowded with all sorts and conditions of people busily employed in decking the tombs of their kindred and relatives with floral tributes. Many garlands adorned the grave of Deputy Baudin, killed on a barricade during the émeutes consequent on the Coup d'Etat; and flowers had been profusely placed on the monument of the Four Sergeants of La Rochelle, guillotined for complicity in a Bonapartist conspiracy more than fifty years ago. Perhaps a proportion of the multitude whom I saw in Père-la-Chaise could not afford to lose two days' work (for All Saints' Day is a close holiday, not even the newspapers being published), and were doing on the Toussaint that which in strict propriety should be done on the "Jour des Morts."

The Ninth of November and the inevitable Lord Mayor's Show (postponed till the Monday) are past and gone, and the Right Hon. the Earl of Beaconsfield has spoken smooth things at Guildhall; and Tories and Liberals, lovers of peace and lovers of Jingoism, have been alike disappointed at reading a polished and optimist piece of rhetoric with no political pepper in it. We all expected to hear something about "the Turk reformed against his will" (and who, after reformation, will be of the same opinion still); and for my part I was bitterly vexed at not being able to learn anything about the influence of Lord Sandon's steam-plough and patent mangold-wurzel slicer in Asia Minor. But among the most desperately disappointed was a friend of mine who wrote me from South Lancashire, asking me to suggest the following to Mr. John Tenniel as the subject for a cartoon in Punch. Scene, the palace at Constantinople. Personages represented, the Sultan, Abdul Hamid, and our vivacious Premier, who is forcing a pair of fearfully tight boots (iron-clad boots, Hornby maker) on to the legs of the Padishah. "But they hurt me so," groans the Commander of the Faithful. "Never mind, my dear Abdul Hamid," says the vivacious Premier, "it's only till the Guildhall banquet is over. After that you shall have your old easy slippers again."

The incoming Lord Mayor, Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott, was mightily cheered as he sped in his gilded ark "up all manner of streets," as Leigh Hunt put it in the celebrated case of the runaway pig, on his way to Westminster. I am glad to hear it. The outgoing Lord Mayor, Alderman Sir Charles Whetham, was hissed and groaned at throughout the line of route. I am very sorry for it. Do you remember what the delightful Polly Eccles in Mr. Robertson's play of "Caste" says when remarks are made disparaging to her sire, Mr. Eccles? "Well," she retorts, "Papa's a very clever man." Sir Charles Whetham may have his little faults in the way of an occasional deficiency in tact and temper; but there is no denying that he possesses another quality besides cleverness. He is a very plucky man. He took his punishment not only stoically, but smilingly; and calmly waved a laced pocket-handkerchief in philosophical acknowledgment of the vells and the booting. I respectfully recommend Alderman Whetham to take to heart a famous passage in a Latin poet beginning "Populus me sibilat," magnificently translated by John Dryden.

Sir Coutts Lindsay's address on the "Relation of Fine Art to Social Science," which was delivered at the Manchester Congress last October, but which was very imperfectly reported in the London papers, has now been issued in pamphlet form, thoroughly revised by its accomplished author. Very wisely Sir Coutts recognises music as a most important branch of Fine Art. Few can disagree with him in his remarks on the poverty of our national school of music. "How Handel," he observes, "who was almost an Englishman, and who produced his finest works for us, should have left no pupils that might be called a school, is to me a source of astonishment; for while our race has originated but little music, it is among the most appreciative in Europe." Yes; we can "run" two grand Italian opera houses simultaneously, together with any number of theatres subsisting on the production of French Operas bouffes, but to open a house for the performance of original English opera means simply more or less deferred ruin. We starved Vincent Wallace, we allowed Henry Bishop, Edward Loder, and George Linley to languish in indigence; and as yet, in England at least, there is no national monument to Michael William Balfe.
